CHAPTER VIII.

REGISTRATION OF COMPANIES UNDER PART I. OF THE COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908.

Registration of companies.

The procedure is set forth at p. 447. supra.

The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

[5s. registration stamp.]

Statutory declaration on registration
of company.

DECLARATION OF COMPLIANCE with the REQUISITIONS of the COM-PANIES ACT, made pursuant to sect. 17 (2) of the Companies Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), on behalf of a Company proposed to be Registered as

THE ---, LIMITED.

Presented for filing by —

I, —, of —, solemnly and sincerely declare that I am [state qualification, as:—

a solicitor of the High Court engaged in the formation of the sd coy; or, a person named as a director of the sd coy in the arts of assen of the sd coy; or, a person named as the secretary of the sd coy in the arts of assen of the sd coy] and that all the requirements of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, in respect of matters precedent to the registration of the sd coy and incidental thereto have been complied with save only the payment of the fees and sums payable on registration.

The official form does not contain the words in brackets, and the registrar therefore objects to them; but without those words the declaration is not uncommonly untrue, for the declaration is generally made before payment of the fees, and yet the payment thereof is a condition precedent to registration.
The form ought therefore to be altered.

Form 227. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and by virtue of the provisions of the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835.

A declaration to the above effect must be produced to the Registrar of Companies on presenting the memorandum and articles for registration, and may be accepted by him as sufficient evidence of compliance with the Act. See Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, sect. 17, sub-sect. 2 of which is as follows:

(2) A statutory declaration by a solicitor of the High Court, and in Scotland by an enrolled law agent, engaged in the formation of the company or by a person named in the articles as a director or secretary of the company of compliance with all or any of the said requirements shall be produced to the registrar, and the registrar may accept such a declaration as sufficient evidence of compliance.

The declaration must be made before a justice of the peace, notary public, or commissioner to administer oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature.

Under the sub-section the registrar may accept the declaration as sufficient evidence of such compliance. He, therefore, has a discretion, and accordingly if, notwithstanding the declaration, he entertains any doubt or suspicion as to whether the requisitions have really been complied with, he can call for further evidence; but, practically, the only question is whether the document has been subscribed by seven persons, for almost all the other requisitions which have to be complied with are as to the form of the documents and the payment of fees.

It is sometimes thought advisable to name some one in the articles of association as the secretary of the company, so that the declaration may be made by him. Any question as to the effect of a solicitor admitting that he has been engaged in the formation of the company, or of one director being put forward too prominently, will thus be avoided.

88.—(1) Whenever a company limited by shares makes any allotment of its shares, the company shall within one month thereafter file with the registrar of companies—

(a) a return of the allotments, stating the number and nominal amount of the shares comprised in the allotment, the names, addresses, and descriptions of the allottees, and the amount (if any) paid or due and payable on each share; and

b) in the case of shares allotted as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, a contract in writing constituting the title of the allottee to the allotment together with any contract of sale, or for services or other consideration in respect of which that allotment was made, such contracts being duly stamped, and a return stating the number and nominal amount of shares so allotted, the extent to which they are to be treated as paid up, and the consideration for which they have been allotted.

(2) Where such a contract as above mentioned is not reduced to writing, the company shall within one month after the allotment file with the registrar of companies the prescribed particulars of the contract stamped with the same stamp duty as would have been payable if the contract had been reduced to writing, and those particulars shall be deemed to be an instrument within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, and the registrar may, as a condition of filing the particulars, require that the duty payable thereon be a stipulated under section twelve of that Act.

(3) If default is made in complying with the requirements of this section, every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company, who is knowingly a party to the default, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds for every day during which the default continues:

Provided that, in case of default in filing with the registrar of companies within one month after the allotment any document required to be filed by this section, the company, or any person liable for the default, may apply to the court for relief, and the court, if satisfied that the omission to file the document was accidental or due to inadvertence or that it is just and equitable to grant relief, may make an order extending the time for the filing of the document for such period as the court may think proper.

Paragraph (b) is in substitution for sect. 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, repealed by sect. 33 of the Companies Act, 1900. It is peculiarly framed, for in the case specified it requires the filing—

- (1) of a contract in writing constituting the title of the allottee to such allotment, and
- (2) of any contract of sale or for services, or for other consideration in respect of which such allotment was made, and
- (3) of a return stating the number and nominal amount of shares so allotted, the extent to which they are to be treated as paid up, and the consideration for which they have been allotted.

See further as to the construction of the section and its policy, supra, p. 61.

Penalty.

The penalty is very onerous, namely, 50*l.* per d*y*; but it is only to be enforced against a director, manager, secretary or other officer who is knowingly a party to the default. "Knowingly" means "knowing the facts," and a man commits the offence if he knows of the allotment or knows of the contract and does not procure compliance with the section. It is apprehended that the mere fact that he erroneously believed that he had complied with the section would not afford a defence. Twyross v. Grant, 2 C. P. D. 469.

Registration of Mortgages and Charges under Sect. 93 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1906.

Registration of mortgages and charges Notes on the

See the section in the Appendix: and Co. Prac., 1st Ed. III., pp. 165—181

With reference to this section, which takes the place of sect. 14 of the Act of 1900, as amended by sect. 29 of the Act of 1907, the following points may be noted.

1. The section does not touch a mortgage or charge created before 1st April, 1909. Watson & Co. v. Spiral Hobbs Limited, (1902) 2 Ch. 206.

2. It only applies to certain classes of mortgages or charges—those specified in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) of sub-sect. (1) (p. 618). A simple mortgage or charge not for the purpose of securing an issue of debentures or debenture stock—on a concession, patent, or copyright, or deposit of dock warrants, bills of exchange, or other mercantile documents, is not within the section.

But a mortgage pursuant to a provision in a trust deed securing debenture stock requires registration (Cornbrook v. Land Debenture Corporation, (1904) 1 Ch. 103), unless the registration has been effected under par. (3) of sub-sect. (1). See p. 617, infra.

As to what is a bill of sale, see sect. 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878: a pledge of goods accompanied by delivery of possession to the pledgee is not a bill of sale (Ex parte Hubbard (1866), 17 Q. B. D. 639), nor is an oral agreement giving security followed by possession (Chapinworth v. Mills, (1892) A. C. 231; Remsey v. Margrett, (1896) 2 Q. B. 16); nor prima facie an inventory of goods with receipt attached (Remsey v. Sharrett, supra); nor sale and hiring agreements (North Central Wagon Co. v. Haverharts Road Co., 13 App. Cas. 544).

A re-insurance contract involving book debts does not require registration if it creates no charge on the book debts. Law Car and General Insur., 55 Sol. J. 407.

As to paragraph (f). A floating charge is a charge on property of a company present and future, so framed as to leave the company at liberty to deal with the property charged in the ordinary course of its business until the charge finally attaches by reason of a winding-up or the appointment of a receiver. See Panama, &c. Co., 5 Ch. 318; Government Stock Co. v. Manila Railway (1897) A. C. 86. Such a charge takes effect as an immediate and continuing charge (Florence & Co., 10 C. D. 541), and, prima facie, leaves the company at liberty to create specific mortgages ranking in priority to a floating charge (Wheatley v. Silkstone Co., 29 C. D. 715); but the floating charge is valid against general creditors (South American Co., 2 C. D. 337), though an execution creditor may obtain priority (Evans v. Rival Granite Quarries, (1910) 2 K. B. 979). Nevertheless, the provisions contained in sects. 107 and 212 must be borne in mind. As to a floating charge created within three months of winding-up, see Orleans Motor Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 41. And as to what is payment "at the time of or subsequently to the creation" of the debenture in such a case see Columbian Fire-proofing Co., (1910) 2 Ch. 120. Commonly a floating charge comprises the whole of the company's property, and a charge on the "undertaking" includes all the property, and operates as a floating charge. But a floating charge on part of the company's assets or property is within the section. Illingsworth v. Houldsworth, (1904) A. C. 355.

3. It is the security which is avoided. Under sub-sect. (1) the company has to repay the money lent at once.

4. Sub-sect. (1) of sect. 14 of the Act of 1900 used the expression "filed with the registrar for registration." As to this expression, the registrar was advised and acted on the footing that this meant temporarily filed. The new Act provides for filing particulars.

5. Sub-sect. (3) provides for a different mode of registration, viz., by registering certain specified particulars. Harrogate Estates, Limited, (1903) 1 Ch. 498. And this mode is now commonly adopted in the case of a series of debentures and debenture stock. Cunard Steamship Co. v. Hopwood, (1908) 2 Ch. 564.

6. The word "charge" includes an equitable charge.

A mortgage or charge is "created" when the deed is executed or the agreement made, though the advance takes place subsequently. Watson & Co. v. Spiral Globe Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 299; Re Harrogate Estates, Limited, (1903) 1 Ch. 498; Appleyard v. New London and Suburban Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 621.

As to what is a "floating charge," see Form 599, and Co. Prec., Pt. III.

7. "Book debts" are debts entered or commonly entered in books. See Shirley v. Marshall, 14 C. B. N. S. 566; Tailby v. Official Receiver, 10 App. Cas. 523; Dawson v. Isle, (1906) 1 Ch. 633. No registration is necessary unless there is a charge on the debts. Law Car and General Insurance Corp., (1911) W. N. 101.

8. A mortgage made after the Act of substituted property comprised in a trust deed executed before the Act requires registration (Cornbrook v. Land Debenture Corporation, (1904) 1 Ch. 106), unless the company is not a party (Practical United Breweries v. Abbott, (1908) 1 Ch. 279). Or unless the trust deed has been registered under par. 3 of sub-sect. (1) of sect. 93 of the Act (Cunard Steamship Co. v. Hopwood, (1908) 2 Ch. 564).

9. Although the security is under the section avoided by non-registration the obligation of the company to repay the money lent remains as an unsecured liability, and matures at once. See sect. 95 (1).

10. Sect. 96 empowers the Court, on being satisfied that the omission to register a mortgage or charge within the required time, or that the omission or misstatement of any particular with respect to such mortgage or charge "was accidental or due to inadvertence (see Jackson & Co., (1899) 1 Ch. 348) or to some other sufficient cause, or is not of a nature to prejudice the position of creditors or shareholders of the company, or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief to," to extend the time for registration on such terms and conditions as seem to the judge just and expedient. In exercising this discretionary power of relief the practice is to insert in the order the following words:—"This order to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when such debentures shall be actually registered." Re Juptin Brewery Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 79; Re Spiral Globe Co., (1903) 1 Ch. 396; Re Abrahams & Sons, (1902) 1 Ch. 605; Cardiff Workmen's Cottage, (1907) 2 Ch. 627; Ehrmann Brothers, (1906) 2 Ch. 697. In this last case the Court of Appeal explained that this proviso is only designed to protect rights acquired by execution, charge or otherwise, against the property of the company in the interval between the expiration of the twenty-one days for registering and the extended time allowed by the order. It does not protect the existing unsecured creditors who have not obtained any security or charge upon the property subject to the debentures, and see J. O. Johnson & Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 101, C. A.

Where an order extending the time is made, and these words appear in it but before actual registration a winding-up commences, the mortgage or charge, if subsequently registered, is not effective against the general body of creditors. Anglo-Oriental Carpet Co., (1903) 1 Ch. 914.

An order for extension will not be made after a winding-up has commenced. Re Abrahams & Sons, (1902) 1 Ch. 695.

If an order for extension is not conveniently obtainable, the company may, in lieu thereof, call in and cancel the debentures, and issue new debentures to be registered in due course, but at the cost, of course, of new stamp duty. Bowen v. Detrien & Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 37; Renshaw & Co., W. N. (1908) 210.

Sect. 97 provides for entering satisfaction, and sect. 98 for an index to the register, and sect. 99 for penalties for default in complying with the Act as to registration.

The Court has power to extend the time, even when the default was made before January 1st, 1909. Sect. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889. Herts and Essex Waterworks Co., W. N. (1909) 48.

The registrar's certificate of registration is conclusive. Sect. 93 (5); Tolland, Husson & Birkett, (1908) 1 Ch. 152; Cunard Steamship Co., (1908) 2 Ch. 564.

Lawton*, supra. The return should be made even where no meeting is held. (See the above cases.) The return should be signed by the manager or secretary of the company. Sect. 26 (4). If the company is a "private company," as defined by sect. 121 of the Act, the return need not contain the statement in the form of a balance sheet required by sub-sect. (3), and a company does not cease to be a private company simply because it is proved that the company has disregarded some of the provisions of its articles, referred to in sect. 121 of the Act. Park v. Royalties Syndicate, (1912) 1 K. B. 320. Neglect to comply with sect. 26 is a criminal offence (Reg. v. Tyler, (1891) 2 Q. B. 599) involving a penalty of 5*l.* a day so long as the default continues (sub-sect. (5)). Proceedings to enforce the penalty are taken before a magistrate under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, and 47 & 48 Vict. c. 43). The magistrate may enquire into the sufficiency or accuracy of the return. Briton Medical Co., 37 W. R. 32. The complaint must be brought within six months. Edmonds v. Foster, supra. As to the above form, see sect. 254 of the Act of 1908. The declaration should be made by two of the directors or other principal officers of the company.

Under the Act, any company registered before or after the passing of the Act as an unlimited company may register under the Act as a limited company. The chief object of this enactment was to enable banking companies already registered as unlimited to re-register as limited companies, and most of these companies have already availed themselves of this useful power.

On the registration of a company which has already been registered, the Registrar is to close the former registration, and may [and usually does] dispense with the delivery of copies of any documents with copies of which he was furnished on the original registration; but, save as aforesaid, the registration is to take place in the same manner and have the same effect as if it were the first registration of the company. Sect. 259. Accordingly, the above forms can, with slight modifications, be adopted.

A simple resolution for registration under Part VII. will follow the terms of Form 247, supra, p. 624.

But usually the powers conferred by sect. 58 of the Act of 1908 are exercised. See infra.

That this coy, now registered as an unlimtd coy, be registered under the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, as a coy limtd by shares: And that for the purposes of such registration the nominal amount of the capital be increased from 2,000,000*l.* to 3,000,000*l.*, by increasing the nominal amount of each share from 50*l.* to 75*l.*: And that no part of such increased capital shall be capable of being called up except in the event of and for the purposes of the coy being wound up, and that the name of the coy be changed to The — Coy, Limtd.

For resolution where capital is not increased, see supra, Form 247.

It is conceived that sect. 252 of the Act (replacing sect. 188 of the Companies Act, 1862), applies where a banking company re-registers under sect. 58 of the Act of 1908, or did so under the Act of 1879.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.

CHAPTER IX.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

Summary of Statutory Provisions.

SECTS. 10, 11, 12, and 15 of the Act of 1908 provide as follows:—

association.

10.—(1) There may in the case of a company limited by shares and there shall in the case of a company limited by guarantee or unlimited be registered with the memorandum, articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum and prescribing regulations for the company.

(2) Articles of association may adopt all or any of the regulations contained in Table A. in the first schedule to this Act.

(3) In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, the articles, if the company has a share capital, must state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered.

(4) In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, if the company has not a share capital, the articles must state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered, for the purpose of enabling the registrar to determine the fees payable on registration.

11. In the case of a company limited by shares and registered after the commencement of this Act, if articles are not registered, or, if articles are registered, in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations in Table A. in the first schedule to this Act, those regulations shall, so far as applicable, be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were contained in duly registered articles.

Application of Table A.

12. Articles must—

- (a) be printed;
- (b) be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively;
- (c) bear the same stamp as if they were contained in a deed; and
- (d) be signed by each subscriber of the memorandum of association in the presence of at least one witness who must attest the signature, and that attestation shall be sufficient in Scotland as well as in England and Ireland.

Form, stamp, and signature of articles.

15. The memorandum and the articles (if any) shall be delivered to the registrar of companies for that part of the United Kingdom in which the registered office of the company is stated by the memorandum to be situate, and he shall retain and register them.

Registration of memorandum and articles.

The great majority of companies formed under the Act are registered as companies limited by shares. In the case of such companies.

as appears from sects. 10 and 11, above mentioned, articles of association may be registered with the memorandum: if not so registered then Table A. will apply.

In some cases
registered.

In a considerable number of cases no articles are registered, and Table A. accordingly applies en bloc. Grave inconvenience has often resulted from the adoption of this course, as several of the provisions of Table A. are inconsistent with particular sections of the Act, and therefore unreliable and misleading.

It is impossible, too, that Table A., from its very generality, should properly meet the special requirements of each company. More often Table A. is not adopted in its entirety, but promoters exercise the power contained in sect. 10 (2) by registering articles which adopt Table A., with some modifications. See infra, Form 252, for an example.

This course, too, is attended with inconvenience, because instead of a complete and consistent set of regulations, it involves piecing together clauses from Table A., with variations and additions from the new clauses engrafted upon it, and constant cross-reference and comparison. The object in both cases is to save expense; but experience goes to show that the trifling additional expense incurred in preparing and registering a full set of articles is amply compensated by the possession of a complete code of regulations.

Whichever mode is adopted, the regulations (unlike the company's memorandum of association) can always be altered or added to from time to time, and so inherent a characteristic is this alterability of articles, that a company cannot by any stipulation divest itself of the power of alteration or exempt any clause from alteration. Walker v. London Tramways Co., 12 Ch. D. 705; Malleon v. National Insurance Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 200. And this principle applies not only as between the company and its shareholders, but as between the companies and an outsider. Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656; Punt v. Symons & Co., (1903) 2 Ch. 306. Thus sect. 13 provides that:—

13.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act and to the conditions contained in its memorandum, a company may by special resolution alter or add to its articles; and any alteration or addition so made shall be as valid as if originally contained in the articles, and be subject in like manner to alteration by special resolution.

(2) The power of altering articles under this section shall, in the case of an unlimited company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, extend to altering any regulations relating to the amount of capital or its distribution into shares, notwithstanding that those regulations are contained in the memorandum.

The term "articles" used in the above sections is defined by sect. 285 of the Act as follows:—"Articles" means the articles of association of a company as originally framed or as altered by special resolution, including, so far as they apply to the company, the regulations contained (as the case may be) in Table B. in the Schedule annexed to the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, or in Table A. in the First Schedule annexed to the Companies Act, 1862, or in that Table as altered in pursuance of section seventy-one of that Act, or in Table A. in the First Schedule to this Act."

By means of this definition the Act gets rid of what has been for many years past a troublesome ambiguity—the use sometimes of "articles," sometimes of "regulations," and of the clumsy circumlocution so often appearing in the text of the former Acts, e.g., in sect. 12 of the Act of 1862, "if authorized so to do by its regulations as originally framed or as altered by special resolution," and substitutes the simple expression "if authorized by its articles." See, e.g., sect. 41 (1908).

The articles of a company are subordinate to and controlled by the memorandum of association. The memorandum contains the conditions which alone the company is granted incorporation—conditions which are fundamental. The articles are the internal regulations of the company, and over these the members have full control, and may alter them from time to time as they think fit by putting the course pointed out in sects. 13 and 69 of the Act; subject only to this, that they keep within the limits marked out by the conditions of the memorandum of association and the general law, and that they cannot, by altering the articles, justify the breach of an independent contract unless it was made subject to alteration. Baily v. British Equitable Assurance Co. (1906) A. C. 35.

Interpretation.

The memorandum the dominant instrument.

"The memorandum is, as it were, the area beyond which the action of the company cannot go; inside that area the shareholders may make such regulations for their own government as they think fit." Per Lord Cairns, L. C., Ashbury Rail. Co. v. Riche, L. R. 7 H. L. 653, 671.

Hence, any articles that go beyond the company's limited sphere of activity or what the law allows will be inoperative, and anything done under the authority of such articles void and incapable of ratification.

If, for instance, the articles purport to confer on the company a power to buy its own shares (Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409), or to pay dividends out of capital (Guinness v. Land Corporation of Ireland, 22 C. D. 349), or to extend the objects by special resolution (Ashbury v. Riche, supra), or to issue shares at a discount (Welton v. Saffery, (1897) A. C. 299), or to apply the profits in a manner which is inconsistent with some provision in the memorandum of association (Ashbury v. Watson, 30 C. D. 376), or deprive a member of the right to present a winding-up petition (Peveril Gold Mines, (1898) 1 Ch. 122), or to exclude dissenting shareholders from their rights under sect. 161 of the Companies Act, 1862 (now sect. 192 of the Act of 1908) (Baring-Gould v. Sharpington, &c. Syndicate, (1899) 2 Ch. 80; Payne v. Cork Co. (1900) 1 Ch. 308), they are to that extent invalid and ineffectual.

Ultra vires provision.

But though the articles cannot alter or control the memorandum, yet, if there is an ambiguity in the memorandum, it has been said that the articles registered at the same time may be used to explain it Southern Brazilian Rio Grande do Sul Railway, (1905) 2 Ch. 78. See, however, as to this, supra, p. 592.

Sect. 14 of the Act is as follows:-

14.—(1) The memorandum and articles shall, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by each member, and contained covenants on the part of each member, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to observe all the provisions of the memorandum and of the articles, subject to the provisions of this Act.

(2) All money payable by any member to the company under the memorandum or articles shall be a debt due from him to the company, and in England and Ireland be of the nature of a specialty debt.

Thus, whatever the articles may be (so far as they are not ultra vires), they are binding in the manner, and to the extent, mentioned in sect. 14, which, it is to be noted, does not make them absolutely binding on the company and the members thereof, but binding as if each member had covenanted to conform to such regulations.

Members' implied covenant with
company.

The section (sect. 14) does not say with whom the implied covenant by the members is to be taken to be made, but it is sufficiently obvious that it is with the company, and, therefore, that the members are all bound to the company. See Bradford Bank v. Briggs, 12 App. Cas. 29. In that case the articles gave the company a lien on the shares of a member, and it was held that Briggs, a member of the company and the plaintiff in the action, was to be treated as having covenanted with the company to give it such lien. Lord Blackburn said (p. 33): "His property in the shares was, by virtue of sect. 16 of the Act [of 1862, now replaced by sect. 14 of the Act of 1908], bound to the company as much as if he had executed a covenant to the company in the same terms as Article 103." So, again, in Welton v. Saffery, (1897) A. C. 315, Lord Herschell said: "It is quite true that the articles constitute a contract between each member and the company." And in Imperial Hydropathic, &c. Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. D. 1, Bowen, L. J., said: "We are discussing the rights of directors of a statutory corporation created by the Act of 1862, and in such a case we must consider what are the rights of the directors and shareholders, for the articles of association, by sect. 16, are to bind all the company and all the shareholders as surely as if they had put their seals to them." That this is the true construction follows from the many decisions in which it has been held that the company is entitled to sue for the enforcement, and to restrain the breach of its regulations, and to insist on the irregularity of that which is done in contravention thereof. Macdougall v. Gardiner, 1 C. D. 13.

Pender v. Lushington, 6 C. D. 70; Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. D. 1; Harben v. Phillips, ibid. 15.

In Eley v. Positive, &c. Co., 1 Ex. Div. 88, where the articles provided that the plaintiff should be a solicitor to the company, Lord Cairns said: "They (the articles) are an agreement inter socios, and in that view, when the introductory words are applied to Article 118, it becomes a covenant between the parties that they will employ the plaintiff." See also Browne v. La Trinidad, 37 C. D. 1. So in Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. D. 1, Cotton, L. J., said that the articles "under the Act are a contract between the shareholders to comply with the regulations in them." And Stirling, J., in Wood v. Odessa Waterworks Co., 42 C. D. 636, said: "The articles of association constitute a contract not merely between the shareholders and the company, but between each individual shareholder and every other." See also Pulbrook v. Richmond, &c. Co., 9 C. D. 610; Bainbridge v. Smith, 41 C. D. 475, in which it was held that a director being a member was entitled to an injunction against his co-directors restraining them from improperly excluding him from board meetings. Nevertheless there is some reason to doubt whether these judicial dicta quite define the effect of the articles, and Lord Herschell in Wellton v. Saffery, (1897) A. C., at p. 315, said: "It is quite true that the articles constitute a contract between each member and the company, and that there is no contract in terms between the individual members of the company; but the articles do none the less, in my opinion, regulate their rights inter se." And this accords with the well-established principle that it is for the company, save in exceptional cases, to sue for a breach of the regulations. Macdougall v. Gardiner, 1 C. D. 13; Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461; Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83.

To analyse the matter a little more closely: first, in relation to an outsider, do the regulations bind the company? The answer clearly is, No. A provision in the articles in favour of an outsider, e.g., of a promoter, that the preliminary expenses shall be paid by the company, gives to the promoter no right of action against the company. Rotherham Chemical Co., 25 C. D. 103; Melhado v. Porto Alegre Co., L. R. 9 C. P. 503. In this respect the articles of a company differ from an Act of Parliament. Such a provision in an Act of Parliament imposes on the company a statutory duty towards the promoter, and confers on the promoter a corresponding right of action. Tilson v. Warwick Gas Co., 4 B. & C. 962. In the case of a company formed under the Act of 1862, or under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, it operates as a direction to the directors to pay such preliminary expenses, but nothing more.

Secondly, in relation to members. Here the answer is, Yes. The articles do bind the company. The section says so: "the . . . articles shall bind the company and the members thereof as if," &c., and those words must have effect given to them. It may possibly be urged that they are qualified, and that the company is only bound "as if the members had covenanted," not as if the members and the company had covenanted, and therefore that the company is not bound. But such a construction stultifies the section, and, in effect, strikes out of it the words, "that the articles shall bind the company," and in corroboration of this view there are numerous decisions showing that the company is bound. Thus, in Johnson v. Lytle's Iron Agency (1877), 5 C. D. 687, an irregular forfeiture of shares was impeached by a member, and set aside by the Court of Appeal on the ground, as James, L. J., said, that the notice prior to forfeiture "did not comply strictly with the provisions of the contract between the company and the shareholders which is contained in the regulations." So in Crum v. Oakbank Co., 8 A. C. 65, it was held that the plaintiff, a member, was entitled, as against the company, to insist on the observance of the regulations so long as they stood unaltered. Again, in Wood v. Odessa Waterworks Co., 42 C. D. 636, Stirling, J., granted an injunction to restrain the defendant company from contravening the articles; and in Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. D. 1, it was held that the company was bound by the regulations as they stood, and could not validly act in contravention thereof.

Furthermore, in Brett v. Standard Exploration Co. (1906), 16 T. L. R. 112 Cozens-Hardy, J., held that a member was entitled to enforce compliance by the company with a clause in the articles giving him a right to a share certificate. These decisions, however, all deal with cases in which members claimed and sought to enforce or protect rights given them as members of the company. Where rights are by the articles given to members not as such, but in some other capacity (e.g., as directors, policy-holders, or otherwise), a member claiming to enforce the same cannot, it seems, sue on the articles—treating them as a contract by the company with him—he must make out a contract outside the articles.

Cases where
company not bound by articles.

Thus, in Eley v. Positive &c. Co., 1 Ex. D. 88, the articles contained a clause providing that A. should be employed for life as solicitor for the company, and should not be removed except for misconduct; he took office and was so employed for some time, and, whilst so employed, he became a shareholder; later on the company discontinued his employment; he, still being a shareholder, sued for breach of contract, and it was held that no action lay. The matter was disposed of rather summarily in the Court of Appeal. Lord Cairns, L. C., delivered the judgment of the Court, and refused the plaintiff relief principally upon the ground that the articles "are an agreement inter socios, and, in that view, if the introductory words are applied to Article 118, it becomes a covenant between the parties to it that they will employ the plaintiff. Now, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, this is res inter alios acta; the plaintiff (i.e., quâ solicitor) is no party to it [although he was a member'. This article is either a stipulation which is binding on the members, or else a mandate to the directors; in either case it is a matter between the directors and shareholders, and not between them and the plaintiff."

This case was followed in Brown v. La Trinidad, 37 C. D. 1, where the articles contained a provision that a contract with the plaintiff, made before incorporation, should be adopted by the company; and that it was thereby confirmed, and that the provisions thereof, so far as applicable to the company, should be construed as part of the regulations. Yet it was held that the plaintiff, though a member of the company, had no cause of action against the company on this clause. Lindley, L. J., said: "That, having regard to the construction put upon sect. 16 in Eley v. Positive, &c. and subsequent cases none to be found, it must be taken as settled that the contract upon which he (the plaintiff) relies, is not a contract upon which he can maintain any action, either on the common law side or the equity side"; adding, "there might have been some difficulty in arriving at that conclusion if it had not been for the authorities, because it happens that this gentleman has had shares allotted to him and is therefore a member."

It is not easy to reconcile the rule laid down in these decisions with sect. 14 of the Act, which expressly provides that the articles "shall bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by such members, and contained covenants on the part of each member . . . to observe the provisions of the articles subject to the provisions of the Act"; but apparently they must be taken to have settled the law in this respect. The theory on which they are based seems to be that the implied covenant is not a covenant by the company but by the members inter se, and that the company is only bound in the sense that the regulations as such are binding, although sect. 14 alone purports to make them binding. Supra, p. 73. Finding a difficulty in applying consistently with justice the rule above referred to, the Courts have in some cases acted on the footing that a clause in the articles, not dealing with the rights of a member as such, but apparently intended to operate as a contract with him, is to be regarded as the basis of a contract, i.e., as indicating the terms on which the company proposes to contract with him, and that if the parties enter into the relations contemplated by the clause, they are to be treated as having made a contract in the terms of the clause and are bound accordingly. This is illustrated by Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Co. (1889), 1 Meg. 385. In that case the articles provided for the payment to each director by way of remuneration of a specified sum per annum. By a special resolution, in July, the company reduced this as from the end of the preceding year. The plaintiff thereupon resigned, and sued the company for three months' remuneration for services prior to the date of his resignation; and the Court held that he was entitled to recover on the footing of an implied contract in the terms of the clause. "The articles," said Lord Esher, "do not themselves form the contract, but from them you get the terms upon which the director is serving." And this proposition was adopted by Stirling, J., in Re International Cable Co., 66 L. T. 254; and by Wright, J., in Ex parte Beckwith, (1898) 1 Ch. 324. Moreover, the principle involved is not confined to members, it extends also to outsiders, e.g., to persons who take office as directors. Isaac's case, (1902) 2 Ch. 158; Salisbury Jones' case, (1904) 3 Ch. 356. And see Pritchard's case, 8 Ch. 956. The question whether an implied contract so entered into is capable of being varied by the company against the will of the other party has not been finally decided. According to Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Co., supra, it would seem that the contract, at any rate where it relates to service, can be varied by the company by altering its articles as to the future, and this accords with the views expressed in Doman's case, 3 C. D. 21; Hott's case, 1 C. D. 307; and in Argus Life Assurance Co., 39 C. D. 371.

The decision of the Court of Appeal in Baily v. British Equitable, (1904) 1 Ch. 374, pointed to a different conclusion. That case was commented on in the last edition of this work, and was subsequently reversed by the House of Lords. Baily v. British Equitable Co., (1906) A. C. 35. See supra, p. 631, and infra, p. 640.

Alteration.

Sect. 13 of the Act gives to a company under the Act power by special resolution, but "subject to the provisions of this Act and to the conditions contained in its memorandum," to alter or add to its articles, and it expressly provides that "any alteration or addition so made shall be as valid as if originally contained in the articles, and be subject in like manner to alteration by special resolution." Nothing could be wider than the terms of this section. It does not say that the articles for the management or administration of the business may be altered, or that the articles other than those which are to be regarded as constitutional, may be altered; there is no limitation, except that the power is to be subject to the provisions of the Act and the conditions contained in the memorandum. All or any of the articles may therefore be altered, and this statutory incident of articles is inalienable. And as appears above, a company cannot by a clause in its articles exempt any article from liability to alteration under the section. Walker v. London Tramways Co., 12 C. D. 705; Malleson v. National Insurance Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 200.

And this principle applies not only as between the company itself and its shareholders (Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656), but as between the company and an outsider. A company cannot contract not to alter its articles. Punt v. Symons, (1903) 2 Ch. 506.

At an earlier period, however, in the history of the Act of 1862 a construction was placed by that very eminent judge, Kindersley,

V.-C., on the corresponding section in the Companies Act, 1856, which had for many years had the effect of fettering to a large extent the freedom of companies under the Act of 1862. The case was Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff, &c. Co., 2 Dr. & Sm. 521 (No. 2). This company was desirous of issuing some of the shares in the original capital as preference shares, but there being no power in its memorandum or articles to do so, the Court held (4 De G. J. & S. 672) that it could not be done, and Lord Westbury, L. C., expressed a doubt whether it could be done by altering the articles. It was then proposed to alter the articles of association so as to enable new shares to be created and issued with a preference attached to them; but Kindersley, V.-C., held that this again could not be done, as it amounted to an alteration of the constitution of the company, and was, therefore, ultra vires and invalid. The learned judge said:

Does the power to modify the articles of association enable the directors of a joint stock company in general language to do anything without limit as they may think fit? By the very form of the power clearly there must be a limit, because, if not, it would enable the directors and a majority of the shareholders to alter not merely such regulations as related to the management and administration of the company, but to alter in toto the whole constitution and frame of the company. It is quite clear that was never intended. . . . The question really is this, adopting the plain principle which I think ought to be adopted. Is, or is not, that which is proposed to be done an alteration of the constitution of the company? It appears to me clearly it is. No doubt, as the defendant contended, a party must be bound according to the fair legitimate interpretation of the construction of the contract."

What the learned judge in effect therefore decided was that the different articles were to be discriminated, and that there must be exempted from alterability such portions of them as in the opinion of the Court were constitutional, and that it was only such articles as related to the management and administration of the company which could be altered. Obviously this was a complete departure from the words of the section; nevertheless there was no appeal, and the decision, though it did not escape criticism (see Harrison v. Mexican Rail. Co., 19 Eq. 358), was recognized as more or less authoritative for many years.

But in British, &c. Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399, Lord Macnaghten had occasion in the House of Lords to refer to Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Co., supra, and said in reference thereto: "It seems to me that the decision was not founded upon a sound view of the Companies Act, 1862, and I respectfully dissent from it."

The way was thus prepared for the final demolition of the doctrine by the Court of Appeal in Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. (C. A.) 361. In that case the original articles contained no power to issue preference shares, but the company, by special resolution, had altered its articles so as to take power, and had issued preference shares accordingly. The Court overruled Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. (No. 2), ubi supra, and held the shares validly created. The principle on which the case was decided was that although by sect. 8 of the Act a company's memorandum is to state the amount of the original capital and the number of shares into which it is to be divided, yet that this does not extend to the rights of the shareholders in respect of their shares, and the terms on which additional capital may be raised. These are matters which may be regulated by the articles of association—indeed, are more properly so regulated than by the memorandum, and are therefore matters which, unless dealt with in the memorandum, as in Ashbury v. Watson (30 C. D. 376), may be determined by the company from time to time by special resolution pursuant to sect. 50 of the Act (now sect. 13 of the Act of 1908). "We are of opinion," said Lindley, L. J., delivering the judgment of the Court, "that the second decision in Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., [supra] was wrong and ought not to be followed, and that the decision appealed from must be reversed, and the resolution thereby declared to be ultra vires must be declared intra vires and valid. If, by declining to follow the second decision in the case referred to, we were disturbing titles or embarrassing trade or commerce, we should treat it as one of those decisions which, though wrong, it would be mischievous to overrule. But such is not the case, and it is desirable from all points of view to remove from companies a fetter which ought never to have been imposed upon them."

This decision has been very welcome, not merely because it removes a fetter on the issue of preference shares, but also because it disposes of the notion that the power to alter the articles given by sect. 13, replacing sect. 50 of the Act of 1862, is not to have full effect.

In a subsequent case it was argued that the power to alter the regulations conferred by sect. 50 of the Act of 1862 did not justify a retrospective alteration, e.g., the insertion of a lien clause (infra, p. 662) intended to give the company a lien on the shares of members for debts incurred before as well as after the insertion of the clause. The argument if successful would have created the utmost confusion, and would to a great extent have deprived the members of that absolute control over the articles with which the section was intended to invest them. But it did not prevail, the Court of Appeal holding that the power of altering the regulations was not thus to be limited, and that the introduction of a lien clause was valid and effective, though in some cases it operated retrospectively.

"The power," said Lindley, M. R., in that case, "thus conferred on corporations to alter the regulations is limited only by the provisions contained in the statute and the conditions contained in the company's memorandum of association. It must be exercised for the benefit of the company as a whole, and it must not be exceeded. These conditions are always implied and are seldom if ever expressed. But if they are complied with, I can discover no ground for judicially putting any other restrictions on the power conferred by the section than those contained in it." Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656.

The foregoing decisions are in accordance with the principles of construction applied by Chitty, J., in Pepe v. City and Suburban Permanent Building Society, (1893) 2 Ch. 311. In that case, the plaintiff, a holder of fully paid-up shares, had, under the rules, given notice of withdrawal; afterwards and before repayment the society altered the rules by giving the directors power to pay off in priority members holding less than 50% in the society. It was held that the alteration was valid, though in some senses it took away the vested right of the plaintiff.

"It was," said Chitty, J., in that case, "part of the plaintiff's contract with the society that the rules might be altered, and the power of altering them was wisely framed so as to require not a bare majority but three-fourths of the members to bring about the alteration. . . . The plaintiff's counsel says rightly that when the plaintiff gave notice of withdrawal he had a vested right to be paid according to the then existing rule, but this does not settle the question, because there existed also against him the power of altering the rule, so that the question assumes this form, that he had a vested right liable to be divested by any later rule they passed. It may be wondered that the society should have such a power, but it may be greatly to the benefit of all concerned to make alterations. And I say also that members place reliance on the sense of justice of the three-fourths majority required to effect the alteration."

See also British Equitable Assurance Co. v. Baily, (1906) A. C. 35; Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society, 22 Q. B. 373; Barrow Haematite Co., 29 C. D. 582; Doman's case, 3 C. D. 21; Argus Co., 39 C. D. 571. In the case last mentioned it was considered that a power in the deed of settlement of a company (not under the Act of 1862) to alter such deed of settlement was to have full effect, and included even power to insert, by alteration, a clause providing for the sale of the whole undertaking. James Colmer, Ltd., (1897) 1 Ch. 524, shows the far-reaching operation of the decision in Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., supra. In Continental Union Gas Co. (1893), 7 T. L. R. 496 it had been held in effect that voting rights were constitutional and could not be altered; but in James Colmer, Ltd., Romer, J., held that, Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., ubi supra, having been overruled, there was no objection to an alteration of voting rights.

Nevertheless, it is apprehended that some limit must be placed on the general words contained in sect. 13, and the limit would seem to be this—that the section cannot be used to violate any statutory provision or principle of law; e.g., to take away a shareholder's right to present a winding-up petition. Peveril Gold Mines, (1898) 1 Ch. 192. So, too, a majority will not be permitted by the Court, under colour of the section, to commit a fraud, for instance, on the minority (Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Co., L. R. 9 Ch. 350), or to use extra voting power, not created bonâ fide. And see Gray v. Lewis, L. R. 8 Ch. 1051; Atwool v. Merryweather, 5 Eq. 464 n.; Mason v. Harris, 11 Ch. D. 97; Macdougall v. Gardiner, 1 Ch. D. 13; and Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83. Nor will directors be allowed to use a majority which they have obtained by a trick. (Punt v. Symons & Co., (1903) 2 Ch. 507.) But short of some fraud or oppression or want of good faith of this kind, or contravention of the statutes on the part of the majority, there is no limit to the statutory power of alteration.

Baily v. British Equitable Assurance Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 374, must not be regarded as a decision that the Court will, at the instance of an outsider or otherwise, restrain a company from altering its articles. In that case certain life policies had been issued conferring the right to payment of a fixed sum plus any sum added by way of bonus, according to the company's "practice for the time being." Under alterable bye-laws made shortly after the company's formation, provision was made for periodical divisions of profit by way of bonus on the policies. Later on a question arose as to the company's power to alter the scheme of profit division thus established, and Kekewich, J., and the Court of Appeal held that as the policies were effected on the footing of a prospectus which referred to and set out the scheme of division embodied in the bye-laws, the company was precluded from applying its profits otherwise than in accordance with the scheme. This conclusion was entirely at variance with the views expressed by Lord Cairns, L. C., in Doman's case, 3 C. D. 21, and in Herts' case, 1 C. D. 307, and with Argus Life Assurance Co., 39 C. D. 371, and Pepe v. City and Suburban Permanent Building Soc., (1893) 2 Ch. 311, supra, p. 639, and it was unanimously reversed by the House of Lords (1906, A. C. 35), partly on the ground that the policy was taken subject to the risk of the scheme of distribution being altered and partly on the ground that the prospectus did not form part of the contract, and could not be referred to in the construction of the policies.

As to each member being entitled to a copy of the memorandum and articles, see supra, p. 33.

Where articles of association have been registered, a copy of every special resolution for the time being in force is to be embodied in or annexed to every copy of the articles of association that may be issued after the confirmation of the resolution. Sect. 70 (2) of the Act.

Members
entitled to copy of articles.
Copies of special resolutions.

Where articles have not been registered, a copy of every special resolution is to be forwarded, in print, to any member at his request, on payment of one shilling, or such less sum as the company may direct. Sect. 70 (3).

If a company makes default in printing or forwarding a copy of a special or extraordinary resolution to the registrar, it is to be liable to a fine not exceeding two pounds for every day during which the default continues. Sect. 70 (4).

Penalty.

If a company makes default in embodying or annexing to a copy of its articles or in forwarding in print to a member when required by this section a copy of a special resolution, it is to be liable to a fine not exceeding one pound for each copy in respect of which default is made. Sect. 70 (5).

Every director and manager of a company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits any default by the company in complying with the requirements of this section is to be liable to the like penalty as is imposed on the company for the default. Sect. 70 (6).

Before registration, the articles must be stamped with a 10s. deed stamp and with a 5s. companies registration stamp. See supra, p. 485.

A blunder in articles can only be corrected by altering them under sect. 13, and cannot be effected under the general jurisdiction to rectify documents. Evans v. Chapman, 86 L. T. 381; 18 T. L. R. 506.

PRECEDENTS.

Form 251.

THE COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908.

Articles of Association of the — Company, Limited.

Articles of a company limited by
shares.

This form of articles, with suitable modifications, has been used in thousands of cases. It includes most of the clauses usually inserted, and it will be found that it can with little difficulty be so altered as to suit the circumstances of the great majority of the companies from time to time in course of formation. Various special clauses will be found, infra, Forms 259 et seq., some of which may be occasionally required.

PRELIMINARY.

Some persons insert the words "It is agreed as follows" at the beginning of the articles, but the words are superfluous. By sect. 14 of the Act of 1908 (supra, p. 32), each member is bound by an implied covenant to conform to the regulations.

Interpretation.

1. [The marginal notes hto shall not affect the construction hof.]
In these presents, unless there be something in the subject or context inconsistent therewith—

"Special resolution" and "extraordinary resolution" have the meanings assigned hto resply by the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (sect. 69).

"The directors" means the directors for the time being.

"The office" means the registered office for the time being of the coy.

"The register" means the register of members to be kept pursuant to sect. 25 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

"Dividend" includes bonus.

"Month" means calendar month.*

"In writing" and "written" include printing, lithography, and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form.

Words importing the singular number only include the plural number and vice versa.

Words importing the masculine gender only include the feminine gender.

Words importing persons include corporations.

* In legal documents the primary meaning of "month" is lunar month, and there is no general exception making it mean calendar month in commercial documents. Bruner v. Moore, (1904) 1 Ch. 1904.

Some persons insert a long list of words and expressions in the interpretation clause, but the practice is not to be commended. Probably several of the above might be omitted, e.g., "special" and "extraordinary" resolutions, but they are retained because directors and members are not always familiar with the Act, and it may therefore be convenient to give some of the more important definitions in it. But it seems mere pedantry to say that "the directors" means the "directors for the time being," that "member" means "member of the company," and so forth.

Occasionally, however, additional definitions may be convenient, e.g., where there is to be reserve capital, under sect. 59 of the Act. Thus "reserve capital" means that portion of the capital which is not capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of the company being wound up."

Form 251.

2. The regulations contained in Table A. [in the first schedule to the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908] shall not apply to the coy. Table A. not to apply.

See supra, p. 629, sect. 11 of the Act. And Fisher v. Black and White Publishing Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 174, as to the importance of excluding provisions of Table A. by clearly expressed language.

3. The coy shall forthwith enter into an agreement with — in the terms of the draft, a copy whereof has, for the purpose of identification, been subscribed by A. B., a solor of the Supreme Court, and the directors shall carry the sd agreemt into effect, with full power, nevertheless, from time to time to agree to any modification of the terms of such agreemt, either before or after the execution thof.

Seal to be affixed to agreement.

The above form will be used when Plan III., supra, p. 327, is adopted, and the agreement is not mentioned in the memorandum of association. When it is so mentioned, the clause will run thus:—"The directors shall forthwith affix the seal to the agreement mentioned in paragraph — of clause 3 of the company's memorandum of association, and shall carry, &c."

Where the agreement is made (Plan I., supra, p. 325) with a trustee or agent for the company before its incorporation, the clause will run:—

"The company shall [or may] forthwith adopt an agreement dated the — day of —, and made between — of the one part, and — on behalf of this company of the other part, and the directors shall [or may] carry the same into effect, with full power, nevertheless, at any time, and from time to time, either before or after the adoption thereof, to agree to any modification thereof." Or, if preferred, clause 3 in the text can be used in Plan I., but in such case the draft referred to will be the draft adoption contract.

Sometimes the words, "a copy whereof is set forth in the schedule hereto," are introduced: but it is not generally advisable to set out the agreement in the schedule. The object of setting out the agreement in a schedule is to give the members the fullest notice of its contents, for every member is taken to know the articles of association; supra, p. 77.

It used formerly to be the custom to insert in the articles a clause declaring that "the company hereby ratifies and adopts the agreement, &c." But such a clause is now rarely inserted, for it is misleading, since it does not really operate to effect a ratification, and yet leads the parties to suppose that it does so operate. It probably does no more than authorize the directors to carry out the agreement. Eley v. Positive Gov. Co., 1 Ex. Div. 88, supra, p. 634. It does not relieve the directors from the obligation of exercising a discretion as to whether the contract is a proper one to adopt. Brazilian Rubber Plantations (No. 1), (1911) 1 Ch. 425. It certainly does not operate as a ratification of the agreement, "Because," as Jessel, M. R., said in Empress Engineering Co., 16 Ch. D. 125, "it has been decided, and, as it appears to me, well decided, that there cannot in law be an effective ratification of a contract which could not have been binding on the ratifier at the time it was made, because the ratifier was not then in existence. It does not follow from that that acts may not be done by the company after its formation which make a new contract to the same effect as the old one, but that stands on a different principle"; and see supra, p. 322. It is obviously undesirable to leave matters on such a footing; for it is difficult to say at what stage a company becomes bound by acting on the agreement. Thus, in Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co., 33 C. Div. 16, it was held that the company was not bound, although it had taken possession and expended large sums on the premises agreed to be leased. There the agreement was with a trustee for the company, and was adopted by the articles.

Accordingly an adoption contract is desirable. See Forms 40 and 41.

But no separate adoption contract is necessary where the preliminary contract made with an agent for the company is signed after the incorporation of the company: such a contract is capable of ratification. See supra, p. 327. Plan III. It has, indeed, been held that it may be ratified even after the other party has purported to repudiate it. Bolton Partners v. Lambert, 41 C. Div. 295. But referring to this case, Lord Lindley said: "The decision referred to presents difficulties; and their lordships reserve their liberty to reconsider it if on some future occasion it should become necessary to do so." Fleming v. Bank of New Zealand, (1900) A. C. 577, 587 (P. C.).

The following provisions of sect. 87 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, must be borne in mind:—

(3) Any contract made by a company before the date at which it is entitled to commence business shall be provisional only, and shall not be binding on the company until that date, and on that date it shall become binding.

(6) Nothing in this section shall apply to a private company or to a company registered before the first day of January, nineteen hundred and one, or to a company registered before the first day of July, nineteen hundred and eight, which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares.

As to when a company is entitled to commence business, see sect. 87, sub-sect. 1, supra, p. 20. By sect. 83 of the Act, "a company shall not previously to the statutory meeting vary the terms of a contract referred to in the prospectus, or statement in lieu of prospectus, except subject to the approval of the statutory meeting." As shown by sect. 65, the statutory meeting is only required in the case of a "company limited by shares and registered on or after" Jan. 1st, 1901. Where such a meeting is held the directors must, in the report referred to in sect. 65, sub-sect. 2, state "the particulars of any contract, the modification of which is to be submitted to the meeting for its approval, together with the particulars of the modification or proposed modification."

Where the directors are not independent of the vendors, e.g., where the vendors are themselves the directors or some of the directors, or where the directors or some of them are interested as promoters, or where it is intended that the directors shall be excused from taking the usual precautions, and the company is not a purely private company, it is sometimes deemed expedient to add additional words to the above clause 3, as below in italics. The precise operation and effect of such provisions has not yet been ascertained by decision. It may be that the vendors could not claim by way of contract (supra, p. 322) the benefit of such provisions, but at any rate they go far to fix the company and its members with notice of the position of affairs, and to deprive those who join the company or deal with it of cause for complaint (Postage Stamp Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 566; Seligman v. Prince & Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 617; British Seamless Paper Box Co., 17 Ch. D. 487); Volenti non fit injuria; and, further, they would seem to go far to bind by laches those who object to the agreement, and yet abstain from promptly taking steps to repudiate it or get it set aside. Erlanger v. New Sombrero Co., 3 App. Cas. 1218.

In a recent case (Brazilian Rubber Plantations (No. 1), (1911) 1 Ch. 425), an article provided that "No director shall be liable . . . for any loss, damage, or misfortune whatever which shall happen in the execution of the duties of his office, or in relation thereto, unless the same happens through his own dishonesty." And the Court held that an action by the company against its directors for negligence, no dishonesty being alleged, could not, in view of the article, succeed. On the other hand, such provisions to be effective must meet the very case, otherwise they are futile. Thus, in Blund's case, Westmoreland Green Co., (1893) 2 Ch. 612, where there was a provision on the lines of clause A., below, it was held, that it did not protect a director who had played the part of an ostensible co-vendor, not having any real interest in the property (and see Gluckstein v. Barnes, (1900) A. C. 240). The most eminent counsel, now in high judicial office, have advised that such special provisions are in some cases expedient.

As to the provision that every member is to be deemed to have notice, &c., this is by no means a new provision. Sahlgreen and Carrall's case, 3 Ch. 323. As to purely private companies not being within the Erlanger rule, see British Seamless Paper Box Co., 17 Ch. D. 467; Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22, and supra, p. 135.

The following words, with more or less modification adapted to the special circumstances, are sometimes added to clause 3:

A. -The basis on which the company is established is, that the company shall acquire the property comprised in the said agreement on the terms therein set forth, subject to any such modifications (if any) as aforesaid, and that the vendors therein named are to be the first directors of the company, and accordingly it shall be no objection to the said agreement that the vendors as promoters and directors stand in a fiduciary position towards the company, that they do not in the circumstances constitute an independent board, and every member of the company present and future is to be deemed to join the company on this basis.

It is advisable in some cases to insert a similar statement in any prospectus inviting application for shares.

The following words furnish another example:

B.- And it is hereby declared that the purchase consideration thereby agreed to be given by the company has been fixed by the vendors as the amount they are willing to take, having regard to the fact that the value of the mining claims and properties thereby respectively agreed to be sold has not yet been ascertained; and inasmuch as the said claims and properties are situate in British South Africa, and the value thereof is speculative and uncertain, and can only be ascertained by local operations, which would be expensive and involve delay, and, if successful, would enhance the price asked, it is expressly declared that the directors are not, before executing such agreements on behalf of the company, to take any steps to ascertain the value of the said claims and properties, whether by local operations, independent inquiry, or by any other means, and are hereby absolved from all further responsibility in regard thereto, and every member of the company, present and future, hereby signifies his assent to this provision, and it shall be no objection to the said agreement that the vendors therein named, or some or one of them, or some nominee of such vendors, are or is directors or a director of the company, provided that before the execution of such agreement he shall have disclosed his interest to the other directors.

Company's shares not to be purchased.

4. None of the funds of the coy shall be employed in the purchase of, or lent on, shares of the coy.

This prohibition is one which the law already implies so far as regards a purchase: but where a company desires to obtain the quotation of its shares in the official list, such a clause as above should be inserted in order to comply with the rules. See supra, p. 267, for extracts from rules.

ness may be commenced.
Private companies.

4a. The business of the coy may be commenced as soon after the incorporation of the coy as the directors shall think fit, and notwithstanding that not only of the shares may have been allotted.

Before the passing of sect. 6 of the Companies Act, 1900 (now replaced by sect. 87 of the Companies Act, 1908), this clause was often inserted, but was not necessary, for a company might unquestionably commence business and the directors might make calls before the whole capital had been issued. Melmer v. Jersey Imperial Hotel Co., 2 H. & M. 528; Ornamental Woodwork Co. v. Brown, 2 H. & C. 63. But the directors were bound to exercise their discretion bona fide (Madrid Bank, Ex parte Williams, 2 Eq. 216), otherwise they might be held guilty of misfeasance. Liverpool Household Stores, 62 L. T. 876. The above clause has, however, been generally retained to prevent misunderstanding, and it may for the same reason be still retained in the case of private companies, for sect. 87 of the Act of 1908 does not apply to a private company. See sub-sect. (6).

companies.

In the case of public companies, even before the Act of 1900, the terms of the prospectus might give a member an equity to restrain the company from commencing business with a totally insufficient capital. Elder v. New Zealand Land Co., W. N. (1874) 85; 30 L. T. 285; Sharpley v. Louth and Leic. Co. Rail. Co., 2 C. Div. 663. But see Scottish Petroleum Co., 23 C. Div. 413.

As to the restrictions which the Act of 1908 imposes on the commencement of business, see supra, p. 20.

Allotment of
shares.

5. Subject as aforesaid, the shares shall be under the control of the directors who may allot or otherwise dispose of the same to such persons, on such terms and conditions, and at such times, as the directors think fit [subject, nevertheless, to the stipulations contained in the said agreement with reference to the shares to be allotted in pursuance thereof], and with full power to give to any person the call of any shares either at par or at a premium, and for such time, and for such reason as the directors think fit.

The words in brackets will be omitted if no agreement is referred to in the articles.

Seets. 85 and 86 of the Act, as to the conditions on which directors may proceed to allotment, must be borne in mind, see p. 64, supra; also sect. 88 of the Act as to a return of allotments. See supra, pp. 64, 65 et seq. As to shares issued at a discount, see supra, pp. 60, 277; as to bonus shares, supra, p. 60. Sometimes the words "and either at a premium or otherwise" are inserted; but no special authority is required to issue shares at a premium. The concluding words are, it would seem, superfluous.

Sometimes the words "with the sanction of a general meeting, shares in the initial capital may be issued with any preferential rights attached thereto" are added.

The duty of the directors as to allotment is clear: they are bound to act in good faith in the best interests of the company, for their power and discretion is fiduciary; but except where it is affirmatively shown that they have not acted in good faith, the Court will not overrule the exercise of their discretion. Ex parte Penney, 8 Ch. 452, infra, p. 671. Prima facie, there is no objection to the directors making an allotment to themselves and their friends in preference to or to the exclusion of other persons; or there may be customers of the business whom it may be desirable to propitiate and secure by an advantageous allotment; but if it is shown that they have not acted in good faith, e.g., have made the allotment not because the company wanted further funds, but in order to enable the directors themselves to obtain extra vote, and so carry or negative some contemplated resolution, they will commit a breach of trust. Pont v. Simon & Co., (1903) 2 Ch. 507; Ex parte Penney, supra; Percival v. Wright, (1902) 2 Ch. 421; Re Coalport China Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 404.

So, also, as regards the price of issue, this clause gives them a wide discretion: they can offer the original issue at par, however promising the prospects are, and upon a subsequent issue they may, in fixing the price, freely exercise their discretion if they act in good faith—that is, with an eye to the company's interests, and not to their private advantage, and accordingly are not bound to offer the shares at a premium equal to that at which the outstanding shares nominally stand in the market, for it is not ultra vires of the company to issue shares at par where it would be possible to sell at a premium. Hilder v. Dexter, (1902) A. C. 474.

And this being so, the directors are free to exercise their discretion in the matter, and they may consider it best in the interests of the company to issue at par or at a less premium than the market price indicates, e.g., to existing shareholders. Where, however, directors allot shares otherwise than in good faith, they may be held responsible for breach of trust. Shaw v. Holland, (1900) 2 Ch. 305, and compare this with London and Colonial Finance Co., 77 L. T. 176 (C. A.); Percival v. Wright, (1902) 2 Ch. 421.

Cases often arise in which it becomes desirable to give to allottees of shares as part of the consideration for subscriptions the call at par or a premium of further shares, and to make the call exercisable at any time within a year or other limited period. This was held by the House of Lords, in Hilder v. Dexter, (1902) A. C. 474, to be legal, and not to contravene sect. 8 of the Companies Act, 1900 (now replaced by sect. 89 of the Act of 1908), even when the call was at par and at the time it was exercised the shares were at a premium. See supra, p. 281.

It may be that the clause without the above addition, "and with full power to give to any person the call on any shares, &c.," sufficiently covers the ground, especially if read in conjunction with clause 113, infra, p. 746; but some persons prefer to provide this expressly.

6. As regards all allotments from time to time made, the directors shall duly comply with sect. 88 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

Form 251.

Return of allotments.

Form 251. The section referred to provides for returns to the Registrar of Companies of allotments and for filing contracts as to paid-up shares. Penalty for default 50*l.* per day. For the section in full, with notes, see supra, p. 64.

Restrictions on allotments. 7. If the coy shall offer any of its shares to the public for subscription:

- (a) The directors shall not make any allotment thereof unless and until at least — p.c. of the shares so offered shall have been subscribed, and the sums payable on application shall have been pd to and received by the coy; but this provision is no longer to apply after the first allotment of shares offered to the public for subscription has been made.
- (b) The amount payable on application on each share so offered shall not be less than 5 p.c. of the nominal amount of the share.

And if the company shall propose to commence business on the footing of a statement in lieu of prospectus, the directors shall not make any allotment of shares unless 7 at least shall have been subscribed for on a cash footing.

The above clause embodies the leading provisions of sect. 85 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. See supra, p. 9.

It may be useful as a reminder. The application money must be actually paid in cash before allotment; if cheques are received, they must be cleared before allotment. Mears v. Western Canada Pulp and Paper Co., (1905) 2 Ch. 353; National Motor, &c. Co., (1908) 2 Ch. 228; Burton v. Bevan, (1908) 2 Ch. 240.

The last paragraph is intended to operate under sub-sect. (7) of sect. 85.

Commissions for placing shares.

8. The coy may at any time pay a commission to any person for subscribing or agreeing to subscribe (whether absolutely or conditionally) for any shares in the coy, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions (whether absolute or conditional) for any shares in the coy, but so that if the commission shall be pd or payable out of capital the statutory conditions and requirements shall be observed and complied with, and the commission shall not exceed [10 p.c.] on the shares in each case subscribed or to be subscribed.

See, as to these provisions, sect. 89, supra, p. 279, and the notes to Form 13, supra.

The rate fixed is very commonly 10 per cent.; but there is no limit, and in order to preclude difficulty, especially in mining companies, 100 per cent. has in not a few cases been specified. There is less difficulty in fixing a high maximum, as the rate so fixed will not have to be specified in the prospectus: in that only the amount of rate actually "paid or agreed to be paid" has to be specified.

If the clause authorizes only a "rate," a lump sum cannot be paid, for it is not a rate. Booth v. New Africander, &c. Co., (1903) 1 Ch. 295.

Sometimes the clause is prefaced with more specific authority; thus:

"As regards the 100,000 shares which are forthwith to be offered to the public for subscription, the directors may pay to subscribers a sum not exceeding — per share for subscribing the same, and may pay a sum of not exceeding £ [—, not exceeding — per share] to persons for underwriting the same; and whenever subsequently the company offers any of its shares to the public for subscription, the directors may," &c.

Form 251.

9. The coy may make arrangements on the issue of shares for a difference between the holders of such shares in the amount of calls to be pd and the time of payment of such calls.

Shares may be issued subject to different conditions as to calls, &c.

This power is given a company by sect. 39 of the Act (replacing sect. 24 of the Act of 1867), if the company is authorized by its articles to do so. It seems, therefore, expedient to take the power.

As to the duties of directors under this article, see notes to clause 5.

10. If, by the conditions of allotment of any share, the whole or pt of the amount or issue price thereof shall be payable by instalments, every such instalment shall, when due, be pd to the coy by the person who for the time being shall be the registered holder of the share.

Instalments on shares to be duly paid.

It is very common now to issue shares on terms that fixed sums shall be paid on application and allotment, and the balance, or a considerable part thereof, by instalments at short intervals (in lieu of calls). It is therefore expedient to insert such a clause as above. By the joint effect of the above clause, and of sect. 14 of the Act of 1908, each instalment will be a debt due to the company. Supra, p. 632. In England and Ireland it will be a specialty, and therefore recoverable within twenty years. See sect. 3 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42), and compare Cork & Brandon Rail. Co., 13 C. B. 836. See supra, p. 221. Sect. 70 of the Act of 1862 (as to the form of an action for calls) is not re-enacted by the Act of 1908. See infra, notes to Form 695. Unless such a clause is inserted, the instalments do not constitute a statutory debt, and if a transfer is passed whilst an instalment is due, a serious question arises as to whether the transferee is liable to pay such instalment. Hoylake Rail. Co., 9 Ch. 257. But if the transfer is in the usual form, the company can sue the transferee for the arrears. Herbert Gold Co. v. Haycraft, C. A., Times, 27th March, 1901. The transferor remains liable, but it may be that a fresh call could be made on the transferee. Care should be taken that the forfeiture clauses extend to unpaid instalments. See clause 21, infra.

Where shares are payable by instalments, and the company is ordered to be wound up before the final instalments are due, the liquidator can call up the full amount without waiting till the instalments fall due—they are converted into a statutory debt. Corlova Union Gold Co., (1891) 2 C. D. 580; conf. Fowler v. Broad's Night Light Co., (1893) 1 Ch. 724.

As to the words "or issue price thereof," these are to provide for shares issued at a premium, and thus to render the forfeiture clauses applicable in the event of non-payment of premium.

"For the time being," points to the holder at the time the instalment becomes payable. London & Brighton Ry. v. Fairclough, 2 M. & G. 674.

Form 251.

Liability of joint holders
of share.

11. The joint holders of a share shall be severally as well as jointly liable for the payment of all instalments and calls due in respect of such share.

This clause is not uncommon. It appears to be very reasonable, and affords an additional security to the company. It extends only to instalments payable and calls made during the joint lives, for on the death of one his liability ceases. In the absence of such a clause the liability is joint only. Hill's case, 20 Eq. 585.

A corporation and a natural person may now hold shares or stock as joint tenants (Bodies Corporate Joint Tenancy Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20)), but a company is not bound to enter the name of a partnership firm on the register of members. Faulkner Anthracite Collieries, 103 L. T. 211. But see supra, p. 70.

recognized.

12. Save as herein otherwise provided, the coo shall be entitl to treat the registered holder of any share as the absolute owner thof, and accordingly shall not, except as ordered by a Court of competent jurisdiction, or as by statute required, be bound to recognize any equitable or other claim to or interest in such share on the part of any other person.

The obvious intention and purpose of the above clause is to enable the company to look to the registered holder and deal with him exclusively as the owner of the shares without being embarrassed by any notice that may be given to the company of any equitable or other claims on the part of outsiders, unless those claims are claims recognized by the articles, as in the case of executors or administrators, or in the case of transferees entitled to registration, or unless the Court intervenes.

The clause goes further than sect. 27 of the Act. That section provides that "no notice of any trust, expressed, implied, or constructive, shall be entered on the register or be receivable by the Registrar in the case of companies registered in England or Ireland."

On the construction of these words (in sect. 30 of the Companies Act, 1862) it was held in Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs (1887), 12 App. Cas. 29, that in case of a company subject to the Act, but not having an exemption clause as above in its articles, the section, though it relieves the company from taking notice of trusts, does not relieve the company from the obligation to take notice of an equitable mortgage made by the shareholder. The exemption clause, however, framed as above, appears to relieve the company from this obligation also—thus, in Société Générale v. Walker (1886), 11 App. Cas. 20, 30, where there was an exemption clause in the articles, Lord Selborne said that he thought that, "upon the true and proper construction of the Companies Act, 1862, and of the article of this company, there was no obligation upon this company to accept or to preserve any record of notices of equitable interests or trusts if actually given or tendered to them, and that any such notice, if given, would be absolutely inoperative." It is true that this passage was thought by the learned lords who took part in the decision in Bradford Co. v. Briggs, supra, to go too far; but apparently attention was not called to the fact that in the case last mentioned there was no exemption clause, whereas in the case Lord Selborne was dealing with there was a very full exemption clause.

But even the presence of an exemption clause, it was settled long since, does not prevent a person equitably interested in shares from procuring the intervention of the Court to protect his rights. Binney v. Ince Hall Coal Co., 35 L. J. Ch. 363; Taylor v. Midland Rail. Co., 8 W. R. 401. And now it is not uncommon, as in the above clause, to insert words showing that the clause is not to interfere with the jurisdiction of the Court. This removes a difficulty in construction referred to by Lord Halsbury in Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs, supra.

Form 251.

The following are additional cases in which the exemption clause was present, and the company was held entitled to disregard notice of equities: New London and Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank (1882), 21 C. D. 302; Miles v. New Zealand, &c. Co. (1886), 32 C. D. 266; Re Perkins, 24 Q. B. D. 613. In the case last mentioned, Lord Coleridge, sitting in the Court of Appeal, pointed out very forcibly the importance of relieving companies from the obligation to recognize equities. "It seems to me," said his Lordship, "extremely important not to throw any doubt on the principle that companies have nothing whatever to do with the relations between trustees and their cestuis que trust in respect of the shares of the company. If a trustee is on the company's register as a holder of shares, the relations which he may have with some other person in respect of the shares are matters with which the company has nothing whatever to do; it could only look to the man whose name is upon the register. It seems to me that if we were to throw any doubt upon that rule we should make the carrying on of the business of joint stock companies extremely difficult, and might involve those companies in very serious questions, and the ultimate result would be anything but beneficial to the holders of shares in such companies themselves."

These decisions are based on the principle that a shareholder cannot both approbate and reprobate, and that persons claiming through him can stand in no better position. Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. Macdonald v. Law Union, &c. Co. (1873), L. R. 9 Q. B. 328; Barland's Trustee v. Steel Bros. & Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 279.

It is, and has for long been, a general practice with companies—at any rate, those having an exemption clause in their articles—to decline to receive notice of equities, and to inform a person who gives notice that the company does not recognize equities, and that if the party who is giving the notice desires, he must take steps to obtain an injunction, and this is all that a company can in reason be expected to do. Take the case, for instance, of a company with a thousand shareholders—a not uncommon number; it would be intolerable if the company was obliged to take notice of all the various claims that might be sent in to it by outsiders who claim to be interested in shares and yet abstain from taking the requisite legal proceedings, either in an action or under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1; or R. S. C., Ord. XLV. (1), r. 1. See infra, pp. 662 et seq.

Shares are "choses in action" within sect. 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and therefore exempt from the order and disposition provisions of that section. Colonial Bank v. Whinney, 11 App. Cas. 436. But the doctrine of Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1, does not apply to shares, and accordingly an equitable assignee of a share who does not give notice thereof to the company will not be postponed to a subsequent equitable assignee who does give notice. Société Gén. v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 30. Hence, where the holder executes a transfer of shares to A., and subsequently another transfer of the same shares to B., the maxim qui prior est tempore potior est jure applies, and A. is entitled to registration to the exclusion of B. But if B. is a purchaser for value without notice of the prior transfer to A., and gets on to the register before A., he thereby gains priority over A. And he may, perhaps, gain priority without actual registration if he becomes unconditionally entitled to registration. Roots v. Williamson, 38 Ch. D. 485.

It must be borne in mind that where a transfer by deed is required a blank transfer filled up after delivery does not pass the legal title, and is, therefore, ineffective as against a prior equity. Hibblewhite v. McMorine, 6 M. & W. 200; Powell v. Prov. Bank of England, (1893) 2 Ch. 555; France v. Clark, 26 Ch. D. 257.

Where a regular transfer is presented, but the company has received notice not to register it, it should, unless it is prepared to run the risk, inform the person who gave the notice that, unless he within (say) three days obtain an injunction, the transfer will be registered, and notice should also be given to the transferee. See Tahiti Cotton Co., Ex parte Sargent, 17 Eq. 280; Cadogan and Hans Place Estate Co., W. N. (1876) 91. But where the company has notice of an equitable title it is not bound to register a transfer which would be a fraud on the owner of such equitable title. Roots v. Williamson, 38 C. D. 485; Moore v. North-Western Bank, (1891) 2 Ch. 599; Ireland v. Hart, (1902) 2 Ch. 527; Peat v. Clayton, (1906) 1 Ch. 559; Ottos Kopje Diamond Mines, (1893) 1 Ch. 618.

The company need not register a person as a member under a transfer of shares of which they have any doubt, but can leave the transferee to come to the Court and make out his title. Per Mellor, J., Bahia and San Francisco Rail., L. R. 3 Q. B. 597. And although a mortgage of shares contains an express or implied receipt clause, the company is not bound to act on it, but may require an account of what is due to the mortgagee. Hockey v. Western, (1898) 1 Ch. 350.

A person claiming under a forged transfer, who sends in and procures registration of such transfer, and the issue of a fresh certificate, is bound, though acting in good faith, to indemnify the company. Sheffield Corp. v. Barclay, (1905) A. C. 392.

Under sect. 27 of the Act, a trustee who is the registered holder of shares is personally liable. Chapman and Barker's case, 3 Eq. 361; Hemming v. Maddick, 7 Ch. 395. The cestui que trust cannot be made liable, either as shareholder or contributory. Bagg's case, 2 Dr. & Sm. 459; Somervail v. Cree, 4 App. Cas. 648. And the same rule applies to Scotch companies even where the trustees are registered "as trustees." Muir v. City of Glasgow Bank, 4 App. Cas. 337. But a trustee is entitled to be indemnified by his cestui que trust. Hemming v. Maddick, ubi supra. And if the cestui que trust is an juris and cannot disclaim the shares, it is immaterial whether he created the trust or accepted a transfer of the beneficial ownership with knowledge of the trust. Hardoon v. Belilos, (1901) A. C. 118.

A company is by statute bound to attend to a distingus notice. See notes to Form 580, infra.

PREFERENCE SHARES.

Preference
shares.

13. Of the shares in the initial capital [10,000] shall be preference shares, &c. (See Forms 261 et seq., infra.)

Where the initial capital is divided into classes it is convenient here to set forth the particulars, unless the matter is fully dealt with in the memorandum of association. See Forms 210 et seq., and supra, p. 375.

Form 251.

CERTIFICATES.

14. The certificates of title to shares shall be issued under the seal of the coy. and signed by two directors, and countersigned by the secretary or some other person appointed by the directors. Certificates:

As to the serious responsibility incurred by a company in issuing certificates, see infra, Chap. XIV., where also will be found forms of certificates.

As to the obligation to issue promptly, see sect. 92 of the Act. Regarding being had to that section, it seems doubtful whether a fee can be exacted.

15. Every member shall be entitled to one certificate for all the shares registered in his name, or to several certificates, each for one more of such shares. Every certificate of shares shall specify the number and denoting numbers of the shares in respect of which it is issued and the amount paid up thereon. members' right to.

Under an article in the above form it was held that a shareholder was entitled in an action to compel the company to issue a certificate to him, and that although after the word "entitled" the words "within a reasonable time" must be implied, the Court in considering what time was reasonable was not bound to take into account the fact that the company's prospectus referred to certain contracts under which certificates for some of the shares in the company could not be issued until a certain period had elapsed. Burdett v. Standard Exploration Co., 16 T. L. R. 112.

16. If any certificate be worn out or defaced, then, upon production thereof to the directors, they may order the same to be cancelled, and may issue a new certificate in lieu thereof; and if any certificate be lost or destroyed, then, upon proof thereof to the satisfaction of the directors, and on such indemnity as the directors deem adequate being given, a new certificate in lieu thereof shall be given to the party entitled to such lost or destroyed certificate. As to issue of new certificate in place of one defaced, lost, or destroyed

The company, under the doctrine of estoppel (see infra, p. 1140 et seq.), incurs a serious responsibility by issuing a new certificate, unless the old one is cancelled; and it ought not to be done except on very satisfactory proof of loss or destruction, or on a satisfactory indemnity being given. See further, infra, Chap. XIV.

17. For every certificate issued under the last preceding clause there shall be paid to the coy the sum of 1s., or such smaller sum as the directors may determine. Fee.

The Stock Exchange Committee will not allow a fee to be charged for the first certificate, such certificate being the shareholder's proper evidence of title to his shares.

18. The certificate of shares registered in the names of two or more persons shall, unless otherwise directed by them, be delivered to the person first named on the register.

Calls.

In the absence of a special provision in the memorandum or articles, or any special agreement as to payment, a subscriber to the memorandum of association, like an ordinary shareholder, is not liable to pay anything in respect of the shares subscribed for by him until calls are duly made on him. Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 56. The same case shows that if the directors subscribe the memorandum for shares it is their duty not to favour themselves, but to make calls on their own shares pari passu with the other shares of the class.

Calls.

19. The directors may, from time to time, make such calls as they think fit upon the members in respect of all moneys unpaid on the shares held by them resp'y, and not by the conditions of allotment thof made payable at fixed times, and each member shall pay the amount of every call so made on him to the persons and at the times and places appointed by the directors. A call may be made payable by instalments.

Sect. 14 of the Act of 1908 provides that "all money payable by any member to the company under the memorandum or articles, shall be a debt due from him to the company, and in England and Ireland be of the nature of a specialty debt." Hence an action lies for the amount.

As to an action against a member for calls or other money, see infra, note to clause 22a.

A call made by persons not duly appointed directors is prima facie void. Hovbrack Coal Co. v. Teague, 5 H. & N. 151. And it is a corollary from the same principle that if the directors who purported to make the call were not duly qualified that is prima facie a good defence to an action for the call. Iron Ship, &c. Co. v. Blunt, L. R. 3 C. P. 484. See also Sharp v. Dawes, 2 Q. B. Div. 26. Care must also be taken that the meeting of the directors making the call is duly convened (Garden Gully United Quartz Mining Co. v. McLister, 1 App. Cas. 46; Faure Electric Accumulator Co. v. Phillipart, 58 L. T. 525), and that a proper quorum is present. Austin's case (1871), 24 L. T. 932.

But sects. 71 (3), 74, of the Act, and a clause like 111, infra, may make an act of directors done before discovery of undue appointment or disqualification valid.

In making a call care should be taken to make it payable at a time sufficiently distant to allow the requisite notice to be given. Under clause 109 the power to make a call may be delegated to a committee, but the power cannot be delegated without some such authority. Howard's case, 1 Ch. 561; see p. 742, infra.

The power to make calls is in the nature of a trust to be exercised for the general benefit of the company. Gilbert's case, 5 Ch. 559; Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 56. If it is being exercised malâ fide, e.g., for the directors' private ends or for some indirect purpose, it may be restrained by injunction, but the Court is not very willing to interfere.

Norman v. Mitchell, 19 Beav. 278; 5 De G. M. & G. 648; Logan v. Courtown, 13 Beav. 22; Bailey v. Birkenhead Co., 12 Beav. 433; Fraser v. Whalley, 2 H. & M. 10; Punt v. Symons, (1903) 2 Ch. 506; Abbotsford Hotel v. Kingham, 102 L. T. 118. The onus of proving mala fides is on the party alleging it. Odessa Trams. Co. v. Mendel, 8 C. Div. 246. It may be proper to make a call in order to prevent threatened transfers. Gilbert's case, ubi supra.

A minute of the resolution making a call ought to be made, for there is some question whether the call can otherwise be proved. Cornwall Mining Co. v. Bennett, 5 H. & N. 423; 29 L. J. Ex. 157. And the resolution should specify the amount of the call, and when, where, and to whom the call is to be paid. Re Cawley & Co., 42 C. Div. 209. Compare Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency, 5 C. Div. 687. It would seem that even without express authority a call may certainly be made payable by instalments. Ambergate Rail. Co. v. Norcliffe, 6 Ex. 628; Lawrence v. Wynn, 5 M. & W. 355.

Although calls are to be made on the members (as in Table A., clause 12), a deceased member, whilst his name remains on the register, must, it would seem, be treated as a continuing member so far as may be necessary to render his estate liable. New Zealand, &c. Co. v. Peacock, (1894) 1 Q. B. 622. If desired, the words "In this clause member includes the legal personal representatives of a member" may be inserted. Conf. sect. 21 of the Companies (Clauses Consolidation) Act, 1845. Proof may be made in an administration action for the estimated liability in respect of all future calls. Re McMahon, Fuller v. Same, (1900) 1 Ch. 173. And the same rule applies in bankruptcy. Re Rowe, (1904) 2 K. B. 489. The receipt by the company of a dividend of less than 20s. in the pound does not make the share fully paid (Rowe's Trustee's Claim, (1905) 1 Ch. 597 (affirmed on appeal, (1906) 1 Ch. 1)), so as to entitle the shareholder to participate in surplus assets on a winding-up.

In an administration action executors need no protection against future calls by means of funds being retained in Court. Mellor v. South Australian Land, (1907) 1 Ch. 72.

Directors may make calls after voluntary liquidation has commenced with the sanction of the general meeting or of the liquidators. Fairbairn Engineering Co., (1893) 3 Ch. 450.

20. A call shall be deemed to have been made at the time when the resolution of the directors authorizing such call was passed.

When call deemed to have been made.

This clause, which appears in Table A., is inserted in order to get rid of any doubt as to what all is "made" when the resolution is passed, or when notice of it is given to the members. Shaw v. Rowley, 16 M. & W. 810. See clauses 24 and 25, in connection with which the question is sometimes material.

20a. No call shall exceed one-fourth of the nominal amount of a share, or be made payable within two months after the last preceding call was payable.]

Restrictions on power to make calls.

The above clause is sometimes used, but, except where quotation is required, it is generally considered better to leave the directors free to exercise their discretion. The prospectus not uncommonly states that it is not intended to make calls beyond a certain amount, but such a statement of intention is not a pledge binding on the company; and it was held in one case that an action would lie, though the shares were applied for on the faith of a prospectus which stated

Form 251. that "No further calls are contemplated." Accidental Insurance Co. v. Davis (1866), 15 L. T. 182. Prima facie a payment to be made on the allotment of a share is not a call. Croskey v. Bank of Wales, 4 Giff. 314; Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 56. The Stock Exchange Committee generally require a clause as above, and will now allow the word "fifth" to be substituted for "fourth." An "instalment" under clause 10 is not a "call" within this clause.

Notice of call. 21. Fourteen days' notice of any call shall be given specifying the time and place of payment, and to whom such call shall be paid.

It is always expedient to allow a reasonable time for payment of a call. If money is urgently required, the directors should raise it temporarily on debentures or mortgage or otherwise, so as to allow sufficient time for the members to pay up. Where so many "clear days' notice" or so many "days' notice at least" is to be given, the day of giving the notice and the day on which the call is to be paid should not be counted. Watson v. Eales, 23 Beav. 294; Railway Sleepers Co. (1885), 29 C. D. 204. If a call is made payable by instalments, the notice ought, it would seem, to be given the prescribed number of days before the time fixed for the payment of the first instalment. Notice must be given in accordance with the articles of the company. Watson v. Eales, supra. And see clause 22, infra.

When interest on call, or instalment, payable. 22. If the sum payable in respect of any call or instalment be not paid on or before the day appointed for payment thereof, the holder for the time being of the share in respect of which the call shall have been made, or the instalment shall be due, shall pay interest for the same at the rate of 5l. p.c.p.a. from the day appointed for the payment thereof to the time of the actual payment, or at such other rate as the directors may determine.

What the rate of interest should be is a matter for consideration. Sometimes 10 per cent. is specified. See Storken's case, 3 Ch. 412.

Such a clause does not apply to calls made by the liquidators of a company (Welsh Flannel and Tweed Co., 20 Eq. 367); but interest may be made payable by the liquidator giving notice of his intention to charge it. See Part II., p. 554. As to liability to pay interest on calls after forfeiture of the shares, see Storken's case, L. R. 3 Ch. 412, and Faure Electric Accumulator Co. v. Phillipart, 56 L. T. 525.

It is now common to sue for a call on a writ specially indorsed under Ord. III. r. 6, of the Rules of the Supreme Court. After judgment has been obtained against the defaulting shareholder, the company can proceed against him in bankruptcy by serving him with a bankruptcy notice. Re Winterbottom, 18 Q. B. D. 446. So long as the company is a going concern the shareholder can plead a set-off, but not after a winding-up, whether voluntary or by the Court.

The duty of the directors, when a call is made, is to compel every shareholder to pay to the company the amount due from him in respect of that call; and they are guilty of a breach of their duty if they do not take all reasonable means for enforcing that payment. Spackman v. Evans, L. R. 3 H. L. 186. Directors must not favour themselves in this respect. Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 53.

[22a On the trial or hearing of any action for the recovery of any money due for any call, it shall be sufficient to prove that the name of the member sued is entered in the register as the holder, or one of the holders, of the shares in respect of which such debt accrued; that the resolution making the call is duly recorded in the minute book; and that notice of such call was duly given to the member sued, in pursuance of these presents; and it shall not be necessary to prove the appointment of the directors who made such call, nor any other matters whatsoever, but the proof of the matters aforesaid shall be conclusive evidence of the debt.] Form 251.

action for call.

This clause is sometimes inserted; it is not contained in Table A. The provisions of the general law are generally considered sufficient. Sect. 70 of the Act of 1862 is repealed, and not re-enacted.

Notwithstanding the terms of the above clause, the defendant would still be entitled to show that he was not a member. It would, however, seem that as against a member the clause would render the duly recorded resolution of a call conclusive. See and consider Cornwall, &c. Co. v. Bennett, 5 H. & N. 423; and Roney's case, 4 D. J. & S. 426.

23. The directors may, if they think fit, receive from any member willing to advance the same, and either in money or money's worth, all or any part of the capital due upon the shares held by him beyond the sums actually called for; and upon the amount so paid or satisfied in advance, or so much thereof as from time to time exceeds the amount of the calls then made upon the shares in respect of which such advance has been made, the company may pay interest at such rate as the member paying such sum in advance and the directors agree upon. Payment of calls in advance.

The power to receive payment of calls in advance is in the nature of a trust for the benefit of the company. Directors should only receive money in advance when in their judgment it can be advantageously used for the purposes of the company. Poole, Jackson and White's case (1878), 9 Ch. D. 322; Re Pyle Works, 44 Ch. D. 586. Hence, where directors paid up in advance their own shares, and on the same day appropriated the amount in payment of their fees, for which there were, at the time, as they knew, no other available assets, it was held that, the transaction not being bona fide, the directors remained liable on their shares. Sykes' case, 13 Eq. 255. See also Gilbert's case, 5 Ch. 559; Wincham Shipbuilding Co., 9 C. Div. 322; Re A. M. Wood's Ship and Moor-dale Protection Co., 2 Meg. C. R. 164; Washington Diamond Co., (1893) 3 Ch. 350; Liverpool Guarantee Co., 30 W. R. 378; Kent's case, 39 C. Div. 266; Anglo-Continental, &c. Corporation, (1898) 1 Ch. 327, 335; and Driffeld Gas Light Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 451.

It has now been settled, by the House of Lords, that such a clause justifies the payment of the agreed interest upon the capital paid up in advance, not merely out of profits, but, if needs be, out of capital, provided that the power to receive in advance has been exercised bona fide. Lock v. Queensland Investment Co., (1896) A. C. 461. See further, infra, pp. 764, 765. Of course, it may be arranged that the interest is only to be paid out of profits, and that payment up in advance is not to give any preference, in winding-up, as to capital.

Form 251. In a winding-up, capital paid up in advance of calls prima facie ranks for payment next after outside debts, and the costs of winding-up (see Maule's case, 6 Ch. 51, and the cases following), and arrears of interest thereon, rank in like manner. Exchange Drapery, 38 C. D. 174; Wakefield, &c. Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 165.

FORFEITURE AND LIEN.

If call or instalment not paid, notice may be given.

24. If any member fail to pay any call or instalment on or before the day appointed for the payment of the same, the directors may at any time thereafter, during such time as the call or instalment remains unpaid, serve a notice on such member requiring him to pay the same, together with any interest that may have accrued, and all expenses that may have been incurred by the co. by reason of such non-payment.

The power of forfeiture is a most valuable one for enforcing the payment of calls and instalments. It is not inherent in a company, but must be taken. Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. C. 633. If the procedure has been regular, the Court will not give relief against the forfeiture. Sparks v. Liverpool Waterworks, 13 Ves. 428. But like all provisions for forfeiture, it is to be treated as strictissimi juris, and accordingly any irregularity in the procedure will invalidate the forfeiture. Clarke v. Hart, supra; Garden Gully, &c. Co. v. McLister, 1 App. Cas. 39; Johnson v. Lytle's Iron Agency, 5 C. Div. 687; Goulton v. London Architectural Co., W. N. (1877) 141; Stubbs v. Lister, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 81. Even where a shareholder is seeking to rescind his contract the Court can restrain a forfeiture. Lamb v. Sambas Rubber, (1908) 1 Ch. 415; Jones v. Pacaya Rubber Co., (1911) 1 K. B. 455, overruling Ripley v. Paper Bottle Co., 57 L. J. Ch. 327.

Where the shareholder is bankrupt, the notice may still be given to him (Graham v. Van Dieman's Land Co., 1 H. & N. 541; 28 L. J. Ex. 73), but it is well to give notice to the trustee also.

If the shareholder is dead the notice may be sent to his registered address. Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656.

It has been decided that the power of forfeiture may be exercised by the directors with the sanction mentioned in sect. 133 (5) of the Act of 1862 (now replaced by sect. 185 (iii) of the Act of 1908), even after the commencement of a voluntary winding-up. Fairbairn Engineering Co., (1893) 3 Ch. 450.

A power to forfeit may, it would seem, be introduced into the articles by special resolution. Dawkins v. Antrobus, 17 C. Div. 634; and see Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656; Re Rowe, (1904) 2 K. B. 489.

The power creates a trust to be exercised for the benefit of the company, and, if it is used for the purpose of enabling members to escape from their liabilities, the transaction cannot stand. Esparto Trading Co., 12 C. D. 191; Harris v. North Devon Rail. Co., 20 Beav. 384; Spackman v. Evans, L. R. 3 H. L. 186; Lord Wallcourt's case, W. N. (1899) 258.

Sometimes it is considered desirable to make the power of forfeiture exercisable for non-payment of debts generally, and not merely calls and instalments. Dunlop v. Dunlop, 21 C. D. 583.

Directors do not lose the power of forfeiture because the company charges all its uncalled capital in favour of trustees for debenture holders. Re Agency Land and Finance Co. of Australia, 20 T. L. R. 41.

A clause in a company's articles forfeiting the shares of any shareholder who should commence or threaten an action against the company or the directors in payment to the shareholder of the full market value of his shares is invalid as an infringement of a shareholder's legal rights. Hope v. International Financial Soc. (1876), 4 Ch. D. 327.

Form 251.

The members whose shares have been wrongly forfeited are entitled to bring in action to set the forfeiture aside (Sweeney v. Smith (1861), 7 Eq. 324), and to prove in the winding-up of the company in competition with other creditors. New Chile Co., 45 C. D. 598.

A shareholder who is a director, and present at and party to proceedings by which his shares were declared to be forfeited for non-payment of calls, cannot after the lapse of several years dispute the validity of the forfeiture on the ground of any irregularity. Jones v. North Vancouver Land Co., (1910) A. C. 317.

25. The notice shall name a day (not being less than fourteen days from the date of the notice), and a place or places, on and at which such call or instalment and such interest and expenses as aforesaid are to be paid. The notice shall also state that in the event of non-payment at or before the time and at the place appointed, the shares in respect of which the call was made or instalment is payable will be liable to be forfeited.

Form of notice.

Sometimes the above clause is omitted, and the preceding clause (24) altered by inserting the words "within 21 days from the date thereof" before the word "together," and by adding at the end of the clause the words, "Such notice shall contain a copy of the next following clause."

Whatever the precise formalities prescribed by the clause, they must be strictly pursued. Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency, 5 Ch. D. 687.

26. If the requisitions of any such notice as aforesaid are not complied with, any shares in respect of which such notice has been given may, at any time thereafter, before payment of all calls or instalments, interest and expenses, due in respect thereof, be forfeited by a resolution of the directors to that effect. Such forfeiture shall include all dividends declared in respect of the forfeited shares, and not actually paid before the forfeiture.

If notice not complied with, shares may be forfeited.

The forfeiture may be held valid although this clause has not been strictly observed. Woolaston's case, 4 De G. & J. 437; Knight's case, 2 Ch. 321.

Of course the directors are not bound to exercise the power of forfeiture (Bigg's case, 1 Eq. 309), and will not do so if it is not to the interest of the company.

26a. When any share shall have been so forfeited, notice of the resolution shall be given to the member in whose name it stood immediately prior to the forfeiture, and an entry of the forfeiture, with the date thereof, shall forthwith be made in the register.]

Notice after forfeiture.

This clause is sometimes inserted, and it seems reasonable in order that the member may have an opportunity of getting the forfeiture annulled under clause 28. It does not follow that the failure to give the notice invalidates the Form 251. forfeiture. Webster's case, 32 L. J. Ch. 135; 7 L. T. 618. For the ex-holder of the forfeited shares being no longer a member, has no locus standi to exact compliance with the articles.

Forfeited share to become property of
company.

27. Any share so forfeited shall be deemed to be the ppty of the coy, and the directors may sell, re-allot, and otherwise dispose of the same in such manner as they think fit.

This clause is almost always inserted.

The articles generally give power to the directors to sell forfeited shares as above. They can sell at a discount, that is for less than the amount paid up prior to the forfeiture, and they are not bound to treat the shares as if nothing had been paid on them. Morrison v. Trustees' Executors Co. (1899), 68 L. J. Ch. 11; 79 L. T. 605 (C. A.). But the transferee will be a holder of shares in respect of which money is due, and may therefore by a clause in the regulations be debarred from voting under an article disentitling a shareholder in default to vote. Randt Gold Mining Co. v. Wainwright, (1901) 1 Ch. 184. And he is liable notwithstanding the issue to him of a certificate that his shares are discharged from all calls prior to date. New Balkis Eersteling v. Randt Co., (1904) A. C. 165. He should, however, unless otherwise agreed, be credited with subsequent payments by the proper owner. Randt Gold Mining Co. (1904) 2 Ch. 468.

And see infra, note to clause 29.

Where a forfeiture is duly and bona fide effected, equity will not relieve against it. Sparks v. Liverpool Waterworks Co., 13 Ves. 428. A shareholder who desires to challenge a forfeiture as invalid may bring an action to set it aside (Sweeny v. Smith (1867), 7 Eq. 324; and see Johnson v. Lytle's &c. Co., supra, and Re New Chile Co., 45 Ch. D. 598); and mere laches will not disentitle a legal owner of shares to relief against an invalid forfeiture. Garden Gully, &c. Co. v. McLister, 1 App. Cas. 39. But his having been a party to the forfeiture as director will disentitle him to relief. Jones v. North Vancouver Land Co., (1910) A. C. 317.

A shareholder whose shares have been irregularly forfeited (e.g., without proper notice) can sue the company or, in a winding-up, prove for damages against the company. In re New Chile, &c. Co., 45 C. D. 598.

A director who takes part in a forfeiture resolution of shares in which he is interested may be estopped from questioning the appointment of the directors who concurred therein. Jones v. North Vancouver Land Co., supra.

A clause in a company's articles forfeiting the shares of any shareholder who should commence or threaten an action against the company or the directors on payment to the shareholder of the full market value of his shares is invalid. Hopps v. International Financial Society (1876), 4 C. D. 327. It is a violation of the shareholder's common law right of action.

annul
forfeiture.

28. The directors may, at any time before any share so forfeited shall have been sold, re-allotted, or otherwise disposed of, annul the forfeiture thof upon such conditions as they think fit.

The regulations very commonly give power to the directors so long as they have not sold to annul a forfeiture on such terms as they think proper, but this power can not be exercised without the consent of the late holder. Exchange Trust, Limited, Larkworthy's case, (1903) 1 Ch. 711.

29. Any member whose shares have been forfeited shall, notwithstanding, be liable to pay, and shall forthwith pay to the coy, all calls, instalments, interest, and expenses, owing upon or in respect of such shares at the time of the forfeiture, together with interest thereon, from the time of forfeiture until payment, at [5] p.c.p.a., and the directors may enforce the payment thereof if they think fit.

Arrears to be paid notwithstanding forfeiture.

Forfeiture of shares prima facie prevents any action by the company for past calls (Stocken's case, 3 Ch. 415), and when a person has been induced by misrepresentation to become a member, forfeiture places him in a position, if sued by the company, to set up the misrepresentation by way of defence, even in a winding-up. Aaron's Reef v. Twiss, (1890) A. C. 273. But the articles commonly provide that where a share has been forfeited the member shall still be liable for payment of the call with interest, and this creates a new obligation which can be enforced. Stocken's case, supra; Ladies' Dress Association v. Fulbrook, (1900) 2 Q. B. 376.

A call may be "owing" within the meaning of such a clause, though it has not become payable when the forfeiture takes place. Faure v. Phillipart, 38 L. T. 525.

Nor does the forfeiture of a share relieve the ex-holder from all liability in respect thereof, for if the company should be wound up within a year after the forfeiture, he will still be liable as a past member to the extent specified in sect. 123 (1) (i) of the Act. Creyke's case, L. R. 5 Ch. 63. So a shareholder who has transferred his shares within a year of a winding-up is liable as a past member, though the shares have been forfeited in the hands of a transferee. Bridger's and Neill's cases (1869), L. R. 4 Ch. 266.

A liquidator has no power to cancel a forfeiture of shares duly made by the directors before the commencement of the winding-up. Dawe's case, 6 Eq. 232.

When shares forfeited for non-payment of calls are sold, the purchaser is liable to a fresh call in respect of the capital comprised in such prior calls (New Balkis Everetling v. Randt Gold Mining Co., (1904) A. C. 163), for the company cannot sell free from that liability. But subsequent payments by the ex-holder, on account of the prior calls, should be credited to the purchaser in due course. Randt Gold Mining Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 468.

If a company proves in the bankruptcy of a shareholder for future calls, and receives less than the full amount, this does not make the shares paid-up so as to entitle a shareholder to participate in surplus assets. West Coast Gold Fields, (1905) 1 Ch. 597.

[29a. The forfeiture of a share shall involve the extinction of all interest in, and also of all claims and demands against the coy in respect of the share, and all other rights incident to the share, except only such of those rights as by these articles are expressly saved.]

Effect of forfeiture.

Although the above clause is sometimes inserted, it appears to be of little or no value. In substance it merely provides for that which is otherwise provided for, namely, that a forfeited share shall be deemed to be the property of the company. If strictly construed, it would deprive a future holder of the share of the right of voting and of receiving dividends, &c. See Stocken's case, 3 Ch. 412.

In Creyke's case, 5 Ch. 63, it was contended that the forfeiture of shares in Form 251. a company whose articles contained such a clause freed the forfeiting member from liability even as a past member; but it was held that this was not so.

As to proving for damages where a forfeiture is irregular, see New Child. Co., 15 C. D. 598.

Company's
Lien on shares.

[29b. The coy shall have a first and paramount lien upon all the shares [other than fully pd-up shares; omit these words if quotation not required, registered in the name of each member (whether solely or jointly with others), and upon the proceeds of sale thereof, for his debts, liabilities, and engagements, solely or jointly with any other person, to or with the coy, whether the period for the payment, fulfilment, or discharge thof shall have actually arrived or not, and no equitable interest in any share shall be created except upon the footing and condition that clause 12 hof is to have full effect. And such lien shall extend to all dividends from time to time declared in respect of such shares. Unless otherwise agreed, the registration of a transfer of shares shall operate as a waiver of the coy's lien, in any, on such shares.]

It has been usual to give a company a lien in express words as above. The suggestion has been made that a lien might be implied though not expressly given. Lindley on Companies, 6th ed. 635; but this possibility is not relied on in practice. See Pinkett v. Wright, 2 Ha. 120; 12 Cl. & Fin. 761. Probably a lien on the shares gives a lien on the dividends without express mention. Hague v. Danderson, 2 Ex. 741. The Stock Exchange Committee require the insertion of the words "other than fully paid-up shares" in the above clause, the object being that there shall in the case of a fully paid-up share be absolute freedom of transfer.

A clause as above, excepting fully paid-up shares from the lien, may be altered by special resolution so as to be made to apply to fully-paid shares, and if the alteration is made in good faith it will be effective against the holder of shares already fully-paid, although he is the only holder of fully-paid shares in the company. Allen v. Gold Reels of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656; Re Rowe, (1904) 2 K. B. 489.

It is well settled that the lien thus created takes effect as an equitable charge on the shares. Bradford Bank v. Briggs (1887), 12 App. Cas. 29; New London & Co. v. Brodiebank (1882), 21 Ch. D. 302; Ex parte Lewis (1871), L. R. 6 Ch. 818; National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 629, 633, 675. And the case last cited and General Exchange Bank, L. R. 6 Ch. 818, 821, further show that this clause, with the power of sale under clause 29c, constitute a "security" within the meaning of a power to directors to advance funds of the company upon securities, and that the lien and power of sale are not defeated by the board omitting to obtain the certificates of the shares. (1899) 2 Ch. 676.

The clause gives the company a lien for director's remuneration overpaid under a mistake of fact. Bodega Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 276.

And if shares are standing in the names of trustees, and the articles exclude the recognition of equities (clause 12, supra), the company, by virtue of the lien clause, has, as was laid down in New London & Brazilian Bank v. Bank of Brazil, 21 C. Div. 302, a charge which prevails over the title of the cestui que trust; and the company's rights are unaffected, even though it have notice of the equitable interest. See also Re Perkins, 24 Q. B. Div. 613; and supra, p. 651.

Difficult questions, however, sometimes arise as to the company's position after notice of a subsequent mortgage. Form 251.

In Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs (1887), 12 App. Cas. 29, it was decided by the House of Lords that the principle of Hopkinson v. Rolt, 9 H. L. C. 514, applies to a lien clause in articles of association; and, accordingly, that when the company has notice of an equitable mortgage made by a shareholder it cannot, by virtue of the lien clause, obtain priority for any advance made by it to or for any sums becoming due to it from the shareholder after notice of such subsequent mortgage.

In that case the lien clause was that—"The company shall have a first and permanent lien and charge available upon every share of every person who is the holder, or one of several joint holders, thereof, for all debts due from him either alone or jointly with any other person, whether a shareholder or not in the company."

The articles (as the writer knows from inspection) contained no exemption clause. Supra, p. 650.

The company's principal contentions in this case were: (1) that on the true construction of the lien clause (103) in its articles the shareholder had agreed that the company should have a lien ranking in priority to all other charges with or without notice, and that the second mortgagee with notice of this bargain could not establish any claim in violation of it; and (2) that the company was, under sect. 30 of the Act of 1862 (now sect. 27 of the Act of 1908), entitled to disregard the notice as notice of a trust, and, on that ground, entitled to priority.

As to the first of these contentions, the House of Lords held that this was not the meaning of the clause. "I cannot agree," said Lord Blackburn, "that this is the true construction of Art. 103." And Lord Fitzgerald said that the principle of Hopkinson v. Rolt governs the present case unless there is something in Art. 103 which prevents its application. The articles provide for the transfer of shares; . . . but there is no limit to the right of the shareholder to pledge, or raise money on his shares unless it is to be found in Art. 103," and he considered that "full effect may be given to its terms, and yet the lien conferred by it be limited as to liabilities of the shareholder contracted up to the time at which the company shall have had notice that he has ceased to be the beneficial owner of the shares."

As to the second contention, the Lords held that this went too far, and that notice of the mortgage was not notice of a trust within the meaning of sect. 30 of the Act of 1862 (sect. 27 of Act of 1908).

That section provides that "No notice of any trust, expressed, implied, or constructive, shall be entered on the register or be receivable by the registrar in the case of companies under this Act and registered in England or Ireland"; and the importance of thus relieving the company from an obligation to recognize equities is well pointed out by Lord Coleridge, C. J., sitting in the Court of Appeal in Re Perkins, 24 Q. B. D. 613. See extract set out, supra, p. 651. Lord Esher and Fry, L. J., concurred.

Object of sect. 30 of the Act.

Company looks to registered holder.

There are many cases, however, in which it is, in the best interests of a company and of its shareholders, desirable to secure to the company a paramount lien not only for advances made and liabilities to the company incurred before, but after, notice of a subsequent charge. Whether this security can be given has yet to be decided. No doubt (Hopkinson v. Rolt and Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs, supra, show that) a first mortgagee cannot in an ordinary case, after notice of a second charge, insist on priority for subsequent advances, but there is no doubt that such priority can be obtained by the assent of the subsequent incumbrancer, and the question is whether anything short of this will suffice. The suggestion is that where the articles expressly provide for a paramount lien, and contain an exemption clause as above (p. 650), providing that the company "shall not be bound to recognize any equitable or other claim to, or interest in, the share on the part of any other person;" and the lien clause expressly provides that "no equitable interest in any share shall be created except on the footing and condition that [the exemption clause] shall have full effect," that is sufficient to secure the priority. Anyone who claims to have a charge on, or equitable interest in, a share must reasonably be supposed to have read the articles of association, and to take the shares subject to the provisions thereof (see Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs, supra, pp. 632, 663, where Lord Blackburn recognized that this was so), and being thus fixed with notice of the provisions of the articles, it seems difficult to see how the chargees can repudiate those provisions and deny to the company the benefit of the clauses.

That case (Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs) did not decide that there was any inflexible rule of equity making it impossible by the articles to exclude the rule in Hopkinson v. Rolt, supra: on the contrary, the provisions of the articles were carefully considered and it was held that they did not show any intention to exclude the rule, for they in no way attempted to relieve the company from noticing equities. Under these circumstances, the principle of Tulk v. Moxhay (1848), 2 Ph. 772; De Matton v. Gibson (1858), 4 De G. & J. 276; Macdonald v. Law Union, &c. Co. (1873), L. R. 9 Q. B. 328, that a person taking property with notice of an equity attaching thereto is bound thereby, appears applicable.

What sufficient to override the case.

Occasionally the lien clause contains express words to the effect that the lien is to be for all debts and liabilities, "whether incurred before or after notice of any equitable interest in any person other than the registered holder," and these words certainly go far to make the intention manifest; but more commonly the clause is framed as above in order to introduce a negative which some of the cases in equity, supra, pp. 650, 651, treat as material.

When the holder of shares, subject to a lien on the part of the company, sells some of them, the purchaser is entitled to marshal as against an execution creditor of the vendor, and to throw the lien in the first instance upon the shares remaining unsold. Gray v. Stone & Funnell, 69 L. T. 282; W. N. (1893) 133.

As to the rights of a purchaser of shares against the vendor where the company exercises its rights of lien subsequent to the purchase, see Macmurdo, Penfield v. Macmurdo, W. N. (1892) 73.

The right of lien may be discharged by an arrangement between the shareholder and the company, but to effect this the terms must be incompatible with the retention of the lien, or the arrangement must indicate the intention of the parties that the right shall no longer be enforced. Bank of Africa v. Salisbury Gold Mining Co., (1892) A. C. 281.

A lien under a clause of this description is a charge upon the shares within the meaning of sect. 2, sub-sect. vi. of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and consequently sect. 15 applies and entitles the shareholder to require the company, on payment of the sum due, to assign the debt and their lien on the shares to his nominee. Everitt v. Automatic Weighing Machine Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 506.

As to effect of reconstruction, see Re Lewis, 6 Ch. 818.

As to enforcing lien by sale.

[29c. For the purpose of enforcing such lien, the directors may sell the shares subject thereto in such manner as they think fit; but no sale shall be made until such period as aforesaid shall have arrived, and until notice in writing of the intention to sell shall have been served on such member, his exors or admors, and default shall have been made by him or them in the payment, fulfilment, or discharge of such debts, liabilities, or engagements for seven days after such notice.]

The lien is of much greater value if it can be enforced in a summary manner by sale of the share subject to it. Table A (clause 10) now confers on the company such a power of sale. The restriction as to default contained in the latter part of the above clause is not in universal use, but it seems only fair and equitable. See observations of Jessel, M. R., in Stockton Malleable Iron Co., 2 C. D. 101. "Default" means "non-payment." Williams v. Stern, 5 Q. B. D. 109. Where there is a lien, but no power of sale, it was considered necessary to bring an action to enforce a sale. New London & Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank, 21 C. Div. 302; 30 W. R. 422, 737. But as the Conveyancing Act applies (see Everitt v. Automatic, &c. Co., supra), it may be that under sect. 19 of that Act a sale might be made by the company as mortgagee. No doubt the charge is not given "by deed," only by articles, but articles by virtue of sect. 14 of the Act operate as if the shareholder had thereby covenanted.

[29d. The net proceeds of any such sale shall be applied in or towards satisfaction of the said debts, liabilities, or engagements, and the residue (if any) paid to such member, his execs., admors., or assigns.]

Application of proceeds of sale.

30. Upon any sale after forfeiture or for enforcing a lien in purported exercise of the powers hitherto given, the directors may cause the purchaser's name to be entered in the register in respect of the shares sold, and the purchaser shall not be bound to see to the regularity of the proceedings, or to the application of the purchase money, and after his name has been entered in the register in respect of such shares, the validity of the sale shall not be impeached by any person, and the remedy of any person aggrieved by the sale shall be in damages only and against the company exclusively.

Validity of sales under clauses 27 and 29c.

Compare this and the preceding clause with clause 11 of Table A, 1908.

Where there are calls in arrear, the purchaser is not liable thereon, but he is liable to have a fresh call made on him for the like amount. Balkis Eersteling v. Randt Gold Mining Co., (1904) A. C. 165. See supra, note to clause 29.

Where the company threatens to sell without justification, the existence of this clause renders it expedient for the shareholder to apply for an injunction before the sale is effected; for after sale it will be difficult, if not impossible, to recover the shares.

As to the rights of a member whose shares have been wrongfully forfeited to damages in the winding-up of the company, see New Chile Co., 45 C. D. 598.

Transfer and Transmission.

By sect. 22 of the Act of 1908, shares are to be "transferable in manner provided by the articles of the company." Hence, it is necessary to provide for transfers. It is well settled that, save so far as restricted by the articles, the right of transfer is absolute. It would not be within the province of this work to enter into a consideration of the numerous cases relating to transfer, but the following may be mentioned: Weston's case, 4 Ch. 20; Gilbert's case, 5 Ch. 559. According to the principles laid down in these cases, the articles are not to be looked at to see whether they give a right to transfer, for the statute gives that, but whether they restrict the right and what form they require. A transfer even to a pauper to escape liability, if out-and-out, is valid (De Pass's case, 4 De G. & J. 544; Cawley & Co., 42 C. Div. 209; Discoveries Finance

Form 251. Corp., Lindlar's case, (1910) 1 Ch. 312 (C. A.), overruling case of same name reported in 1908, 1 Ch. 141), and it makes no difference that the transferee was paid to take the transfer (Slater's case, 35 Beav. 391). Moreover, if the articles restrict the right in a specified case, then the maxim "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius" applies. Weston's case, ubi supra. So where there was power to decline to register a transfer made by a member indebted to the company, or, in case of shares not fully paid up, to a transferee of whom the directors did not approve, it was held that a holder of fully paid-up shares, not indebted to the company, might distribute his shares among a number of nominees, although his object was to secure to himself the maximum of voting power at a pending meeting of the company, contrary to the spirit of the company's articles. Stranton Steel and Iron Co., 16 Eq. 559; and Pender v. Lushington, 6 C. D. 70. See also Cannon v. Trask, 20 Eq. 669, 675; and see Abbotsford Hotel v. Kingham, 102 L. T. 118 (C. A.). And in Stockton Malleable Iron Co., 2 C. Div. 101, there was power to decline to register any transfer of shares whilst the member making the transfer was indebted to the company on any account whatever. The company was indorsee of a bill accepted by a member, but not yet payable. On the construction of the articles, it was held that indebted meant indebted in respect of a debt due and payable, and consequently that the member had a right to transfer, notwithstanding that the company held his acceptance. See also Moffat v. Farquhar, 7 C. D. 591; and Cawley & Co., 42 C. Div. 209.

A director who is a shareholder has as free a right of transfer as a member who is not a director. Cawley & Co., 42 C. Div. 209. And it is submitted that he is not even bound to keep his qualification shares. But his office is vacated if "he ceases at any time to hold his qualification . . . and [he is] incapable of being re-appointed director . . . until he has obtained his qualification." Sect. 73 (2), Companies Act, 1908. The decision in South London Fish Mar. Co., 39 C. Div. 324, on this point, was based on the terms of the special Act, and there appears to be no foundation for the doubt expressed in Gilbert's case, ubi supra.

Where a company is threatened with insolvency, it may be the duty of the executive to refuse to register transfers. Alex. Mitchell's case, 4 App. Cas. 567; Nelson Mitchell v. City of Glasgow Bank, 4 App. Cas. 624. But see contra, Taurine Co., 25 C. Div. 118; and Violet Consolidated, &c. Co., W. N. (1899) 66; 68 L. J. Ch. 535; 80 L. T. 684.

An agreement for the sale of a share does not bind the seller to procure the registration of the transfer. His duty is performed when he hands over to the transferee a duly executed transfer. Skinner v. City of London, &c. Co., 14 Q. B. Div. 882; London Foundry Assoc. v. Clarke, 20 Q. B. Div. 576; Casey v. Bentley, (1902) 1 I. R. 376. But until registration of the transfer the transferor is a trustee of the shares for the transferee. Loring v. Davis, 32 Ch. D. 625; Hardoon v. Belilion, (1901) A. C. 118; Stevenson v. Wilson, (1907) P. C. 445. If the buyer wishes to protect himself, he must buy with "registration guaranteed."

The complete legal title is not obtained by the transferee until the transfer is registered. Soc. Gen. v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 20; Shropshire Union Co. v. The Queen, L. R. 7 H. L. 496; Roots v. Williamson, 38 C. D. 485; Powell v. London and Provincial Bank, (1893) 1 Ch. 610; Ireland v. Hart, (1902) 2 Ch. 527. Before that he cannot be sued for calls. Ural Gold Fields v. Pappa, 15 T. L. R. 330. Hence the importance of securing registration. If the company improperly refuses registration, it will be liable to an action for damages. Skinner v. City of London, &c. Co., ubi supra; Otton Kopje Diamond Mines, (1893) 1 Ch. 618. Moreover, proceedings can be taken by the transferor or transferee for rectification of the register and damages under sect. 32 of the Act; but unless an order is made for rectification of the register the Court would appear to have no jurisdiction under this section, except by consent, to direct a company to pay damages. Form 251.

A company is not bound to register at once. It may inquire, e.g., as to the authenticity of the transfer. Sec. Gén. v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 41; Ottos Kopje Diamond Mines, ubi supra; Ireland v. Hart, (1902) 1 Ch. 522. A transfer must be duly stamped, and the directors may properly refuse registration where the face consideration in the transfer is not the real consideration. Maynard v. Consolidated Kent Collieries Corp., (1903) 2 K. B. 121.

Where there is power to reject a transfer, and the transferor is indebted to the company in respect of calls or otherwise at the date when the matter came before the directors, the company must register the transfer, unless the indebtedness existed when the transfer was left for registration. Cawley & Co., 12 C. Div. 209.

A company cannot refuse to register a transfer of shares to a bankrupt director on the ground that if registered the shares will pass to the trustee in bankruptcy. Sutton v. English and Colonial Produce Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 502.

The secretary of a company has no authority to pass transfers (Chida Mines, Ltd. v. Anderson, 22 T. L. J. 100) nor has a manager. Whitchurch (George), Ltd. v. Cavanagh, 85 L. T.

Great care should be taken by directors in regard to transfers, for if they pass a forged transfer, or a transfer executed under a forged power of attorney, the company may incur serious loss, for in the absence of special provision, registration of a forged transfer cannot defeat the title of the true owner of the shares or stock, and if his name has been removed from the register the company may be compelled to reinstate it. Davis v. Bank of England; Bart v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., 38 Ch. D. 149.

A person who presents a forged transfer to a company for registration, and procures such registration, is liable, though acting in good faith, to indemnify the company. Sheffield Corp. v. Barclay, (1905) A. C. 392. See infra, Chap. XIV.

Where there are joint registered holders, a transfer, to be effective, must be executed by all, and if the signature of any one be forged the transfer will be void. Barton v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., 24 Q. B. D. 77.

Where shares are allotted to A. and before he is registered as a member he transfers to B., the company may register B. without registering A. Nicol's case, 29 C. D. 434. And so, too, where A. being the registered holder transfers to B., and he to C., the company may register C.

As to lunatics.—Shares held by a lunatic member, or by joint holders, one of whom is a lunatic, can only be transferred pursuant to an order in lunacy and by the person named in the order. See Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 133, 136—139.

A Master in Lunacy cannot make a vesting order as to shares in trustees, one of whom is a lunatic, on appointment of new trustees. Re Longdale, (1901) 1 Ch. 3.

As to charging orders on a lunatic's property, see Re Hunt, (1900) 2 Ch. 54, n.

As to transferring shares in name of unfound lunatic residing abroad, see Indisheim v. London & Westminster Bank, (1900) 2 Ch. 15.

As to infants.—Transfers can only be made in pursuance of an order of some Court of competent jurisdiction, e.g., the Chancery Division, and by the person named in the order.

As to powers of attorney.—A member can transfer his shares by attorney, but the power of attorney must be left with the transfer, and should either be retained by the company or should be filed pursuant to the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 48 (infra, Chap. XV.). It should be duly authenticated, and, unless it is irrevocable under sect. 8 or 9 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (infra, Form 251. Chap. XV.), evidence should be adduced that at the time the transfer was signed the appointor was alive.

As to married women.—A married woman can transfer without the concurrence of her husband. Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 9.

As to voting orders, see the Trustee Act, 1893. New Zealand, &c. Co., (1893) 1 Ch. 403; Re Gregson, (1893) 3 Ch. 233; Re Dypaunin, (1910) 1 Ch. 223.

In a voluntary winding-up a transfer may be made with the consent of the liquidator under sect. 131 of the Act of 1862. See National Bank of Wales, (1897) 1 Ch. 298.

transfer, &c.

31. The instrument of transfer of any share shall be signed both by the transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain the holder of such share until the name of the transferee is entered in the register in respect thereof.

See Table A (clause 18). The object of requiring the transferee to execute the transfer is to fix him with an agreement to take the shares, and thereby secure him as a member; for by sect. 24 of the Act, an agreement to become a member followed by entry on the register, constitutes membership. See Langer's case, 37 L. J. Ch. 292; W. N. (1868) 8; and Burnes v. Pennell, 2 H. L. Cas. 497; Re Taurine Co., 25 C. D. 118.

The instrument of transfer is not complete until it is signed by both parties (Marino's case, 2 Ch. 596), and accordingly registration cannot be enforced as against the company until it is so signed, but the company may waive the transferee's signature. See the above case.

Where A. transfers to himself and others, A. need only execute once.

A transfer may be good as against the transferor, even though not executed by the transferee. Re Dodds, Ex parte Brown and Coates, 64 L. T. 476.

The main object of the latter part of the clause is to give effect to the provisions as to calls, so that a member upon whom a call has been made shall not be able to avoid forfeiture by a transfer.

As between transferor and transferee, there is an implied contract by the latter to indemnify the former against all liability in respect of the shares during the time that the transferee holds them. Kellock v. Enthoven, L. R. 9 Q. B. 241; Loring v. Davis, 32 C. D. 625; Leri v. Ayres, 3 App. Cas. 852; Hardoon v. Belilios, (1901) A. C. 118; Seton, 6th ed. 2362.

Stamp.

A transfer on sale, whether by deed or otherwise, must be stamped with the proper ad valorem duty, in accordance with the Stamp Act, 1891; and see now 9 Edw. 7, c. 43, ss. 7, 12 (2); and under sect. 17 of the said Act of 1891 any person whose office it is to register a transfer is liable to a penalty of 10% if he registers a transfer not duly stamped.

True state-
consideration.

But where a transfer appears, having regard to its contents, to be duly stamped, it is not the duty of the secretary to cross-examine the depositor in order to ascertain whether the consideration is truly stated; omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta. Thus, if the consideration expressed is 5s., and the stamp 10s., there is no need to go further. But if directors become aware that the consideration stated on the face of the transfer is not the true consideration, they may go behind it and require the proper stamp for the true consideration to be affixed. Maynard v. Consolidated Kent Collieries, (1903) 2 K. B. 121.

Where the regulations merely require the transfer to be in writing, it will not be the less effective because it is under seal. Ortigosa v. Brown, 38 L. T. 845. But where a deed is necessary, it must be duly signed, sealed and delivered. Powell v. Lond. & Prov. Bank, (1893) 2 Ch. 555. And a printed circle, with the words "Place of seal," is not equivalent to a seal. Balkis Co., Form 251.

36 W. R. 392.

As to composition for stamp duties on transfer, see Stamp Act, 1891, s. 114.

As to giving the numbers of shares on a transfer of shares in bank, see Leeman's Act, 30 Vict. c. 29. A custom of the Stock Exchange to disregard this Act is unreasonable and void. Perry v. Barnett, 15 Q. B. D. 388; see, however, Neymour v. Bridge, 14 Q. B. D. 460.

A registered transfer is presumed, prima facie, to be accepted by the transferee even where he has not executed it. Standing v. Bowring, 31 C. D. 282.

32. The instrument of transfer of any share shall be in writing in the [usual common form or in the] following form, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit: - Form of transfer.

The Stock Exchange Committee require the words in brackets, so that the ordinary form of transfer sold by stationers and others may suffice.

I, A. B., of —, in conson of the sum of — pounds paid to me by C. D., of —, hmftr called the sd transferee, do hby transfer to the sd transferee — share [or shares], numbered —, in the undertaking called the — Coy, Limtd, to hold unto the sd transferee, his executors, administrators and assigns, subject to the several conditions on which [I] held the same immediately before the execution hof; and I the sd transferee do hby agree to take the sd share [or shares] subject to the conditions afcd. As witness our hands, the — day of —.

Witness to the signature of, &c.

The directors may refuse to register if the prescribed form is not substantially followed, but they may waive any irregularity, e.g., non-signature by the transferee. Marino's case, L. R. 2 Ch. 596. When the articles require the transfer to be "in the usual common form," registration cannot be refused because particulars found in a common form, but which in the circumstances are immaterial, are omitted. Letheby and Christopher, Ltd., (1904) 1 Ch. 815.

It is generally expedient to use the above form. It differs slightly from the form given in Table A., clause 19; but it is in general use, and can be purchased at stationers and elsewhere. Sometimes the articles require a transfer to be by deed; but this requisition causes inconvenience and secures no benefit. Thus where the transfer may be by instrument in writing as above, the shareholder may sign a blank transfer, and hand it over to a purchaser or mortgagee, with authority to the holder of it for the time being to fill in the name of a transferee; and such a transfer when filled up can be sent in for registration, and no objection can be raised by the company to its validity. Ex parte Sargent, 17 Eq. 273; Tees Bottle Co., 33 L. T. 834; Kimberley Co., 58 L. T. 305. But where a deed is required, this convenient plan is not properly available; for a deed executed in blank is inoperative as a legal transfer. Hibblewhite v. McMorine, 6 M. & W. 209; Powell v. Lond. & Prov. Bank, (1893) 2 Ch. 555; France v. Clark, 26 Ch. D. 267; Ex parte Sargent, 17 Eq. 273; Tees Bottle Co., 33 L. T. 834. Nevertheless, such are the exigencies of business, that even where a deed is required blank transfers are frequently resorted to, in the expectation that the company will not notice or take advan-

Form 251. tage of the irregularity. It seems, however, desirable to make the articles accord with the general practice.

When a deed is necessary, the directors have no power to dispense with it. Murray v. Bush, L. R. 6 H. L. 50.

If the articles expressly permit a transfer by instrument in writing, the practice of the company having always been to require a deed cannot make a deed obligatory. Re Tahiti Cotton Co., 17 Eq. 273. It appears from the decision of the Court of Appeal, in France v. Clark, supra, that though the delivery to a mortgagee of a certificate of title and blank transfer may give him an implied right, where a deed is not required, to insert his own name, the right does not pass to his assigns.

In some cases the delivery of blank transfers may establish an estoppel as against the transferor. Colonial Bank v. Williams, 15 App. Cas. 267. But there is no presumption of re-delivery of a blank transfer. See Powell v. London, &c. Bank, ubi supra; and see Chap. XV., infra.

Where for valuable consideration, e.g., an advance, the shareholder delivers blank transfers, he may be taken to bind himself not to interfere with registration. Hooper v. Herts, (1906) 1 Ch. 549 (C. A.).

"Subject to the several conditions on which I hold." Do these words in the transfer subject the transferee to a lien existing as against the transferor? It is generally assumed that they do not. They do not affect the transferee with notice of facts known to the transferor. Westmoreland Green, &c. Co., (1893) 2 Ch. 612. But it has been held that they do bind the transferee to pay calls not paid prior to the registration of the transfer and enable the company to sue him. Herbert Gold Co. v. Haycraft, C. A., Times, 28 March, 1901; and see Randt Gold Mining Co. v. Wainwright, (1901) 1 Ch. 184.

As to the effect of executing a transfer with the words "in trust" added, see London and Canadian Loan, &c. Co. v. Duggan, (1893) A. C. 306 (P. C.).

It is misfeasance for directors who have accepted their qualification from the promoter to execute a blank transfer of such shares in trust for the promoter. London and South Western Canal Co., (1911) 1 Ch. 346.

A transfer ought to state the consideration truly (sect. 5 of Stamp Act, 1891), but if the full duty is paid, the penalty will not be enforced. Furness Rail. v. Commissioners, 33 L. J. Ex. 173. And the non-statement does not affect the validity of the transfer. Powell v. London and Provincial Bank, (1893) 2 Ch. 555. But it may entitle the directors to refuse registration till the proper stamp is affixed. Maynard v. Consolidated Kent Collieries, (1903) 2 K. B. 121.

A transfer of a bankrupt's share may be as follows:—

"Whereas at the date of the order hereinafter mentioned A. B., of —, was registered in the books of The — Company, Limited (hereinafter called the company), as the proprietor of ten shares, numbered —, in the said company, of 10*l.* each. And whereas an order of adjudication of bankruptcy was on the 1st day of June, 1908, made against the said A. B., and on the — day of — I was duly appointed trustee of the property of the said A. B., and such appointment was certified by the Board of Trade on, &c.; [or, but no trustee has ever been appointed of the property of the said A. B., and I, as chief official receiver, am trustee thereof]. Now I, S., of —, in consideration, &c., do hereby, as trustee of the estate of the said A. B., transfer unto the said transferee the said shares, numbered —, in the undertaking called, &c. To be — into the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, subject to all the several conditions on which the said A. B. held the same at the date of the said order of adjudication. And I, the said transferee, do hereby agree to take the said shares, subject to the same conditions."

In considering the form of transfer the directors must not be too technical. Thus, where the articles required a transfer to be in the usual common form, according to which the address of the transferor and the distinctive numbers should appear, and the transfer tendered omitted these particulars, but was accompanied by the transferor's share certificate giving the omitted particulars, it was held that the transfer should be registered. Ethchy v. Christopher, Ltd., Jones's case, (1904) 1 Ch. 815.

Form 251.

33. The directors may decline to register any transfer of shares [or stock, to be omitted if quotation required] upon which the coy has a lien; and in the case of shares not fully pd up, may refuse to register a transfer to a transferee of whom they do not approve.

In what cases directors may decline to register transfer.

If desired, add the words, "And shall not be bound to give any reason for such refusal." But these words are implied, see infra.

From what has been said in the note preceding clause 31, it appears that if the right of transfer is to be restricted, express provisions must be inserted in the articles for the purpose.

It is not found in practice that a clause as above affects the market value of the shares; for it is always assumed that the transfer will be passed, and, of course, it generally is. If, however, the company has a lien, the clause enables it to preserve the same; and this is often a matter of importance. It is expedient, as above, to make the clause apply to any case where the company has a lien, and not merely, as is often done, to the case of a member who is "indebted" to the company. See Stockton Malleable Iron Co., 2 C. Div. 101; and see also supra, note to clause 29a. As to clause 20 of Table A. (old), see Ex parte Stringer, 9 Q. B. D. 436. See now Table A. (new), clause 20.

It is generally thought sufficient, in addition to providing for the preservation of the lien, to give the directors power to decline to register a transfer of shares, not fully paid up, to a transferee of whom they do not approve. If the company gets into difficulties, this will enable the directors to prevent the introduction of insolvent members. Where such a discretion is given, the directors will not, if acting bonâ fide, be compelled to give their reasons for refusing to register a transfer, and no unfavourable inference can be drawn from their declining to give any reason, but if the directors choose to give their reasons the Court will then consider whether they are legitimate or not. Bell Brothers, 65 L. T. 245; 7 T. L. R. 689 (Chitty, J.).

If they exercise their power capriciously or wantonly, it must be alleged and proved; the Court will then interfere, but not otherwise. Ex parte Penney, 8 Ch. 452. "I cannot," said James, L. J., in that case, "conceive that any director would choose to accept office, or exercise the power entrusted to him, if he were liable to be called upon to say what the particular reasons were, or the particular motive was, which influenced him in coming to the conclusion that any person was not eligible as a shareholder. . . . I am of opinion that we cannot sit as a Court of Appeal from the conclusion which the directors have arrived at, if we are satisfied that the directors have done that which alone they could be compelled by mandamus to do, to take the matter into their consideration." See also Coalport China Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 404; and Hannan's King, &c. Co., 14 T. L. R. 314, to the like effect. In Puckle's case, Jessel, M. R., said that where the articles authorized the directors to refuse to register a transfer "if they were of opinion that the transferee was not a responsible person," there was no appeal from their decision. L. J. Notes of Cases, 1875, 19. But if the directors' reason is disclosed, and is a bad one, or if it is proved that they are acting otherwise than bonâ fide in the interests of the company, the Court will intervene, and order rectification of the register. Bell Brothers, 65 L. T. 245; 7 T. L. R. 689; Ceylon Land and Produce Co., 7 T. L. R. 692; cf. Sun Fire Office v. Hart, 14 App. Cas. 98.

If the directors refuse, they are not under any obligation to send notice of their refusal to the transferor. Gustard's case, 8 Eq. 438.

Directors may refuse to pass a transfer if they find that the stamp is on the face consideration, not the real consideration, and insufficient. Maynard v. Consolidated Kent Collieries, (1905) 2 K. B. 122.

Where the directors have a discretion and exercise it bonâ fide by passing the transfer, they are not liable for loss occurring to the company by reason of the transferee proving insolvent. Faure Electric Accumulator Co., 40 C. D. 141; 37 W. R. 116. Restrictions on transfer are strictly construed. Bentham Mills Spinning Co., 11 C. D. 900.

The discretion under this clause may, by virtue of clause 109, be delegated to a single director. Taurine Co., 25 C. Div. 142. A director may take part in approving of a transfer to himself (Bush's case, 6 Ch. 262), and a share certificate being signed by a director who is also a partner will, none the less, protect the partnership by estoppel (Coasters, Ltd., 103 L. T. 632).

Where directors suspect a breach of trust they should give notice that they will have to register unless an injunction is obtained. Grundy v. Briggs, (1910) 1 Ch. 444.

No transfer to infant, &c.

The above is sometimes inserted. Even apart from such a clause, a company cannot be compelled to accept an infant transferee; and, if shares be transferred to an infant, the company may, on discovering the infancy, decline to confirm the transfer, and upon motion under sect. 32 of the Act, can procure the rectification of the register by restoring the name of the transferor. Symons' case, 5 Ch. 301. The principle is that a man who executes a transfer remains liable, unless and until there is on the list a transferee who is legally liable to the company. But an infant allottee or transferee is clearly not liable in respect of shares standing in his name; for he cannot effectually contract to take shares; and by reason of sect. 2 of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62), no action can be brought to charge the infant on any ratification after full age. To charge him there must be a new promise. Acting as a member after full age may afford evidence of such a new promise. Ditcham v. Worrall, 5 C. P. Div. 410; Curtis' case, 6 Eq. 455; Mann's case, L. R. 3 Ch. 459, n.; Capper's case, L. R. 3 Ch. 458. If, however, the company has knowingly acquiesced in accepting an infant shareholder it will be bound. Parson's case, 8 Eq. 656. And so also if it has allowed the infant to transfer his shares. Gooch's case, 8 Ch. 266.

If shares are allotted to an infant, and repudiated when he comes of age, he may recover what he paid the company in respect thereof. Hamilton v. Vaughan Sherrin Co., (1894) 3 Ch. 589.

A director allotting to an infant son constitutes misfeasance. Creave, Wheel Mining Co., L. R. 8 Ch. 45. In the case of shares which are only in part paid up, the company may refuse to pass a transfer to a person residing abroad. And the seller of such shares on the London Stock Exchange may decline to transfer to a person so residing. Goldschmidt v. Jones, 22 L. T. 221.

Under the old law a company could not be compelled to register a transfer to a corporation and an ordinary individual jointly. Law Guarantee, &c. Soc., 24 Q. B. D. 406.

But the law in this respect has been altered by the Bodies Corporate Joint Tenancy Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20), sect. 1 of which enacts as follows:

(1) A body corporate shall be capable of acquiring and holding any real or personal property in joint tenancy in the same manner as if it were an individual; and where a body corporate and an individual, or two or more bodies corporate, become entitled to any such property under circumstances or by virtue of any instrument which would, if the body corporate had been an individual, have created a joint tenancy, they shall be entitled to the property as joint tenants. Provided that the acquisition and holding of property by a body corporate in joint tenancy shall be subject to the like conditions and restrictions as attach to the acquisition and holding of property by a body corporate in severalty.

Form 251.

property as joint tenants.

- (2) Where a body corporate is joint tenant of any property, then on its dissolution the property shall devolve on the other joint tenant.

As to married women, see the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), and the Act of 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1.

Married women.

This Act places a married woman transferee in the same position as if she were a feme sole, and renders her liable on her contracts to the extent of her separate property. But, unless satisfactory evidence of separate estate is produced, the directors might properly (where they have a discretion) refuse to register a transfer to a married woman of shares involving any liability. See proviso at end of sect. 7 of the Act of 1882.

[33b. The company adopts the Forged Transfers Acts, 1891 and 1892, and the directors shall have full power to give effect thereto.]

Forged
Transfers
Acts.

A clause as above is occasionally inserted, but it is superfluous, for, notwithstanding its omission, the Acts will apply.

The Forged Transfers Act, 1891, as amended by the Forged Transfers Act, 1892, provides that where a company issue or have issued shares, stock, or securities transferable by instrument in writing, or by an entry in any books or register kept by or on behalf of the company, they shall have power to make compensation, by a cash payment out of their funds, for any loss arising from a transfer of any such share, stock, or securities in pursuance of a forged transfer or of a transfer under a forged power of attorney, whether such loss arises and whether the transfer or power of attorney was forged before or after the passing of this Act, and whether the person receiving such compensation, or any person through whom he claims, has or has not paid any fee, or otherwise contributed to any fund out of which the compensation is to be paid.

The Acts empower the company, by fees or otherwise, to provide a fund to meet claims for compensation, and to raise the amount by mortgages, and to impose such reasonable restrictions on the transfer of shares, stocks, or securities, or with respect to powers of attorney for the transfer thereof, as they may consider requisite for guarding against losses arising from forgery.

These Acts, it is to be observed, do not impose upon the company any obligation to pay. They only give power to make compensation, i.e., if the company chooses. Hence there is no objection to adopting the Acts by the articles or to passing (as many companies have) a resolution adopting the Acts, for in neither case is the company bound to pay any particular claim unless it thinks fit so to do.

The Acts were no doubt intended for the benefit of a purchaser who, having in good faith paid for and been registered as the holder of shares, stock, or securities, found himself subsequently deprived of what he had bought in consequence of its being proved that the transfer to him was forged or was executed under a forged power of attorney. The wording is not very clear, but it is submitted that it is capable of this construction, and the purport of the Acts. True, the loss in such a case is not one "arising from a transfer," for

Form 251. there is no valid transfer, and the loss arises from the fraud of the forger; but to make sense of the enactment it may be allowable to read in the words "the invalidity of" after the word "from."

Transfer to be
of title given.

34. Every instrument of transfer shall be left at the office for registration, accompanied by the certificate of the shares to be transferred, and such other evidence as the company may require to prove the title of the transferor, or his right to transfer the shares.

It is expedient to have a clause of this kind because of the liabilities which a company incurs if it issues a certificate of shares in pursuance of a forged transfer. Further, infra, Chap. XIV. It should use the utmost caution in regard to registration of transfers.

As against the real owner, a forged transfer is a mere nullity, and accordingly the real owner can compel the company, if it has removed his name from the register, to reinstate him as the holder of the shares, and to pay him all dividends which have been declared on the shares whilst his name was off the register. Davis v. Bank of England, 2 Bing. 393; Barton v. North Staffordshire Rail. Co., 38 C. D. 459; Barton v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., 24 Q. B. Div. 83.

Moreover, if a company has issued to the transferee claiming under the forged transfer a certificate of title to the shares, the company will be liable to pay damages to any third person who acts on the faith of such certificate being regular, e.g., by buying or lending money on the shares. Bahia, &c. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 584; Ottos Kopje Diamond Mines, Limited, (1893) 1 Ch. 618. And the company is under the same liability even to the transferee, where he acts on the faith of the certificate, e.g., by entering into a contract to sell the shares (Tompkinson v. Balkis Co., (1893) A. C. 396; Hart v. Frontino, L. R. 5 Ex. 111; Bloomenthal v. Ford, (1897) App. Cas. 156), or by paying a call. Where, however, the certificate has been issued and sent by the company's secretary without the directors' authority and for his own purposes, the company is not estopped from disputing it. Ruben v. Great Fingall Consolidated, (1906) A. C. 439. As to the measure of damages, see Ottos Kopje, &c. Limited, supra.

But though the company incurs these liabilities, it has its redress against the transferee. Thus, if a person claiming under a forged transfer sends in to the company and procures the registration of such transfer and the issue of a fresh certificate, he is bound, though acting in good faith, to indemnify the company against consequent loss incurred by the company. Corporation of Sheffield v. Barclay, (1905) A. C. p. 392, reversing C. A., (1903) 2 K. B. 580. And see Bank of England v. Cutler, (1907) 1 K. B. 889.

Where a company pays dividends to a transferee under a forged transfer, it is not estopped from denying the transferee's title, and can recover the dividends. Foster v. Pontons and Dry Dock Co., 9 T. L. R. 450. As to proving the forgery, see Copiapu Mining Co., 9 T. L. R. 615.

Very commonly the certificate relating to the shares to be transferred contains words at the foot that "without the production of this certificate no transfer of the shares mentioned therein can be registered." It was held by Farwell, J., in Rainford v. James Keith & Co., (1905) 1 Ch. 296, that these words operated merely as a warning to the shareholder to take care of the certificate, and did not operate as a representation to or contract with a third party, e.g., with a depositary of the certificate who lends money thereon; that the company will not transfer without production of the certificate. On appeal.

the case was decided on another point, (1905) 2 Ch. 147. See also Guy v. Waterlow Brothers, 25 T. L. R. 515. For dicta to the contrary, see Société Générale de Paris v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 29. Form 251.

It is the practice of companies, on having a transfer tendered to them for registration, to give notice to the shareholder before registering it, thus:—
 "Sir,—A transfer of — shares of £— each in the above company, purporting to be executed by you, has been lodged for registration, and unless I hear from you to the contrary within — days the same will be registered. For the company, —, Secretary." The company is under no obligation to give such a notice. Simm v. Anglo-Amer. Co., 5 Q. B. Div. 205. And a shareholder who does not answer the letter is not thereby estopped from impeaching a forged transfer. Barton v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., 24 Q. B. Div. 77. Gross negligence on the part of a shareholder may, however, preclude relief in case of a forged transfer. Coles v. Bank of England, 10 Ad. & El. 437.

A clause is occasionally to be found in articles, providing, inter alia, that the directors shall not be bound to inquire into the authenticity of any transfer; but such a clause seems inexpedient; and where a quotation on the Stock Exchange is desired, the Committee of the London Stock Exchange always require the clause, if contained in the articles, to be struck out by a special resolution altering the articles.

Even without the words in clause 34 as to the certificate, the concluding words would justify the directors in calling for a deposit of the certificate for examination. East Wheel, &c. Co., 33 Beav. 119.

Where the directors have a discretion as to registering a transfer from a member who is indebted to the company, the time when the instrument of transfer is left at the office, not the time when the directors consider the matter, is the critical period. Cawley & Co., 42 C. Div. 209.

CERTIFICATION OF SHARES.

When the holder of shares executes a transfer of them, it is for the transferee, as the party mainly concerned, to get the transfer registered, and in order to do this he must be prepared to hand over, or to procure someone else to hand over, to the company the transferor's certificate of title to such shares. If the certificate comprises the shares transferred and no more, it can of course be handed over with the transfer to the transferee, and then can be delivered by him to the company; but very commonly the certificate includes other shares; for example, the certificate may certify that A. is the holder of 100 shares; if he transfers only 50 he retains 50, and therefore does not want to hand over his certificate to the buyer. And again, if, having 100 shares, he sells 50 to B. and 50 to C., he cannot hand over the certificate to both. In such cases the transferor usually lodges his certificate with the company, and then at his request, or at the request of his broker, the secretary "certifies" the transfers (before they are handed over to the transferees), by stamping in the margin the form of certification and signing the same. The following forms are used:—
 "Certificate lodged for the — Company, Limited, — Secretary," or "Certificate for — shares [has been lodged] at the company's office. Date. Secretary."

A certification of this kind is regarded as a representation by the secretary, on behalf of the company, that the transferor has produced such documents as on the face of them show a prima facie title in the transferor to make the transfer, e.g., a certificate of title that the transferor is the registered holder of the shares comprised in the transfer, or else a certificate that some other person is the registered holder, together with proper transfers from that person to the transferor. In giving such "certifications" the secretary is not supposed to do more than look at the documents produced; if they appear to be in order he certifies; if they are not he refuses to certify; but he is not bound to inquire whether the documents produced to him are genuine or not, or whether the various transfers are valid or invalid in point of law. "He does not warrant the title of the transferor, nor the validity, in point of law, of the various documents which together (purport to) establish his title." Per Lindley, L. J., Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., 25 Q. B. D. 512.

A transfer certified as above is, by the rules of the London Stock Exchange, accepted as good delivery of the shares to a buyer without delivery of the certificate. Irrespective of these rules, a transferee generally requires the certificate or a certified transfer, for the articles of the company usually provide for the production of the certificate before a transfer will be registered. A record of certifications should be kept.

Sometimes an official of the London Stock Exchange certifies.

It was held in one case (Re Concessions Trust, (1896) 2 Ch. 757), that where an instrument, purporting to transfer fully paid up shares, is certified by the secretary as above, the company is, by the certification, estopped from saying that they are not paid up. But it has now been decided by the House of Lords that though a secretary has authority to certify, there is no estoppel if the secretary certifies fraudulently for his own private ends. George W. Church & Co., (1901) A. C. 117. Conf. Ruben v. Great Fingall Consolidated, (1906) A. C. 439.

Certification of transfers given to the secretary is an ordinary business transaction within the power of a trading company. Bishop v. Balkis, &c. Co., 25 Q. B. D. 520.

If the company, after certifying, returns the certificate by mistake to the transferor, and the transferor pledges it in fraud of the transferee, this gives the pledgee no ground of action against the company. Longman v. Bath Electric Tramways, (1905) 1 Ch. 646.

Where the certificate is lodged with a view to the transfer of part only of the shares comprised therein, the company in due course issues to the transferor a fresh certificate for the balance; or, according to the practice of some companies, indorses on the deposited certificate particulars of the shares transferred, and then returns the certificate to the depositor. Sometimes on the deposit, and before the issue of a fresh certificate, the depositor is given a balance ticket.

When transfers to be retained.

[34a. All instruments of transfer which shall be registered shall be retained by the coy, but any instrument of transfer which the directors may decline to register shall be returned to the person depositing the same.]

The above is sometimes used.

Fee on transfer.

35. A fee not exceeding 2s. 6d. may be charged for each transfer, and shall, if required by the directors, be pd before the registration thof.

When transfer books and register may be closed.

36. The transfer books and register of members may be closed during such time as the directors think fit, not exceeding in the whole thirty days in each year.

"The directors may suspend the registration of transfers during the fourteen days immediately preceding the ordinary general meeting in each year."

By sect. 31 of the Act of 1908, it is provided that a company may, by advertisement in some newspaper circulating in the district in which the registered office of the company is situated, close the register of members for any time or times not exceeding in the whole thirty days in each year.

37. The executors or administrators of a deceased member (not being one of several joint holders) shall be the only persons recognized by the company as having any title to the shares registered in the name of such member, and in case of the death of any one or more of the joint registered holders of any shares, the survivors shall be the only persons recognized by the company as having any title to or interest in such shares.

Transmission of registered shares.

As to survivorship.

The first part of this clause is generally inserted in order that the company may not be involved in questions of administration, but may look to the legal personal representatives only.

If desired, provision can be made to the effect that, on the death of a shareholder, the shares shall, if not disposed of specifically by will, pass to some specified person, or be dealt with in a specified manner to the exclusion of the legal personal representatives. As to the validity of such provisions, see Iskby v. Contin, 59 L. T. 224; Davies v. Davies, (1892) 3 Ch. 63.

A deceased member of a limited company remains a member for the purposes of the articles of association so long as his name remains on the register without notice to the company of his death. Per Davey, L. J., New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. v. Peacock, (1894) 1 Q. B. 622, 633 (C. A.). See infra, p. 781.

But when notice of a general meeting is to be given to "the members" it is not necessary to give it to the executors of a deceased member, unless they too are members, for these are not members. Allen v. Gold Reef of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 556. See, however, clause 114 of Table A. as to giving notices of general meetings to executors or administrators.

As to survivorship, see Hill's case, 20 Eq. 595, in which it was held that even without express provision there is a right of survivorship as between joint holders.

To preclude disputes, words are sometimes added to the above clauses to the effect that "Before recognizing any executor or administrator, the directors may require him to take out probate or letters of administration in England." But see note to clause 38.

38. Any person becoming entitled to shares in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of any member, upon producing such evidence that he sustains the character in respect of which he proposes to act under this clause, or of his title, as the directors think sufficient, may, with the consent of the directors (which they shall not be under any obligation to give), be registered as a member in respect of such shares, or may, subject to the regulations as to transfers hereinbefore contained, transfer such shares. This clause is hereafter referred to as "the transmission clause."

As to transfer of shares of deceased or bankrupt members.
Transmission clause.

Form 251. This clause, with more or less variation, is a common one. It is generally expedient, if possible, to secure a member who is living and responsible in the place of a deceased member or one under disability. Of course, if any person, under this clause, becomes a member, he is personally liable to the company on the shares, but this does not affect the equities subsisting between him and the estate of the deceased shareholder, or the infant, lunatic, or other member in whose place he stands.

Even apart from this clause, the personal representatives of a deceased member can transfer; for sect. 29 of the Act of 1908 provides that "a transfer of the share or other interest of a deceased member of a company made by his personal representative shall, although the personal representative is not himself a member, be as valid as if he had been a member at the time of the execution of the instrument of transfer." Until transfer under this power, or until the personal representative personally accepts the shares, the estate of the deceased member is alone liable. See Baird's case, 5 Ch. 725.

The question sometimes arises whether a transfer by one of several executors is effective. According to the general law, each of several executors can sell and transfer the personalty of the testator, but the terms of the company's articles must be considered, and where they are framed as above, or as in Table A, clause 22, it would seem that a transfer must be signed by all.

One of two or more executors registered as shareholders cannot transfer: both or all concur in a transfer. Barton v. North Staffordshire Rail., 38 C. Div. 458; Barton v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., 24 Q. B. Div. 77. See supra.

So long as the share of a deceased member remains standing in his name, his representatives do not become members of the company in respect thereof, but when the representatives are registered, they become personally liable, and the company has nothing more to do with the deceased member. Some companies have been in the habit, on production of probate or letters of administration, of registering the representatives as the holders of the shares, but this is not regular as regards companies under the Act, in the absence of a "distinct and intelligent request on the part of the executors." Per Lord Cairns, L. C., Buchan's case, 4 App. Cas. 588. When registered as members there should be a "clean" registration without any reference to that representative capacity. Re Saunders & Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 415. On such registration the executors or administrators may choose the order in which their names are to stand. Ibid. See Forms 430 et seq., infra.

Where a shareholder testator is domiciled abroad, the company, before recognizing his executor or administrator, must require probate or letters of administration to be obtained in England. This is the evidence on which alone the Court will act, and the company should not accept less conclusive evidence. Fernandes's Exors., 5 Ch. 314; Attorney-General v. New York Breweries Co., (1898) 1 Q. B. 205; affirmed sub nom. New York Breweries Co. v. Attorney-General, (1899) A. C. 62.

As to colonial probate, see Colonial Probates Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. 6).

As to shares in a colonial register, see sects. 34 to 36 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

Occasionally a company which has foreign shareholders obtains a private Act, enabling it to recognize devolutions of title without production of probate. See Ionian Bank (Limited) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. xcix).

By apt words in the articles it would appear possible to provide for the direct devolution of shares to a specified person on the holder's death. Davies v. Davies, (1892) 3 Ch. 63.

Where shares upon which there is a liability form part of the estate of a deceased member, his executors or administrators should advertise in the usual way for claims in accordance with 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35. They will then be in a position to distribute, having regard to the claims of which they have notice, just as if the estate was administered by the Court Clegg v. Rowland, 3 Eq. 318; Re Frewen Co., L. T. 953: see, however, Russell's Executors' case, 15 Sol. J. 790. But they cannot safely ignore a claim not sent in, if they have notice of it. Land Credit Co. v. Markwell, 21 W. R. 35. They may, however, after due advertisement as aforesaid, distribute without making provision for liability in respect of uncalled capital. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 18 Eq. 18; Hobbs v. Wayet, 36 C. D. 256.

Form 251.

If executors or administrators after distribution remain under liability (e.g., as holders of the legal title to partly paid shares), and they are subsequently compelled to pay calls, they are entitled to compel the residuary legatees to refund by way of indemnity (Jervis v. Wolferstan, supra; Wittaker v. Kershaw, 45 C. D. 320), and the company as creditor may, if need be, have the estate administered by the Court, and compel legatees to refund. Gillespie v. Alexander, 2 Russ. C. C. 136; David v. Frowd, 1 My. & K. 209; Williams on Executors, 10th ed., 1085; Seton, 6th ed., 1660.

Prima facie, in an administration action, the Court will not require a fund to be retained in Court to provide for future cases. Mellor v. South Australian Land, &c., (1907) 1 Ch. 72.

Where a shareholder dies insolvent the company may prove for the value of future calls. Fuller v. McMahon, (1900) 1 Ch. 173; Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 37 (2); and see note to Clause 19.

In Tuticorin Co. (1894), 43 W. R. 190, it was held that where the estate of a shareholder was sequestrated in Scotland, and afterwards the shareholder died, the sequestrator was entitled to rank for dividend in the winding-up in the place of the deceased.

By sect. 50 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), when any part of the property of the bankrupt consists of shares transferable in the books of any company, the trustee may exercise the right to transfer the property to the same extent as the bankrupt might have exercised it if he had not become bankrupt. Accordingly the trustee's right of transfer cannot be fettered to a greater extent than that of the bankrupt. This is not always borne in mind. Provisions forfeiting the shares of a bankrupt member, or permitting the company to dispose of them compulsorily, cannot be relied on, as they defeat the rights of the creditors by withdrawing part of the estate from them. Ex parte Jay, In re Harrison, 14 C. Div. 19; Collins v. Barker, (1893) 1 Ch. 578.

But there is nothing obnoxious to the bankruptcy law in articles which provide that a shareholder shall in the event of his bankruptcy be bound to sell his shares at the price fixed for all transfers alike, and as part of a bond fide scheme for securing that shareholders shall be actively engaged in the business. Borland's Trustee v. Steel Bros. & Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 279.

Clause 13 of Table A (old) was very different from the transmission clause above, being as follows:—"Any person becoming entitled to a share in consequence of the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of any member, or in consequence of the marriage of any female member, may be registered as a member upon such evidence being produced as may from time to time be required by the company."

As to its operation, see Bentham Mills Spinning Co., 11 C. Div. 900. In that case it was held that under the last-mentioned clause the trustee of a bankrupt could insist on being registered, although the bankrupt was indebted to the company, and the company had a lien for the indebtedness; not so under clause 28 of this Form. It is true that in Ex parte Harrison, 26 C. D. 522, Bacon, V.-C., considered that the trustee, when registered, would be subject to the company's equities; but that does not prevent the trustee being entitled, not only to registration of himself as member, but also to have (a) registration Form 251. simpliciter, i.e., undefaced by any note or memorandum that the shares are subject to a lien, (b) a "clean certificate"—that is to say, a certificate in the ordinary form undefaced by any such note or memorandum. Re W. Key & Son, Ltd., (1902) 1 Ch. 467.

Disclaimer of Shares.

The trustee in bankruptcy of a shareholder has a right to disclaim within twelve months shares on which there is a liability, see sect. 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, amended by sect. 13 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890; Budden v. Roberts, 12 C. D. 288. Under sub-sect. (7) of same section, the company can prove for damages in case of such disclaimer. The twelve months run from the appointment of the trustee. Re Cohen, W. N. (1905) 138, C. A. As to the measure of damages on disclaimer, see Re Hallett, Ex parte National Insurance Corp., 1 Manson, 380, and Re Hooley, 6 Manson, 404. As to vesting the title in a third party claiming an interest, see sub-sect. (6) and Williams on Bankruptcy.

Sometimes the "transmission" clause continues with the words "or any guardian of an infant member or committee of a lunatic member," but there is some doubt whether they are effective.

Transfers in the case of infants can only be made in pursuance of an order of some Court of competent jurisdiction, e.g., the Chancery Division, and by the person named in the order.

And shares held by a lunatic can only be transferred under an order in lunacy, and by the person named in the order. See Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 133, 136—139. As to the form of order in such a case, see Re Purvis, (1904) 1 Ch. 373. See also Lunacy Act, 1891, and Lunacy Act, 1908, as to persons not so found.

As to a charging order against lunatics' shares, see Llewellyn v. Brown, (1900) 1 Ch. 489. As to transfer to a foreign tutor or guardian of a lunatic resident abroad, see Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie & Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 80; and as to Court's discretion as to transfer to foreign curator, Re Knight, (1898) 1 Ch. 257; as to the want of jurisdiction to transfer securities where the lunatic is not so found and is out of the jurisdiction, see Didisheim v. London and Westminster Bank, (1900) 2 Ch. 15; and as to the jurisdiction of the Chancery Division to order payment of dividends to a foreign committee, see New York Security and Trust Co. v. Keyser, (1901) 1 Ch. 666, and Farnham v. Milward, (1895) 2 Ch. 735.

SHARE WARRANTS.

Power to issue share
warrants.

39. The coo, with respect to fully pd-up shares, may issue warrants (hnftr called share warrants), stating that the bearer is entld to the shares therein specified, and may provide by coupons or otherwise for the payment of future dividends on the shares included in such warrants.

The Companies Act, 1867, sects. 37 et seq. (now replaced by sect. 37 of the Companies Act, 1908), empowered a company limited by shares, if authorized so to do by its articles as originally framed, or as altered by special resolution, to issue share warrants.

Share warrants must be under the seal of the company, and will entitle the bearer to the shares or stock therein specified; and such shares or stock will be transferable by delivery of the share warrant. By mercantile usage a share warrant is a negotiable instrument. Webb, Hale & Co. v. Alexandria Water Co., 21 T. L. R. 572; 93 L. T. 339. See form of share warrant, infra, Form 553.

The Act (1908) provides in sect. 28 as to the particulars to be contained in the annual summary to be filed by a company, where share warrants have been issued.

Holding a share warrant will not qualify a director who is required to hold a share qualification. See sect. 37 (4).

40. The directors may determine, and from time to time vary, the conditions upon which share warrants shall be issued, and, in particular, upon which a new share warrant or coupon will be issued in the place of one worn out, defaced, lost, or destroyed; upon which the bearer of a share warrant shall be entitled to attend and vote at general meetings; and upon which a share warrant may be surrendered and the name of the holder entered in the register in respect of the shares therein specified. Subject to such conditions, and to these presents, the bearer of a share warrant shall be a member to the full extent. The holder of a share warrant shall be subject to the conditions for the time being in force, whether made before or after the issue of such warrant.

As to conditions on which share warrants shall be issued.

Times all the matters referred to in the above clause are expressly provided by the articles, but it is generally thought better not to incur the burden with such matters of detail, since, in the great majority of companies, share warrants are never issued.

Where the immediate issue of share warrants is in contemplation, it may be desirable to set the conditions out in detail. In such case add to the above clause the words "until otherwise determined, the conditions following shall have effect as if made by the directors under this clause," and then set out the conditions in such paragraphs; or omit the above clause and insert a new clause, thus:—"The following provisions shall have effect," and then set out the conditions, inserting before them the words of the above clause commencing with "Subject to such conditions."

For form of conditions, see infra, p. 1134 et seq.

The bearer of a share warrant may, if desired, be deprived of the right of voting, but this is seldom done. It is usual, however, to make the deposit, before the meeting, of the warrant, a condition of the right to vote, see infra, Form 553.

CONVERSION OF SHARES INTO STOCK, &c.

41. The company [in general meeting] may convert any paid-up shares into stock.

Conversion of shares into stock.

The power is not often exercised, and the clauses relating to it might, if

Form 251. brevity be desired, be omitted. They can at any time be supplied by special resolution. If the words in brackets are omitted, the directors will be able to carry out the conversion under their general powers, infra.

See further as to conversion of shares into stock, Chap. XIII., infra. If desired, the clause may run thus: "The company may by special resolution convert," &c.

Transfer of stock and rights of holders.

42. When any shares have been converted into stock, the several holders of such stock may, thenceforth, transfer their respective interests therein, or any part of such interests, in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as and subject to which fully paid-up shares in the coy's capital may be transferred, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit. But the directors may from time to time, if they think fit, fix the minimum amount of stock transferable, and direct that fractions of a pound shall not be dealt with, but with power, nevertheless, at their discretion to waive such rules in any particular case.

stockholders.

43. The stock shall confer on the holders thereof respectively the same privileges and advantages, as regards participation in profits and voting at meetings of the coy, and for other purposes, as would have been conferred by shares of equal amount in the capital of the coy. but so that none of such privileges or advantages, except the participation in profits of the coy, shall be conferred by any such aliquot part of consolidated stock as would not, if existing in shares, have conferred such privileges or advantages. And, save as aforesaid, all the provisions herein contained shall, so far as circumstances will admit, apply to stock as well as to shares. No such conversion shall affect or prejudice any preference or other special privilege. The coy may at any time reconvert any stock into paid-up shares of any denomination.

The concluding words of sect. 41 (1) (c) reproduce sect. 29 of the Companies Act, 1900.

Sect. 41 is a useful addition. The section is not framed like sect. 9 of the Act of 1867 as to reduction of capital. It does not say that the company, if authorized by its articles, may by special resolution so far modify, but merely that a company may do it if authorized by its articles. Hence, if the articles contain the requisite power to reconvert stock into paid-up shares, that power can be exercised in the manner therein specified, e.g., by the directors or by the company in general meeting, by ordinary or by special or extraordinary resolution. And if the articles do not contain the requisite power the reconversion can nevertheless be effected by a single special resolution (see Campbell's case, 9 Ch. 1), or the special resolution can insert the power in the articles and at the same time vest that power in the directors, so that they can, the moment the resolution is passed, effect the reconversion.

Notice of the reconversion must be given to the registrar. Sect. 42.

Form 261.

INCREASE AND REDUCTION OF CAPITAL.

44. The coy [in general meeting] may, from time to time, increase the capital by the creation of new shares of such amount as may be deemed expedient. Power to increase capital.

A company limited by shares, if so authorized by its articles, may increase its share capital by the issue of new shares of such amount as it thinks expedient. Sect. 41 (1) (a). Under the above clause the increase can be effected by a simple resolution passed at an extraordinary meeting. Not uncommonly it is thought better to require the sanction of a special resolution to an increase. Thus: "44a. The company may, from time to time, by special resolution, increase," &c.; or, the words in brackets can be omitted, and in such case the directors will be able to increase the capital at their discretion. Campbell's case, 9 Ch. 1; Moseley v. Koffyfontein Co., (1911) A. C. 409.

45. The new shares shall be issued upon such terms and conditions, and with such rights and privileges annexed thereto [as the general meeting, resolving upon the creation thereof, shall direct, and if no direction be given], as the directors shall determine; and in particular such shares may be issued with a preferential or qualified right to dividends, and in the distribution of assets of the coy, and with a special or without any right of voting. On what conditions new shares may be issued. As to preferences, &c.

As to the issue of preference and other special class of shares, see supra, pp. 480, 576, and infra, p. 811 et seq.

If clause 44a is used, then omit the words within brackets in the above clause and substitute these: "as by the special resolution creating the same shall be directed, and if no direction be given," &c.

See further, as to increase of capital, infra, where forms of resolutions, notices, &c., will be found.

46. The coy [in general meeting] may, before the issue of any new shares, determine that the same, or any of them, shall be offered in the first instance, and either at par or at a premium, to all the then members or any class thereof, in proportion to the amount of the capital held by them, or make any other provisions as to the issue and allotment of the new shares: but, in default of any such determination, or so far as the same shall not extend, the new shares may be dealt with as if they formed part of the shares in the original ordinary capital. To be offered to existing members.

In lieu of the above clause, which is very commonly used, the following, which is similar to the clause 42 in Table A, may, if preferred, be substituted: "Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the meeting that sanctions the increase of capital, all new shares shall be offered to the members in proportion to the existing shares held by them, and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the member is entitled, and limiting a time within which the offer, if not accepted, will be Form 251. deemed to be declined; and after the expiration of such time, or on receipt of an intimation from the member to whom such notice is given, that he declines to accept the shares offered, the directors may dispose of the same in such manner as they think most beneficial to the company." Where a member is deceased, but his name is still on the register, his executors or administrators are, for the purpose of such a clause, entitled to stand in his place. James v. Buena Ventura, &c. Co., (1896) 1 Ch. 456.

How far new shares to rank with shares in original capital.

47. Except so far as otherwise provided by the conditions of issue, or by these presents, any capital raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered part of the original ordinary capital, and shall be subject to the provisions herein contained with reference to the payment of calls and instalments, transfer and transmission, forfeiture, lien, voting, and otherwise.

Reduction of capital, &c.

48. The coy may, from time to time, by special resolution, reduce its capital by paying off capital or cancelling capital which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets, or reducing the liability on the shares, or otherwise, as may seem expedient, and capital may be paid off upon the footing that it may be called up again or otherwise; [and paid-up capital may be cancelled as aforesaid without reducing the nominal amount of the shares by the like amount to the intent that the unpaid and callable capital shall be increased by the like amount].

As to reduction of capital, see infra, Chap. XVII.

The words in brackets are sometimes inserted with a view to enabling a company in case of necessity to increase its callable capital without reconstruction. Whether the provision is effective has not yet been decided. According to British, &c. Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399, the Court can sanction any kind of reduction. And the new Act so provides. Sect. 46.

SUB-DIVISION AND CONSOLIDATION OF SHARES.

49. [And] the coy may also, by special resolution, sub-divide or, by ordinary resolution, consolidate its shares or any of them.

As to sub-division of shares, see infra, Form 479, and Act of 1908, sect. 41 (1) (d).

As to consolidation, see the same s. on (b) and infra, Form 478.

Sub-division into preferred and ordinary.

[49a. The special resolution whereby any share is sub-divided may determine that, as between the holders of the shares resulting from such sub-division, one or more of such shares shall have some preference or special advantage as regards dividend, capital, voting, or otherwise over or as compared with the others or other.]

The above power is sometimes found useful. It has been doubted whether it could be taken by special resolution, and in several cases private Acts have been obtained to effect such a division. But the decision in Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., supra, p. 637, appears to dispose of those doubts.

Form 251.

50. Whenever the capital, by reason of the issue of preference shares or otherwise, is divided into different classes of shares, all or any of the rights and privileges attached to each class may be modified, commuted, affected, abrogated, or dealt with by agreement between the coy and any person purporting to contract on behalf of that class, provided such agreement is ratified in writing by the holders of at least three-fourths in nominal value of the issued shares of the class, or is confirmed by an extraordinary resolution passed at a separate general meeting of the holders of shares of that class, and all the provisions hereinafter contained as to general meetings shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to every such meeting, but so that the quorum thereof shall be members holding, or representing by proxy [one-fifth] of the nominal amount of the issued shares of the class. This clause is not to derogate from any power the coy would have had if this clause were omitted.

modify rights.

Where there are different classes of shares, great inconvenience is sometimes caused by there being no power for the majority of the members of a class to bind the minority, and accordingly the insertion of a clause as above is desirable.

Where the rights attached to different classes of shares are defined by the memorandum of association, those rights cannot, it is conceived, be modified under the above clause, except where the memorandum contains power by reference to this clause or otherwise. See supra, p. 576. Welsbach Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87. But see now the power to reorganize capital with the sanction of the Court (Companies Act, 1908, s. 45), and the power to arrange in sect. 120.

The clause does not justify any payment out of the company's capital as a consideration for the modification.

Modification does not include abrogation (Mercantile Investment Co. v. International Cos. of Mexico, (1893) 1 Ch. 484), but the above clause goes further.

The clause was considered by the Court of Appeal in Hemans v. Hotchkiss Ordnance Co., (1899) 1 Ch. 115, and it was held that the words as to the quorum clearly rendered the presence of the specified quorum at every meeting, whether original or adjourned, essential. It was contended that clause 67, infra, applied, but the Court held the contrary.

In Will v. United Lankat Plantations, L. J. Notes, 30 March, 1912, Joyce, J., in the absence of such a clause, held that a special resolution altering the rights of the preference shares was invalid.

Borrowing Powers.

51. The directors may, from time to time, at their discretion, raise or borrow, or secure the payment of, any sum or sums of money for the purposes of the coy [but so that the amount at any one time owing in respect of moneys so raised, borrowed, or secured, shall not, without the sanction of a general meeting, exceed the nominal amount of the capital. Nevertheless, no lender or other person dealing with the coy shall be concerned to see or inquire whether this limit is observed.

borrow.

Form 251.

In exercising this power, sect. 87 (1) of the Companies Act, 1908, must be borne in mind, for if a company on its formation invites the public to subscribe for shares it may not borrow until after it has become entitled to commence business under that section. See supra, p. 20. See also "Non-prospectus Companies." Ibid.

An express or implied power to borrow must be given in the memorandum; but if the company have power to borrow, the Act imposes no limit on that power, except this—that money can only be borrowed for the purposes of the company. Nevertheless, the Stock Exchange Committee require some limitation, and it is not unusual to insert in the articles a limit as above, or to make the limit "the amount of the subscribed capital for the time being of the company," or "the amount of the paid-up capital," or a specified sum.

Where the company has power to borrow and mortgage (as to which, see supra, Form 110), there is no need expressly to delegate the power to the directors, provided that the articles contain a general delegation (clause 113) to them of the powers of the company, as infra. Patent Fife Co., 6 Ch. 83; Gibbs and West's case, 10 Eq. 312; Anglo-Danubian, &c. Co., 20 Eq. 339; and see Australian Co. v. Mounsey, 4 K. & J. 733; Pyle Works (No. 2), (1891) 1 Ch. 173; Hampson v. Lios's Patent Candle Co., 45 L. J. Ch. 437.

Nevertheless, it is usual to give the directors express power. How far the directors' power should be fettered or limited is a matter of arrangement. It is by no means uncommon to vest the power in the directors absolutely. If this is to be done, omit from "but so that" to end of clause. In small companies it is not unusual to require the sanction of a special resolution.

As to the validity of securities given for money borrowed beyond the limit. see Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe Brooks, 22 Ch. D. 61; 9 App. Cas. 857; Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee (No. 2), 19 Q. B. D. 155; Re Wrexham Mold Rail. Co., (1899) 1 Ch. 440. If there is power to borrow, with the sanction of a general meeting, a lender may assume that the requisite sanction has been obtained. Royal British Bank v. Turquand, 6 E. & B. 327 (supra, p. 79); Bryant v. La Banque du Peuple, (1893) A. C. 170. See also Hampshire Land Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 743, in which case the meeting which purported to give this sanction was irregular. But it would seem that the passing of a special resolution must not be assumed because such a resolution as requiring to be registered would appear on the file. Irvine v. Union Bank of Australia, 2 App. Cas. 379.

For other cases in which irregularities have been held not to invalidate the security, see Biggerstaff v. Rowatt's Wharf, (1896) 2 Ch. 93 (powers of managing director); Davies v. R. Bolton & Co., (1894) 3 Ch. 678 (quorum); Robinson v. Montgomeryshire Brewery Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 841 (authority of agent); County of Gloucester Bank v. Rudry, (1895) 1 Ch. 629 (quorum). supra, p. 80; Mahoney v. East Holyford Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 69 (de facto directors).

Where three companies, each having power to borrow on debentures, issued jointly debentures charging all their properties, the Court of Appeal held that the debentures bound the property of each company to the extent of charging it with the portion of the money which reached the coffers of that company. Johnston Foreign Patents Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 234. A lender is not bound to inquire how the company intends to apply the money—that is the company's business—and a misapplication of the money, therefore, will not, in the absence of notice, affect his security. David Payne & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 608.

Overdrawing a banking account is in effect a borrowing. Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, 9 App. Cas. 857; Pyle Works (No. 2), (1891) 1 Ch. 173. As to the claim a lender may in such cases have against the assets of the company, see Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee, 19 Q. B. D. 155, and cases there cited.

Even where directors have an unrestricted power to borrow, they not uncommonly seek the sanction of a general meeting before exercising the power.

Sometimes a clause is inserted to the effect that it is intended that the company shall forthwith create and issue a specified amount of first mortgage debentures, or debenture stock, secured in a specified manner, and that whilst the same remains outstanding, the company is not to be at liberty to create any mortgage or charge on its property or uncalled capital [or as the case may require], ranking, or which by any means may be made to rank, in priority to or pari passu with such first mortgage debentures or debenture stock. The object is to fortify the security by giving notice to all the world. Supra, pp. 77, 81.

Where the clause authorized the borrowing of any sum "not exceeding the amount of the preference share capital," and no preference capital was issued, the Court of Appeal held that no limit was imposed. Johnston Foreign Patents Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 234.

There is not in general anything to prevent the directors from raising money by depositing debentures with the lender. Strand Music Hall, 3 De G. J. & S. 147; Regent's Canal Ironworks, 3 C. Div. 43; Re Patent File Co., L. R. 6 C. P. 83.

As to loans to the company by directors, see Campbell's case, 4 C. D. 470; Black v. Maltair, 5 Jur. N. S. 1018. It would seem that they may lend to the company upon the same terms as the public are asked to lend; but when it is proposed to borrow from the directors exclusively, and at a high rate of interest and upon mortgage, the transaction must be carefully safeguarded, and the clauses as to directors' contracts should be considered [e.g., clause 92, p. 731], and a resolution of a general meeting may in some cases be desirable.

As to personal liability of directors to lenders on an implied warranty or authority, where the borrowing powers are exceeded, see Collen v. Wright (1857), 8 El. & Bl. 647; Weeks v. Probert, L. R. 8 C. P. 427; Chapleo v. Brunswick Soc., 6 Q. B. D. 715; Firbank's Executors v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. D. 54; approved in Starkey v. Bank of England, (1903) A. C. 114; Oliver v. Bank of England, (1901) 1 Ch. 610. And as to debentures generally, see Part III. of this work.

52. The directors may raise or secure the payment or repayment of such sum or sums in such manner and upon such terms and conditions in all respects as they think fit, and, in particular, by the issue of debentures or debenture stock of the coy charged upon all or any pt of the ppty of the coy (both present and future), including its uncalled capital for the time being.

Conditions on which money may be borrowed.

53. Debentures, debenture stock, and other securities may be made assignable free from any equities between the coy and the person to whom the same may be issued.

Securities may be assignable free from equities.

This clause is sometimes inserted. As to its object, see Part III. Where a company has power to issue negotiable instruments, the above clause is probably not necessary.

54. Any debentures, debenture stocks, bonds, or other securities, may be issued at a discount, premium or otherwise, and with any special privileges as to redemption, surrender, drawings, allotment of Issue at discount, &c., or with special privileges.

Form 251.

Form 251. shares, attending and voting at general meetings of the coy, appointment of directors, and otherwise.

This clause is sometimes inserted, but the power to "raise" money given by clause 51, and the general powers given infra, are probably sufficient. Anglo-Danubian Steam, &c. Co., 20 Eq. 241; Australian Co. v. Mounsey, 4 K. & J. 733; Pyle Works (No. 2), (1891) 1 Ch. 173; Hampson v. Price's Patent Candle Co., 45 L. J. Ch. 437.

Register of mortgages to be kept.

55. The directors shall cause a proper register to be kept, in accordance with sect. 100 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, of all mortgages and charges specifically affecting the ppty of the coy; and shall duly comply with the requirements of sect. 93 of the Cos Act, 1908, in regard to the registration of mortgages and charges therein specified and otherwise.

Considering the serious liabilities which directors and others may incur by not complying with the sections referred to, it seems desirable to insert a reminder of this kind.

Upon sect. 43 of the Act of 1862, replaced by sect. 100 of the Companies Act, 1908, it was held that non-registration exposed the directors to penalties, but did not avoid, as sect. 93 does, the mortgage or charge. Wright v. Horton, 12 App. Cas. 371.

The right of inspection given by the section includes by implication a right to make extracts and notes. Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands F. Co., 33 C. D. 92; Nelson v. Anglo-American, &c. Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 130; but the right to take extracts is impliedly negatived where the Act gives a right to have copies on payment. Balaghat Mining Co., (1901) 2 K. B. 665, C. A., overruling Boord v. African Consolidated Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 596; see infra, pp. 771, 772.

As to a cestui que trust's right to information, see Tillott, (1892) 1 Ch. 86. A director is entitled to inspect virtute officii.

A right of inspection given by the articles ceases on a voluntary winding-up. Yorkshire Co., 9 Eq. 650; Kent Coalfields Syndicate, (1898) 1 Q. B. 754. But application for an order to allow inspection can be made in a voluntary winding-up under sects. 193, 221. See Forms 722, 723, of Part III. So, too, in a compulsory or supervision case. Somerset v. Land Securities Co., W. N. (1897) 29. Form 102 et seq., Part III.

The right to inspect under sect. 101 is only given to a "creditor or member" of the company gratis: to others for a fee. As to sect. 93 of the Companies Act, 1908 [registration under that section is only required in the case of a mortgage or charge (1) to secure any issue of debentures or debenture stock, or (2) on uncalled capital, or (3) by an instrument which if executed by an individual would require registration as a bill of sale, or (4) on land, (5) on book debts, (6) by way of floating charge]. See supra, pp. 616, 618, and Part III. of this work.

Mortgage of uncalled capital.

[55a. If any uncalled capital of the coy is included in or charged by any mortgage or other security, the directors may, by instrument under the coy's seal, authorize the person in whose favour such mortgage or security is executed, or any other person in trust for him, to make calls on the members in respect of such uncalled capital, and the provisions hnbefore contained in regard to calls shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to calls made under such authority, and such authority may be made exercisable either conditionally or unconditionally, and either presently or contingently, and either to the exclusion of the directors' power or otherwise, and shall be assignable if expressed so to be.] Form 251.

The above is sometimes used. But the Stock Exchange Committee sometimes object to the clause.

Sometimes it is considered expedient to insert a clause as follows:—

"55b. Where any uncalled capital of the company is charged, all persons taking any subsequent charge thereon shall take the same subject to such prior charge, and shall not be entitled, by notice to the shareholders or otherwise, to obtain priority over such prior charge."

As to getting in calls for debenture holders after a winding-up order, see Fowler v. Broad's, &c. Co., (1893) 1 Ch. 777; and Part II.

See further as to mortgages of uncalled capital, Part III.

MEETINGS.

56. The statutory meeting of the coy shall, as required by sect. 65 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, be held at such time not being less than one month or more than three months from the date at which the coy shall be entld to commence business, and at such place as the directors may determine, and the directors shall comply with the other requirements of that section as to the report to be submitted and otherwise. The statutory meeting.

As to when a company is entitled to commence business, see supra, p. 20.

Sect. 39 of the Companies Act, 1867, required every company to hold a general meeting within four months after the registration of its memorandum of association, and an extraordinary meeting was a sufficient compliance with this provision. Lord Claud Hamilton's case, 8 Ch. 548. But that section was repealed by sect. 33 of the Companies Act, 1900; that again by the Act of 1908; and sect. 65 of that Act now provides that "every company limited by shares and registered on or after the 1st January, 1901, shall, within a period of not less than one month nor more than three months from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business, hold a general meeting of the members of the company, which shall be called the statutory meeting"; and in further sub-sections enacts how the meeting is to be convened, what report is to be submitted to it, what matters may be discussed thereat, and what may be done, &c.

In the case of a private company, though the company must hold the statutory meeting, no preliminary report need be sent to shareholders or filed. Sect. 65 (10).

57. Other general meetings shall be held once in the year — and in every subsequent year, at such time and place as may be prescribed by the coy in general meeting, and if no other time or place is prescribed [in the month of — in every such year] at such time and place as may be determined by the directors. When subsequent general meetings to be held.

Form 251.

The Act of 1900 now provides (sect. 64, replacing sect. 49 of the Companies Act, 1862) that "A general meeting of every company shall be held once at the least in every calendar year, and not more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting"; there are penalties for default; and the same section provides that when default has been made in holding a meeting of the company in accordance with the provisions of this section, the Court may on the application of any member, call or direct the calling of a general meeting of the company. "Calendar year" means the year commencing 1st January and ending 31st December. (Hibson v. Barton, L. R. 16 Q. B. 488.)

If the statutory meeting is held within the year it will satisfy sect. 64, but the statutory meeting is not an "ordinary" meeting; and, in order to comply with sect. 26, an ordinary meeting must be held each year, for a Return to the Registrar has, under that section, to be made each year within a short time after the expiration of fourteen days from the ordinary general meeting. If the articles permit, this meeting can be held on the same day as the statutory meeting.

It is no answer to proceedings for the penalty that the meeting was not in fact held. Edmonds v. Forster, 45 L. J. M. C. 41; 33 L. T. 890; Park v. Lawton, (1911) 1 K. B. 588. Evidence that a person is a director is prima facie evidence that he knowingly and wilfully authorized and permitted the company's default. Edmonds v. Forster, supra. An offence under this section is a criminal offence. Reg. v. Tyler, (1891) 2 Q. B. 588. Proceedings to enforce the penalty are taken before a magistrate, who may inquire into the sufficiency and accuracy of the return. Briton Medical, 37 W. R. 52. Sometimes provision is made for half-yearly meetings.

The company's penalty is 5*l.* for every day during which the default continues. See Reg. v. Catholic, &c. Co., 48 L. T. 675; but it has been held that the default is not a continuing one where the meeting has not been held within the year. Dorte v. South African Super-Aeration, 28 T. L. R. 425. And see p. 763.

Distinction between ordinary and extraordinary meetings.

When extraordinary meeting to be called.

Requisition.

58. The general meetings referred to in the last preceding clause shall be called ordinary meetings; all other meetings of the company shall be called extraordinary meetings.

59. The directors may, whenever they think fit, and they shall on the requisition of the holders of not less than one-tenth of the paid-up capital of the company upon which all calls or other sums then due have been paid, forthwith proceed to convene an extraordinary general meeting of the company, and in the case of such requisition the following provisions shall have effect:—

- (1) The requisition must state the objects of the meeting and must be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the office of the company, and may consist of several documents in like form, each signed by one or more requisitionists.
- (2) If the directors of the company do not proceed to cause a meeting to be held within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition being so deposited, the requisitionists or a majority of them in value may themselves convene the meeting, but a meeting so convened shall not be held after three months from the date of the deposit.

- (3) If at any such meeting a resolution requiring confirmation at another meeting is passed, the directors shall forthwith convene a further extraordinary general meeting for the purpose of considering the resolution, and if thought fit of confirming it as a special resolution; and if the directors do not convene the meeting within seven days from the date of the passing of the first resolution, the requisitionists or a majority of them in value may themselves convene the meeting.
- (4) Any meeting convened under this clause by the requisitionists shall be convened in the same manner as far as possible as that in which meetings are to be convened by directors.

If brevity desired omit this sub-paragraph and substitute the words "The provisions of sect. 66 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, shall apply" for the words "following provisions shall have effect."

"Whenever they think fit, in the above clause, means prima facie when at a board meeting they so determine. Brown v. La Trinidad Co., 37 C. Div. 1. But as appears from that case, and from Southern Counties, &c. v. Rider, 73 L. T. 374; British Asbestos Co. v. Bird, (1903) 2 Ch. 439; and Boschong Proprietary Co. v. Fife, (1906) 1 Ch. 148, it does not follow that a meeting irregularly convened is in all cases incompetent.

See, however, Aircraft Co. v. Navigation Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 230, in which a meeting convened by the secretary without the authority of the directors was held to be irregular; followed by Wright J., in State of Wyoming Syndicate, 4013 2 Ch. 431, and Hunter v. Kerr, Stuart & Co., 83 L. T. 729, in which it was held that a meeting thus irregularly convened was rendered valid by the directors' ratification before the time fixed.

The above clauses follow very closely the wording of sect. 66 of the Act of 1908. It seems desirable to adopt the statutory provision exclusively.

It is desired that convening of meetings on requisition can be rendered as valid as that which is convened by the directors. It is suggested that the tenth should be empowered to requisition. Indeed, the members could be empowered to requisition, or for that matter to convene a meeting without requisition. But it seems undesirable to put the power in the hands of one or two possibly troublesome members to set the machinery of a meeting in motion vexatiously.

The Court would not compel directors to convene a general meeting on requisition where the directors have enabled the requisitionists to call the meeting. Dougall v. Gardiner, 1 Ch. 606, and under the present Act the same rule will probably be adopted. But the Court might, perhaps, itself convene a meeting, if there were no directors, and no other mode of procedure. Perkins, L. J., S. C. For an example, see Trade Auxiliary Co., 21 R. 1, where, there being no proper board, a receiver was appointed, and a meeting could be held. Where there is a deadlock, sect. 67 of the Act may apply. Brick and Stone Co., W. N. (1878) 140. Vaughan Williams, once held that a complete deadlock was a good ground for making a winding-up order. Sailing Ship "Kentmere" Co., W. N. (1897) 58.

It is apprehended that the mere fact that some of the resolutions referred to in the requisition cannot be put to the meeting as being, e.g., ultra vires, does not relieve the directors from all obligation to call the meeting, or if they abstain from calling it, preclude the requisitionists from calling it and dealing with what can properly be put to the meeting. Isle of Wight Rail. Co. v. Lachourdin, 25 C. Div. 320.

Form 251.

Notice of meeting.

60. Seven clear days' notice to the members specifying the place, day, and hour of meeting, and, in case of special business, the general nature of such business, shall be given [either by advertisement or] by notice sent by post, or otherwise served as hinftr provided, and with the consent in writing of all the members, a meeting may be convened by a shorter notice, and in any manner they think fit.

Notice of a general meeting must, unless otherwise provided, be given to all the members, but sometimes the articles provide that members holding less than, say, [20%] of the capital, or that holders of shares of a particular class, e.g., preference shares, or members not having an address in the United Kingdom, shall not be entitled to notice. In the absence of any such qualification notice should be given to all the members, and the omission to do so prima facie invalidates the meeting. Smyth v. Darley, 2 H. L. C. 789. But there is usually a clause in the articles relaxing this rule in the case of accidental omission to give notice or non-receipt. See Table A, clause 49; and as to members who are abroad, see infra, p. 779.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, the executors or administrators of a deceased member, until registered as members, are not entitled to notice, for the notice is to be given to the "members." It is enough if notice is sent to the deceased member's registered address. Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656.

And though, under sect. 32 of the Act of 1908 (sect. 35, Act of 1862), the register may be rectified by entering a person's name as a member as from a past day this may be done without invalidating notices given to other members. Sussex Brick Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 698.

As to notice, see further, infra, and Chap. XII.

As appears from the above clause and clause 63, an ordinary meeting may deal with special business if the notice specifies it. And see Graham v. Van Dieman's Land Co., 26 L. J. Ch. 73. As to what is "special business," see clause 63, infra, and Table A., clause 50.

An adjourned meeting is considered, for some purposes, a continuation of the original meeting. See Scadding v. Lornet, 3 H. L. Cas. 418. Hence, in the absence of special provision, notice of an adjourned meeting need not be sent to the members. Wills v. Murray, 4 Ex. 843.

A notice which is to state the general nature of the business or the object of the meeting must give members fair notice of the matters to be dealt with. Bridport Brewery Co., 2 Ch. 191; Wright's case, 12 Eq. 345; Lawes' case, 1 De G. M. & G. 430; Hampshire Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 743; Hope v. Croydon Tramways, (1898) 1 Ch. 358. But it is not enough in a notice of an extraordinary meeting merely to say "special business." Wills v. Murray, 4 Ex. 869. And any resolution beyond the notice is invalid. Hampshire Land Co., supra. But notices are not to be construed with excessive strictness. Per Selwyn, L. J., Wright's case, 12 Eq. 345; Henderson v. Bank of Australia, 45 C. Div. 330; Grant v. United Switchback, 40 Ch. D. 137; Re British Sugar Refining Co., 3 K. & J. 408. They are to be read and construed as an ordinary business man would read and construe them. Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 147; and see Young v. South African, &c. Syndicate, (1890) 2 Ch. 268.

Thus where a meeting is convened to remove "any" of the directors, it may remove "all." Isle of Wight Rail. Co. v. Takourdin, 25 C. Div. 332. It is, however, wiser to say "all or any."

In another case (Betts & Co., Ltd. v. Macnaghten, (1910) 1 Ch. 430) the articles provided that the notice of the general meeting should specify the general nature of the special business to be transacted. In pursuance of this article notice was given that a meeting was to be held for the purpose of considering and, if thought fit, passing certain specified resolutions "with such amendments and alterations as shall be determined on at such meeting." One of the resolutions specified in the notice was a resolution to appoint A., B. and C. to be ordinary directors of the company with 200*l.* per annum each as remuneration, and at the meeting a resolution was carried appointing A., B. and C. and also two additional persons to be directors each at 200*l.* per annum. This resolution the Court held to be effective, and looking to the very elastic terms of the notice of meeting the decision seems sound enough if based on the special terms of the notice, but the learned judge did not so base the same. The ground he took was that the notice sufficiently indicated the general nature of the business to be transacted. "Under the articles," said he, "all that was incumbent upon the conveners of the meeting to do was to specify the general nature of the special business for which the meeting was convened, and although on this occasion the conveners of the meeting went out of their way to indicate in the notices with particularity the mode in which the special business was to be submitted to the meeting, their having done so cannot, in my opinion, impose any greater restrictions on the meeting than would have been imposed upon it had the notice been in more general terms." According to the learned judge's view, where the articles require the notice in the case of special business to state the general nature of such business, the notice, however specific, cannot restrict the powers of the meeting to the specified business, but leaves the meeting free to deal with any business of a like nature. This would encourage a dangerous laxity in the framing of notices and the passing of wholly unexpected and onerous resolutions to the detriment of absent shareholders, put off their guard by an apparently innocent notice. Suppose, for instance, the notice is to appoint A. B. to be a director at 200*l.* per annum, according to the learned judge's view the resolution can be amended and may be passed so as to appoint half a dozen persons to be directors each at 200*l.* per annum or upwards; or suppose the notice is of a resolution to authorize the directors to borrow, say, 1,000*l.*, it can be amended and passed so as to authorize them to borrow 10,000*l.*; or suppose the notice is to grant to the directors an extra 100*l.*, the resolution might be to grant them an extra 1,000*l.*, for in each case it could be said that the notice sufficiently indicated the general nature of the business.

Such a view is at variance with the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in Bethell v. Trench Tubeless Tyre Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 409, and with the view of Page-Wood, V.-C., in Wright's case, 12 Eq. 341, n. That learned judge was of opinion that although where a meeting was convened to consider and approve of an agreement, a shareholder could not object to a resolution approving the agreement with some modifications not making it more onerous on the company, he would, nevertheless, be entitled to object to a resolution approving of the agreement with modifications making it more onerous on the company, and that view has been generally acted on during the last forty years and upwards. The view, too, seems inconsistent with what Lord Justice Bowen said in Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 139, as to the extreme importance that these notices should be so framed that those who run may read, and that they should be construed in a sense in which business men to whom they are addressed would understand them. No business man would understand that a notice simpliciter of a meeting to appoint A., B. and C. to be directors at 200*l.* a year each could be treated as justifying the appointment of five persons as directors each at 200*l.* per annum.

In construing a notice it is to be borne in mind that all the shareholders of the company must have imputed to them "knowledge of the Act of Parliament.

Form 251. and also of their own memorandum and articles of association." Per Lord Selborne, Campbell v. Case, L. R. 9 Ch. 22.

A notice convening a meeting to consider and determine as to the appointment of a committee to inquire into the working and general management of the company would not justify a resolution requiring the directors to carry into effect the recommendations of the committee. Per Cotton, L. J., Isle of Wight Rail. Co. v. Takourdin, 25 C. D. 330.

An insufficient or misleading notice invalidates the resolution, even though no proxies are used, "for how is it possible for the Court to know how many shareholders abstained from attending the meeting, being satisfied that the arrangement as it was proposed was advantageous to them, and being quite content to exercise no voice about it?" Per Page-Wood, V.-C., Clinch v. Financial Corp., 5 Eq. 481.

"There is no obligation upon any shareholder receiving such notices either to attend the meetings or to make inquiries as to what is proposed to be done at them, in order to protect himself from being bound by acts or contracts ultra vires of any general meeting. He will, of course, be bound by all that the general meetings can do, as to the matters mentioned in the notices, within their powers; but he cannot, in his absence and without his knowledge, be taken to consent that they shall bind him by any resolutions or acts in excess of those powers, whether such acts or resolutions do or do not relate to the particular business for the transaction of which the meetings were called together." Per Lord Selborne, Ashbury v. Riche, L. R. 7 H. L. 693.

So where a meeting was convened to consider resolutions for reconstruction, and for winding-up in regard thereto, and at the meeting a naked resolution for winding-up was passed, it was held to be invalid as a departure from the scheme indicated by the notice. Teece & Bishop, Ltd., W. N. (1901) 52; 84 L. T. 461; but see Thompson v. Henderson's Transvaal Estates Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 765.

Where a meeting was convened to ratify and confirm a specified agreement for the sale of part of the undertaking, it was held that it was not necessary in the notice to state why such ratification was necessary, viz., because the directors were interested in the purchasing company. Grant v. United Switchback Co., 40 C. D. 137; see also Southall v. British Mutual, 6 Ch. 614 (C. A.). On the other hand, where the meeting was convened to sanction an agreement for the sale of the undertaking and the notice did not mention that the agreement also provided for the payment by the purchaser to the directors of compensation for loss of office, it was held that the notice was irregular. See Tiessen v. Henderson, (1899) 1 Ch. 861; see also Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 358, and Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 84.

A resolution inconsistent with the articles is ineffectual unless it is to be confirmed as a special resolution. Quin & Axtens v. Salmon, (1909) A. C. 442.

Amendments.

As to amendments. No amendment can be moved which goes beyond the notice convening the meeting or, in the case of an ordinary meeting, beyond the scope of the ordinary business which by the articles may be transacted thereat without special notice. Thus, in the case of an ordinary meeting, where a motion is submitted that the report and accounts be received and adopted, an amendment that the directors be removed from office, or that the articles be altered, would be irregular; but an amendment to the effect that the accounts and balance-sheet be received, but not adopted, and that a committee of shareholders be appointed to look into them and report, would be competent. So, too, if the meeting be convened to pass a resolution for increasing the capital, an amendment that the directors be authorized to borrow, or that a dividend be declared, would be irregular, for any such amendment is not within the notice.

In other words, an amendment must be fairly relevant. If it is, and within the notice, it may generally be moved. Form 251.

Thus, where a meeting is convened to consider, and if thought fit to ratify, a particular agreement, it would seem to be permissible to ratify the agreement subject to modifications or conditions, provided that they do not make the agreement more onerous as regards the company. "An absent shareholder can hardly be allowed to say: 'I was invited to consider the agreement simpliciter, as it stood.' I quite understand his not being bound by a resolution that made the agreement more onerous, but . . . nobody would think of arguing that because there is not an express invitation to consider all possible modifications that might take place for the benefit of the company, therefore the meeting proceeded on that which was ultra vires in coming to any such modified resolution." Per Page-Wood, L. J., Wright's case, 12 Eq. 335, 341. n.

So if the notice is to consider a resolution for increasing the capital to 10,000/., an amendment to substitute 5,000/., for 10,000/., is allowable, but such a notice would not, it is conceived, justify an amendment to substitute 15,000/., or 150,000/., for 10,000/.. Where, however, the notice was in general terms, such an amendment would be allowable.

Or, where by the regulations or the Act there is general power to deal with certain business at a general meeting without notice of such business, the fact that the notice convening the meeting specifies a particular resolution for dealing with such business does not limit the powers of the meeting or prevent an amendment or substituted resolution. See Bethell v. Trench Tubeless Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 408.

And where the notice was of a meeting to pass a resolution altering the scale of voting by giving to every qualified proprietor one vote for every share held by him, and a resolution was proposed with additional words [q.v. irregular], making the right of voting conditional on a member having held his shares for a specified period, it was held that an amendment to omit the additional words was regular. Henderson v. Bank of Australia, 45 C. D. 330.

A special resolution need not, at the first meeting, follow the exact terms of the resolution, but may to some extent be amended, e.g., by reducing the amount of remuneration proposed for directors on an alteration of the articles. Torbark v. Lord Altonbury, (1902) 2 Ch. 871. But when notice is given of a meeting to pass special resolutions for voluntary winding-up, the appointment of a liquidator, and reconstruction, and a resolution is passed simply for voluntary winding-up, although this is confirmed at the second meeting, it was held in Teede & Bishop, Ltd., W. N. (1901) 52; 70 L. J. Ch. 409; 84 L. T. 564, that there was no valid special resolution for winding-up.

But the authority of this case is much impaired by the decision in Thompson v. Henderson's Transvaal Estates Co., (1908) 2 Ch. 765, in which it was held that where the notice specified several resolutions, some of which were ultra vires and some intra vires, and all were passed, the intra vires resolutions were good, though the others were bad. And see Clinch v. Financial Corp., 5 Eq. 461; Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corp. (No. 2), (1898) 2 Ch. 469, 484; and Strand v. London Aquarium Society, 80 L. T. 243.

Occasionally the articles contain a clause providing that any member may, on giving not less than three days' notice to the company, submit any resolution to the meeting beyond the matters contained in the notice convening such meeting; but such a clause is dangerous if it means what it apparently says, and the Court therefore treats it as referring only to something covered by the principal notice. Imperial Hydro, &c. Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. Div. 9.

Clause 60, supra, does not apply to a meeting of the subscribers of the memorandum. A reasonable notice only is necessary to convene the subscribers, and Form 251. a two days' notice has been held reasonable and sufficient under the circumstances. John Morley Building Co. v. Barras, (1891) 2 Ch. 386.

Directors, in the absence of an express provision in the articles, have no power to postpone a meeting which has been duly convened. Smith v. Parings Mines, (1906) 2 Ch. 193.

Two meetings convened by one notice.

61. Where it is proposed to pass a special resolution, the two meetings may be convened by one and the same notice, and it is to be no objection to such notice that it only convenes the second meeting contingently on the resolution being passed by the requisite majority at the first meeting.

The object of the concluding paragraph of the above clause is to save the expense of the double notice, which in a large company may be considerable. In the absence of such words the second meeting cannot be thus convened on a contingency. Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 139; and infra, Chap. XII. The concluding paragraph was drafted by the author to meet that case, and was held to be valid by the Court of Appeal in North of England Steamship Co., (1905) 2 Ch. 45.

In Tiessen v. Henderson, (1899) 1 Ch. 861, after the resolution had been passed on February 16 at the first meeting, an alternative scheme was proposed, and notice was given of a meeting on March 3, to pass resolutions embodying the new scheme, and stating that "if passed by the requisite majority," &c., as in the above form. The notice then went on to state that "in the event of such resolutions not being passed, immediately after such meeting, an extraordinary general meeting of the company will be held, when the following resolutions, which were passed at the extraordinary general meeting of the company held on February 16, 1899, will be submitted for confirmation," and it was held that the notice was not bad as notice of a confirmatory meeting.

The notice must state fairly the purpose of the meeting, and disclose any pecuniary interest to be taken by a director in the matter. See Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 358; Tiessen v. Henderson, supra; Hampshire Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 743.

Even in the absence of the clause, it is possible, as contended in former editions of this work, to convene the two meetings by one and the same notice, provided that both meetings are convened unconditionally, e.g., the second to receive a report of the proceedings at the first, and if the resolution has been passed to confirm it. Jenner Institute, 13 T. L. R. 394.

Where a meeting is convened with a view to passing a resolution intended to be subsequently confirmed as a special resolution, the notices convening the first meeting should, as sect. 69 of the Act provides, state that the meeting is convened to consider and, if thought fit, to pass the resolution as an extraordinary resolution which will be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution to a subsequent meeting. See infra, p. 1097.

As to omission to give notice.

62. The accidental omission to give any such notice to any of the members shall not invalidate any resolution passed at any such meeting.

Sometimes this clause runs: "The non-receipt of the notice by any member shall not invalidate the proceedings of any general meeting, &c." This is the form in Table A. (clause 19)

In one form or the other the clause is almost always inserted.

In the absence of such a provision a meeting is irregular, for all members are not duly summoned as they have a right to be. Smyth v. Darley, 2 H. L. C. 789; Reg. v. Langhorne, 6 N. & M. 203.

Form 251.

PROCEEDINGS AT GENERAL MEETINGS.

A speech by a shareholder at a meeting defamatory of the directors but in regard to a matter affecting the interests of the shareholders is privileged. Parsons v. Surgey, 4 Fost. & Fin. N. P. 247. And it would seem that where the occasion is privileged, and the words complained of are spoken without malice, the presence of reporters in ordinary course does not take away the privilege. Pittard v. Oliver, (1901) 1 Q. B. 474; Marks v. Samuel, (1904) 2 K. B. 287. Compare Purcell v. Fowler, 2 C. P. D. 215. But the privilege is gone if the public or the press are present at the meeting at the express invitation of the shareholder making the defamatory statement. Parsons v. Surgey supra.

If the directors of a company invite a newspaper to a private meeting, query whether the company can sue the newspaper for publishing in a report of that meeting a true statement of what was said by a shareholder because that statement is defamatory. Liverpool Household Stores v. Smith (1887), 37 Ch. D. 170.

A report in the public press of the proceedings of a general meeting, if containing libellous matter, is not privileged. Popham v. Peckham, 7 H. & N. 891; Davison v. Duncan, 7 E. & B. 229. But a report sent to the members is prima facie privileged. Laughton v. Bishop of Sodor and Man, 4 P. C. 495; Waller v. Lock, 7 Q. B. D. 619. And see Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Beall, 20 C. D. 508.

63. The business of an ordinary meeting other than the first one shall be to receive and consider the profit and loss account, the balance-sheet, and the reports of the directors and of the auditors, to elect directors and other officers in the place of those retiring by rotation, to declare dividends, and to transact any other business which, under these presents, ought to be transacted at an ordinary meeting. All other business transacted at an ordinary meeting, and all business transacted at an extraordinary meeting, shall be deemed special.

Business of ordinary meeting.

Special
business.

The last paragraph of this clause refers to clause 60. Sometimes it is provided that all special business shall be transacted at an extraordinary meeting; but as this precludes the transaction of special business at an ordinary meeting, even after notice, it may be found inconvenient. Of course, an extraordinary meeting can be convened to be held at the close of the ordinary; but if proxies are wanted, there must be a separate proxy paper for each. Infra, clause 81.

Where the clause is framed as above, special business can be dealt with at an ordinary meeting if the notice specifies it.

64. Three members personally present shall be a quorum for a Quorum general meeting for the choice of chairman, the declaration of a dividend, and the adjournment of the meeting. For all other Form 251. purposes the quorum for a general meeting shall be members personally present, not being less than [5] in number, and holding, or representing by proxy, not less than one-tenth part of the issued capital of the coy.

If there be no provision as to a quorum in the articles two members are requisite to form a quorum. This is the common law rule. One member cannot as a rule, constitute a quorum or a meeting, even though he holds proxies Sharpe v. Daws, 2 Q. B. D. 26; Re Sanitary Carbon Co., W. N. (1877) 223. But where a single person held all the preference shares of the company, it was held that such a person could exercise the power to consent on behalf of preference shareholders to a modification of their rights. East v. Bennett Brothers, Lim., (1911) 1 Ch. 163. Even where the articles do not say personally present, as above, the word is implied. Per North, J., Flintshire Oil and Cannel Co., 14th May, 1887, in which it was held, two years after date, that the winding-up resolution was invalid, on the ground that at one of the meetings there was no quorum personally present. And see Cambrian, &c. Co. 23 W. R. 405; Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, (1897) 1 Ch. 1.

A resolution passed at a meeting at which a quorum is not present is void (Romford Canal Co., 24 C. D. 85; Cambrian Co., supra); and so also is passed by votes of persons not entitled to vote, e.g., because indebted to the company. See clause 82, infra, p. 708, and the last case above mentioned. The articles sometimes establish a scale for determining a quorum. As to whether provisions in the articles as to quorum apply in case of meetings held for passing a special or extraordinary resolution as defined by sect. 69 of the Act, see infra, introductory notes to Chap. XIII.

Sometimes the articles provide for a quorum "present in person or by proxy," and in such case proxies can be counted.

In the case of joint holders it would seem prima facie that any one of them may be counted in a quorum.

Quorum to be present when business commenced.

65. No business shall be transacted at any general meeting unless the quorum requisite shall be present at the commencement of the business.

Table A., clause 51, is as follows: "No business shall be transacted at any general meeting unless a quorum of members is present at the time when the meeting proceeds to business: save as herein otherwise provided, three members personally present shall be a quorum."

In the case of a small company the quorum is not uncommonly fixed at two or three.

Chairman of general meeting.

66. The chairman of the directors shall be entitled to take the chair at every general meeting, or, if there be no such chairman, or, if at any meeting he shall not be present within fifteen minutes after the time appointed for holding such meeting, the members present shall choose another director as chairman, and, if no director be present, or, if all the directors present decline to take the chair, then the members present shall choose one of their number to be chairman.

Sometimes provision is made for a deputy chairman.
Conf. Table A., clauses 53, 54.

The duty of the chairman is to keep order and see that the business is properly conducted. Indian Loedone Co., 26 Ch. D. 70. His decisions upon points of order and any incidental questions that arise are to be taken to be prima facie correct. S. C., and see Wandsworth Gaslight Co. v. Wright, 22 L. T. 404. He may, by a vote of a majority, close a discussion after it has been reasonably debated. Wall v. London & Northern Assets Corp. (No. 1 (1898) 2 Ch. 467. Form 251.

67. If within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting a quorum is not present, the meeting, if convened upon such requisition as aforesaid, shall be dissolved; but in any other case it shall stand adjourned to the same day in the next week, at the same time and place, and if at such adjourned meeting a quorum is not present [those members who are present shall be a quorum, and may transact the business for which the meeting was called].

When, if quorum not present, meeting to be dissolved, and when to be adjourned

Or the words in brackets may be omitted, and the following inserted: "it shall be adjourned sine die." This is the form in Table A., clause 52; but the above is now frequently used, for it is found that members are often so supine that it is almost impossible to get together a quorum, although the business may be pressing.

68. Every question submitted to a meeting shall be decided, in the first instance, by a show of hands, and in the case of an equality of votes the chairman shall, both on a show of hands and at the poll, have a casting vote in addition to the vote or votes to which he may be entitled as a member.

How questions to be decided at meetings.
Casting vote.

A show of hands is the common law mode of ascertaining the sense of a meeting, and should be taken even where the articles do not expressly so provide. Horbury Bridge Co., 11 C. Div. 109.

If the number of votes at a general meeting is equal, the chairman has no casting vote by common right.

In Bidwell Brothers, (1893) 1 Ch. 603, Vaughan Williams, J., dissenting from the decision of Kay, J., in Caloria Engine, &c. Co., 52 L. T. 846, held that upon a resolution to take effect under sect. 51 of the Companies Act, 1862, a member present only by proxy had a right to vote upon a show of hands, and that the chairman was bound to ascertain as best he could the way such a member voted. This was contrary to common practice, and the decision was overruled by Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, (1897) 1 Ch. 1, in which the Court of Appeal held that where proxy voting is allowed, the chairman, in ascertaining the number of votes on a show of hands, must count the hands only. This, too, is the common law rule.

"Equality of votes" means equality of valid votes, and the chairman may give a contingent or hypothetical casting vote, to come into operation if, in subsequent proceedings, it turns out that there is an equality of valid votes. Ilford v. Buchanan, (1901) 2 K. B. 75.

69. At any general meeting, unless a poll is demanded, in the case of a special or extraordinary resolution by at least five [or if thought fit any lesser number] persons entitled to vote, or in any

What is to be evidence of the passing of a resolution

Form 251. other case by [the chairman or by] at least [five] members, or by a member or members holding or representing by proxy or entitl to vote in respect of at least one-tenth part of the capital represented at the meeting, a declaration by the chairman that a resolution has been carried, or carried by a particular majority, or lost, or not carried by a particular majority, and an entry to that effect in the book of proceedings of the coy, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against such resolution.

There is a common law right to demand a poll, but the articles may exclude or restrict it. Reg. v. The Wimbledon Local Board, 3 Q. B. Div. 459; better reported in 30 W. R. 402, and 46 L. T. 47; Campbell v. Maund, 5 A. & E. 865.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, a proxy appointed to vote at a general meeting is not entitled to demand a poll (per Bacon, V.-C., Haren Gold Co., 20 C. D. 151); and where the articles require the demand to be made by several holders of shares, a proxy is not a holder within the words. Reg. v. Government Stock Co., 3 Q. B. D. 443.

When a poll is duly demanded it is the chairman's duty to grant it, and to fix the time and place for taking it. Anthony v. Seger, 1 Hagg. Cas. Con. 913.

A poll need not be demanded publicly; it is sufficient if the chairman acts on a private demand. Phoenix Co., 48 L. T. 260. Nor need the demand be in writing, or, in the absence of express provision, seconded. Re v. Mayor of Dover, (1903) 1 K. B. 668.

The chairman's declaration is not "conclusive" where there is no quorum: so if the declaration states that the resolution was passed, but shows on the face of it that the resolution was carried by less than the requisite majority will not be conclusive. Caratal (New) Mines, (1902) 2 Ch. 498; Clark & Co., (1911) 8 C. 243, Ct. of Sess.

Minutes of proceedings at meetings are not conclusive as to the regularity of the proceedings. Betts & Co. v. Macnaghten, (1910) 1 Ch. 430.

Where the resolution is to take effect as a special or extraordinary resolution under sect. 69 of the Act the declaration of the chairman is conclusive, unless at least three persons entitled to vote demand a poll, or such other number not exceeding five as the articles may fix, or the section so provides.

Poll.

70. If a poll is demanded as aforesaid, it shall be taken in such manner and at such time and place as the chairman of the meeting directs [and either at once, or after an interval or adjournment, or otherwise], and the result of the poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the meeting at which the poll was demanded. [The demand of a poll may be withdrawn.]

A poll is an appeal to the whole constituency, and "is taken in order to ascertain the sense of the general body of persons qualified to vote, and to give others beside those who are present when the poll is demanded power to come in and exercise their right of voting, and in order to ascertain whether the voters have the qualification which is required in order to entitle them to exercise the privilege of voting." Per Cotton, L. J., Reg. v. Wimbledon Local Board, 3 Q. B. D. 459.

A poll should be demanded forthwith after the show of hands. Campbell v. Maund, 5 A. & E. 865; The Queen v. Thomas, 11 Q. B. D. 282. Form 251.

When a poll is duly demanded the show of hands goes for nothing, and the decision of the meeting depends on the result of the poll (Anthony v. Seger, 1 Hagg. Cas. Con. 913; Queen v. Cooper, L. R. 5 Q. B. 457); in contemplation of law the meeting continues until the poll has been taken. Reg. v. Wimbledon Local Board, supra. Hence, in the absence of express provision as above, a poll once demanded cannot be withdrawn. Rex v. Mayor of Dover, supra. In the absence of any provision in the articles to the contrary, the chairman is the person to grant the poll. Reg. v. Hedges, 12 A. & E. 159.

A poll may, it seems, without special provision in that behalf as above, be taken at the meeting at which it is demanded. Per Kay, J., in Chillington Iron Co., 29 C. D. 159, following a dictum of Denman, C. J., in Reg. v. D'Oyley, 12 Ad. & El. 139. See, however, dicta to the contrary in Horbury Bridge Co., 11 C. Div. 109.

If the articles show that a poll is not to be taken at once they must, of course, be observed. British Share Co., 6 L. T. 215.

A voter may vote at the poll even though not present when the poll was demanded. Campbell v. Maund, ubi supra.

To exclude a voter may invalidate the poll. Reg. v. Lambeth, 8 Ad. & El. 356.

Upon taking a poll the right to vote and the number of shares is to be determined, if any question arises, by a reference to the register of members. Pender v. Lushington, 6 Ch. D. 70. The usual mode of taking a poll is to require every person who desires to vote to sign a paper headed, "For," or "Against" the motion. The votes of each member are then inserted, and, these having been added up, the chairman declares the result. There is no power at a poll, in the absence of express provision in the articles, to take it by voting papers. Macmillan v. Le Roi Mining Co., (1906) 1 Ch. 331.

If the poll is not completed on the day on which it is commenced it must be continued subsequently, for the chairman is not entitled to close the poll whilst voters are coming in (Reg. v. St. Pancras, 11 Ad. & E. 15; Reg. v. Graham, 9 W. R. 738); but the chairman is not bound to wait for hours to see whether voters will come in. Reg. v. Lambeth, ubi supra. Nevertheless, the chairman may direct the continuance of the poll at a subsequent period in order to give an opportunity to other voters to come in.

The poll is to be regarded as part of the proceedings of the meeting. Reg. v. Wimbledon Local Board, supra.

To appoint a subsequent day for the taking or completion of the poll is not an adjournment of the meeting, although it in effect continues the meeting (Reg. v. Chester, 1 Ad. & E. 342; Reg. v. Wimbledon, ubi supra); but it is usual to adjourn the meeting to hear the result. Sometimes there is no formal adjournment, but it is arranged that notice of the result shall be given, and to this there would seem to be no legal objection.

As to a scrutiny: It is usual to appoint scrutineers to compute the votes at a poll and report to the chairman, but the regulations rarely provide for a scrutiny. The meeting can appoint scrutineers. Wandsworth Co. v. Wright, 22 L. T. 404. Very commonly they are appointed by the chairman with the assent of the meeting. Sometimes the chairman acts as scrutineer.

It is for the chairman to decide as to the validity of the proxies, and his decision will stand unless it is proved to the Court to be wrong. Indian Zeddone Co., 26 C. D. 70.

A referendum by polling papers cannot, unless the articles so provide, be taken in lieu of a poll. Macmillan v. Le Roi Mining Co., (1906) 1 Ch. 331.

Form 251.

Power to adjourn general meeting.

71. The chairman of a general meeting may, with the consent of the meeting, adjourn the same from time to time and from place to place, but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place.

At common law it seems that the power to adjourn rests with the chairman Reg. v. D'Oyley, 12 Ad. & E. 158.

The chairman is, by clause 60 (q. v.), given a discretion, and he is not bound to adjourn the meeting. Salisbury, &c. Co. v. Hathorn, (1897) A. C. 268.

If the chairman improperly purports to adjourn or stop the meeting and leaves the chair, the meeting can elect some other chairman and proceed. National Dwellings Society v. Sykes, (1894) 3 Ch. 159.

But if the meeting is duly adjourned or dissolved, members who remain behind cannot continue the business. Rex v. Gaboriau, 11 East. 77. It would seem that a meeting may be adjourned to a day to be fixed by subsequent notice. Reg. v. Mayor, &c. of London, 9 B. & C. 1. But unless the regulations otherwise provide, no fresh notice of an adjourned meeting is necessary (see supra, clause 60; and Wells v. Murray, 4 Ex. 843), an adjourned meeting being a continuance of the original meeting (Souding v. Roant, 3 H. L. C. 418).

Clause 55 of Table A. empowers a chairman, with the consent of the meeting, to adjourn, and obliges him, if so directed by the meeting, to adjourn. This is considered objectionable.

In what cases poll taken without adjournment.

72. Any poll duly demanded on the election of a chairman of a meeting, or on any question of adjournment, shall be taken at the meeting, and without adjournment.

It has been questioned whether, in the absence of express power, a poll can be demanded on a question of adjournment. Mardougal v. Gardiner, 1 C. Div. 13. However, a clause as above is frequently inserted, and seems expedient. Not uncommonly it is provided that no poll shall be demanded in such cases, but no good reason can be suggested why proxies should be deprived of the power to vote on these matters. If a poll cannot be demanded, a few members who happen to be personally present may be able to effect an adjournment, say, for three months, though at a poll there would be a vast majority against adjournment. Besides, in the case of a meeting to confirm a special resolution very serious difficulties might arise.

Business may proceed notwithstanding demand of poll.

73. The demand of a poll shall not prevent the continuance of a meeting for the transaction of any business other than the question on which a poll has been demanded.

VOTES OF MEMBERS.

Votes of members.

74. On a show of hands every member present in person shall have one vote, and upon a poll every member present in person or by proxy shall have one vote for every share held by him. [Where a corporation being a member is present by a proxy who is not a member, such proxy shall be entitled to vote for such corporation on a show of hands.] Form 251.

The right of voting requires careful consideration. Sometimes a scale is adopted, e.g., by adding in the above clause the words "up to ten, and to an additional vote for every ten shares beyond the first ten up to one hundred, and to an additional vote for every one hundred shares beyond the first hundred."

Sometimes one class of shares is given no vote, e.g.: "Every member holding ordinary shares shall have one vote for every ordinary share, &c. The preference shares shall not confer on the holder the right to attend or to vote at any general meeting, or to receive any notice thereof." The following is another form sometimes used:—"But the said preference shares shall not confer on the holders the right to attend or vote, either in person or by proxy, at any general meeting, or to have notice of such meeting, unless the meeting is convened for reducing the capital, or winding up or sanctioning a sale of the undertaking, or altering the regulations of the company, or where the proposition to be submitted to the meeting directly affects the rights and privileges of the holders, or the dividend thereon is in arrear for more than three months." And see Form 334, infra.

Sometimes it is declared that no member holding less than [100%] capital shall have a vote.

And where a large proportion of the capital is to be issued to a vendor, his rights of voting in respect thereof are sometimes limited. These are matters for the consideration of the promoters.

There is nothing in the Act to invalidate an article negating the right of any specified class of members to vote. On the contrary, sect. 67 (iv) provides that "In default of and subject to any regulations in the articles, every member shall have one vote." This is a recognition that voting rights depend on the articles. Table A, clause 63, for instance, denies the right of voting to a member in default in payment of a call. Hence, it is for the articles to determine what shall be the rights of voting, and whether any particular shares shall or shall not confer votes. Moreover, there is nothing in the Act to prevent the articles from conferring the right of voting on non-members, e.g., debenture holders, and the Court has frequently sanctioned such a scheme of government; but, of course, votes by non-members cannot be taken into account for the purposes of a special or extraordinary resolution, for the words of sect. 69 under it necessary to count in such cases the votes only of members.

In like manner there is nothing in the Act to invalidate an article which excludes a class of members from attending general meetings in person or by proxy, and it is quite common to so provide where the class is not entitled to vote.

The right to vote is determined by the register of members. Pender v. Lushington, 6 C. D. 80.

A member is (subject to agreement) entitled to vote as he likes (East Pant, &c. Co. v. Merryweather, 2 H. & M. 254; London & Merc. Dir. Co., 1 Eq. 277; Pender v. Lushington, 6 C. D. 70; N. W. Transportation Co. v. Beatty, 12 App. Cas. 589; Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 94. For a shareholder's vote is a right of property, which he may exercise as he pleases, even though he uses it in his private interests, and against the interests of the company, but a majority will not be allowed to obtain for themselves an unfair advantage at the expense of the minority. Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works, 9 Ch. 350; see also Atwood v. Merryweather, 5 Eq. 464, n.; Mason v. Harris, 11 C. Div.

Form 251.

97; Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 56; Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656; Punt v. Symons & Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 656. The right of voting given by articles may be given up or controlled by special agreement. Greenwell v. Porter, (1902) 1 Ch. 530.

A member is entitled to transfer his shares to nominees, so as to secure to himself the maximum of voting power, and the directors must register the transfers, unless the articles give them a power to decline, which is applicable in such case. Stranton Iron Co., 16 Eq. 550; Pender v. Lushington, 6 Ch. D 70; see further, supra, p. 686.

It is seldom, however, deemed necessary expressly to restrict the right of transfer in this respect. Clause 82a, infra, is sometimes inserted, and in all ordinary cases prevents what was done in the case above mentioned. But though clause 82a may be found useful in this respect, it is open to objection on the score of inconvenience and defeating the voting right of new members coming into the company bona fide.

If the articles so provide, the chairman's decision as to the validity of a vote is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive. Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corp., (1898) 2 Ch. 489.

A provision in articles that no objection shall be taken to any vote except at the meeting at which it is tendered, or any adjournment thereof, is binding, and votes not thus disallowed cannot afterwards be challenged. Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corp. (No. 2), (1899) 1 Ch. 550. But such a provision is unusual.

By the Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 1896, restrictions are placed on the voting by "collectors" who are members of an industrial assurance company.

As to a company voting by its officials or any other representative, see sect. 68 of the Act of 1908.

members.

75 Any person entitled under the transmission clause [supra clause 38] to transfer any shares may vote at any general meeting in respect thereof in the same manner as if he were the registered holder of such shares, provided that forty-eight hours at least before the time of holding the meeting or adjourned meeting, as the case may be, at which he proposes to vote he shall satisfy the directors of his right to transfer such shares, or the directors shall have previously admitted his right to vote at such meeting in respect thereof.

Joint holders.

76. Where there are joint registered holders of any share, any one of such persons may vote at any meeting, either personally or by proxy, in respect of such share as if he were solely entitled thereto, and if more than one of such joint holders be present at any meeting, personally or by proxy, that one of the said persons so present whose name stands first on the register in respect of such share shall alone be entitled to vote in respect thereof [or, those so present shall respectively be entitled to an equal part of the votes conferred by the joint holding]. Several executors or administrators of a deceased member in whose name any share stands shall for the purposes of this clause be deemed joint holders thereof.

The above clause is common, but the following is, perhaps, more usual:—

Form 251.

"76. If there be joint registered holders of any shares, the member whose name stands first on the register, and no other, shall be entitled to vote in respect of such shares; but the other or others of the joint holders shall be entitled to be present at the general meeting."

Sometimes the words following are inserted in clause 76 before the word "several": "upon a show of hands; but upon a poll each of them shall be entitled, as nearly as may be, to a rateable proportion of the total number of votes conferred by the joint holding."

In the absence of the concluding paragraph of clause 76, it seems that the executors or administrators, if they want to vote, must all vote together in person or by proxy.

77. A vote may be given either personally or by proxy.

Proxies permitted

There appears to be no right at common law to vote by proxy (Harben v. Phillips, 23 C. D. 35); the right must be expressly given by the articles. Such a mode of voting being the only way of ascertaining the wishes of the whole body of shareholders, many of whom may reside at a distance, the directors acting bona fide in the interests of the company may properly send out stamped proxy forms at the expense of the company. Peel v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co., (1907) 1 Ch. 5, overruling Stoddart v. Glenconner, 33 Ch. D. 528.

As to proxies voting on a show of hands, see clause 68, supra.

78. The instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing, under the hand of the appointor or of his attorney, or, if such appointor is a corporation, under its common seal [or the hand of its attorney]. No person shall be appointed a proxy who is not a member of the company and qualified to vote, save that a corporation being a member of the company may appoint as its proxy one of its officers, though not a member of the company.

Instrument appointing proxy to be in writing.

Suppose the words in brackets are absent, must the proxy paper be under the appointor's own hand? It would seem that it must. Wilson v. Wallcut, 5 Ex. D. 155.

The clause sometimes contains words requiring attestation, but they are better omitted, for attestation may be forgotten, and in that case the instrument is not available. Harben v. Phillips, 23 C. Div. 14. There would not appear to be any legal objection to a proxy in blank. Ex parte Lancaster, 5 C. D. 911; Solgrave v. Bryden, (1907) 1 Ch. 368; Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, (1897) 1 Ch. 1.

The appointor cannot attest the appointee's signature (Ex parte Cullen, (1891) 2 Q. B. 151) or vice versa. Re Parrott, 61 L. T. 801.

Where A. appoints B. his proxy for a particular meeting, and afterwards appoints C. for the same meeting, does the second revoke the first? It would seem that it does. Ex parte Mure, 2 Cox, 67; Re Lucas, 17 Jur. 1186.

Suppose the appointor is himself present at a meeting, it would seem that his presence does not avoid the instrument of proxy, but if he votes before his proxy has voted for him, it is clear that he has impliedly revoked the proxy. Knight v. Bulkley, 5 Jur. (N. S.) 817; 33 L. T. 7; Story on Agency, s. 475.

Under the latter part of the clause it has been held that the instrument is not invalid if the person named was not a member when the proxy was signed provided he was a member when it was lodged and acted on, and that under such words it is sufficient if the person appointed is sufficiently described although not named in the instrument. Bombay Burmah Trading Corp. v. Darahji Curnetji Shroff, (1905) A. C. 213 (P. C.).

As to a company's mode of voting, see sect. 69 of the Act of 1908.

and to be
at office.

79. The instrument appointing a proxy [and the power of attorney, if any, under which it is signed] shall be deposited at the office not less than forty-eight hours before the time for holding the meeting or adjourned meeting, as the case may be, at which the person named in such instrument proposes to vote [but no instrument appointing a proxy shall be valid after the expiration of twelve months from the date of its execution].

Sometimes the words within brackets in the above clause are omitted, and the following substituted: "and no proxy shall be entitled to vote except at the particular meeting mentioned in the instrument, or any adjournment thereof, and upon every poll that may take place at or in consequence of any such meeting or adjournment." But there seems no sufficient reason why a member should not be enabled to appoint a proxy for a specified period, e.g., where he is going abroad. It was very proper to insert such a provision when the law would not permit the appointment of a proxy, except in regard to a specified meeting. See infra, note to clause 81.

Very commonly such a clause does not contain the words "or adjourned meeting as the case may be," and the question sometimes arises whether in the absence of those words a proxy is incapable of use at an adjourned meeting unless it was deposited forty-eight hours before the original meeting. The words are capable of that construction; for an adjourned meeting is to be considered at any rate for some purposes a continuation of the original meeting [supra, note to clause 60]; but it is also capable of the construction that a proxy deposited forty-eight hours before the adjourned meeting is available thereat.

Now the object of the clause is to give forty-eight hours for the examination of the proxy papers, and that object as regards an adjourned meeting would be attained by admitting proxies filed forty-eight hours before such adjourned meeting. Why should a man who attends in person at the original meeting be unable to attend by proxy at the adjourned meeting? for that is what it comes to. Is such a man to be disfranchised seeing that the words are capable of another and more reasonable construction?

It is conceived that the inclination of the Court would be to construe the clause so as not to restrict the use of proxies.

If it is desired to exclude the vote, the words following should be added to the clause: "and no proxy shall be used at an adjourned meeting which could not have been used at the original meeting."

When vote by proxy valid, though authority revoked.

[79a. A vote given in accordance with the terms of an instrument of proxy shall be valid notwithstanding the previous death of the principal, or revocation of the proxy, or transfer of the share in respect of which the vote is given, provided no intimation in writing of the death, revocation, or transfer shall have been received at the office before the meeting.]

This is occasionally inserted and may be useful.

80 Holders of share warrants shall not be entitled to vote by proxy in respect of the shares or stock included in such warrants. Form 251.

81 Every instrument of proxy, whether for a specified meeting or otherwise, shall, as nearly as circumstances will admit, be in the form or to the effect following:—

rants not to vote by proxy.

Conf. Table A., clause 67.

By virtue of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21, s. 6, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 2, a proxy could only be appointed for a specified meeting, but both those Acts were repealed by the Inland Revenue Repeal Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 99). By the Stamp Act, 1891, a letter or power of attorney or commission, factory or mandate, or other instrument in the nature thereof, for the sole purpose of appointing or authorizing a proxy to vote at any one meeting at which votes may be given by proxy, whether the number of persons named in such instrument be one or more, is charged with the duty of one penny, and any other instrument appointing a proxy is liable to a duty of 10s. Such an instrument, if executed abroad, may be stamped within thirty days after its arrival in this country. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, s. 15 (2). And, namely, it may be acted on before it is stamped. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, (1893) 3 Ch. 385.

Hence, a proxy as above only requires a penny stamp. If the proxy is to be for a specified period, e.g., "at any general meeting of the company that may be held before the - day of -," or for several specified meetings, it requires a 10s. stamp. It is often found convenient to name several in the alternative as above, lest one should be absent.

Sect. 80 of the Stamp Act, 1891, provides as follows:

- (1.) Every letter or power of attorney for the purpose of appointing a proxy to vote at a meeting, and every voting paper, hereby respectively charged with the duty of one penny, is to specify the date upon which the meeting at which it is intended to be used is to be held, and is to be available only at the meeting so specified, or any adjournment thereof. [This paragraph does not apply where a 10s. duty is paid as above.]
- (2.) The duty of one penny may be denoted by an adhesive stamp which is to be cancelled by the person by whom the instrument is executed, and a letter or power of attorney, charged with the duty of one penny, is not to be stamped after the execution thereof by any person. [The cancellation may now be effected without writing the name and date across it. McAleen v. Sir Alfred Hickman Steamship Co., 18 T. L. R. 650.]
- (3.) Every person who makes, or executes, or votes, or attempts to vote, under or by means of any such letter or power of attorney or voting paper, not being duly stamped, shall incur a fine of fifty pounds; and every vote given or tendered under the authority or by means of any such letter or power of attorney or voting paper, not being duly stamped, shall be void.

When proxies are sent out, it will be found expedient to have them impressed with the requisite stamp: for even where precise directions as to the proper mode of cancelling an adhesive stamp are given, it is generally found that a good many shareholders will make some mistake. It would seem that a proxy bearing a stamp not duly cancelled ought not to be counted, unless it is executed abroad. See supra.

To cancel an adhesive stamp the signatory should place his initials and the date on it, or otherwise mark it so as to be incapable of subsequent use. McMullen (Sir Alfred Hickman) Steamship, Limited, 71 L. J. Ch. 755; see supra, p. 337.

In Studdert v. Grosvenor, 33 C. D. 528, Kay, J., held that it was ultra vires for directors to expend the money of the company in sending out proxy papers with the names of the directors filled in as proxies; but this decision was overruled in Peel v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., (1907) 1 Ch. 5, on the ground that such expenditure is in the interests of the company by ascertaining the wishes of the shareholders; and see Lindley on Companies, 6th ed. 430.

"To the effect." Substituting, for instance, the words "a proprietor" for "a member" would not be objectionable. Per Kay, J., Indian Zoedona Co., 26 C. D. 78.

When a proxy is to be in a specified form or "to the like effect," requisite modifications may be made to suit the circumstances. Queen v. General Council of Medicine, (1897) 9 Q. B. 203.

A proxy signed in blank as to the name of the appointee, or as to the date of the meeting, and delivered with authority to fill up the blank, is not open to objection if, when deposited with the company, the blank has been duly filled up. Re Lancaster, 5 C. Div. 911; Nadgrove v. Bryden, (1907) 1 Ch. 364, and see Whitchour, 42 L. T. 385; Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, (1897) 1 Ch. 1. It is not a deed, and there is therefore no objection to the blank being filled up by the agent of the appointor, even though appointed by parol. Cartier v. White, 25 C. D. 666. The instrument in such circumstances is not complete until it is filled up, and when filled up the only question is whether it is duly stamped as required in its then condition. Gatey v. Fry, 2 Ex. Div. 265; Royal Bank v. Tottenham, (1894) 2 Q. B. 715.

Moreover, the delivery of an instrument, thus signed in blank, impliedly authorizes the person to whom it is given to fill in his own name. Re T. Cotton Co., 17 Eq. 273; Re Tees Bottling Co., 33 L. T. 834; France v. A., 26 C. D. 257; as to which, see Herdman v. Wheeler, (1902) 1 K. B. 361, 368.

No member entitled to vote, &c., while call due to company.

82. No member shall be entitled to be present, or to vote on any question, either personally or by proxy, or as proxy for another member, at any general meeting, or upon a poll, or be reckoned in a quorum, whilst any call or other sum shall be due and payable to the company in respect of any of the shares of such member.

The disability attaches to a buyer. Thus, after forfeiture of shares and resale to another person, that person cannot vote while the original holder owes calls. Randt Gold Mining Co. v. Wainwright, (1901) 1 Ch. 184.

See Cambrian, &c. Co. v. W. N. (1875) 6. As to the invalidity of a meeting failing a quorum, the following clause is not uncommon:—

meeting, or upon a poll, or be reckoned in a quorum, whilst any call or other sum shall be due and payable to the company in respect of any of the shares of such member; and no member shall be entitled to be present or to vote in respect of any share that he has acquired by transfer at any meeting held after the expiration of three calendar months from the registration of the company, unless he has been possessed of the share in respect of which he claims to vote for at least three months previously to the time fixed for holding the meeting at which he proposes to vote, or (if such meeting be an adjourned meeting) to the time originally fixed for holding the same.

82b Any resolution passed by the directors, notice whereof shall be given to the members in the manner in which notices are hitherto directed to be given, and which shall, within one month after it shall have been so passed, be ratified and confirmed in writing by members entitled at a poll to three-fifths of the votes, shall be as valid and effectual as a resolution of a general meeting; but this clause shall not apply to a resolution for winding up the company, or to a resolution passed in respect of any matter which by the statutes or these presents ought to be dealt with by special or extraordinary resolution.

Resolution in writing of directors, in certain cases, to be equivalent to resolution of general meeting.

This clause is now commonly inserted, and is found very useful. It is sometimes next to impossible to get a general meeting together, and meantime business is obliged to be left in abeyance. But where quotation is desired it had better be omitted, as the Stock Exchange Committee sometimes object to it, although it has in numerous cases been passed.

DIRECTORS.

The business of a joint stock company is usually carried on by a body or "board," as it is generally called, of directors. The office of a director is one of honour and responsibility, and it was worthily vindicated from the unfair aspersions sometimes cast upon it in a memorable speech by the Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour when Prime Minister in the House of Commons in 1903: "It would appear," he said, "from the tone of the debate that there is supposed to be something disgraceful in being the director of a public company. (Opposition cries of 'No.') I am not in the least exaggerating the tone of the comments of the honourable gentleman who moved the amendment. The honourable Member talked of a Minister being 'guilty' of holding a directorship. The Minister is still more guilty if he holds two or three directorships, and if he holds four he is a downright criminal. Talk as you will about this motion being made in the interest of commercial purity, its effect will be precisely the opposite. To spread abroad the idea that a man is derogating from his position as a man of unspotted honour if he gives his labours as a director of public companies is the worst thing you can do in the interest of this great commercial country. (Hear, hear.) No one has thought it worth while, I am sorry to say, to come to become a director, and I can assure you that I should regard such a request from an honourable company as a very high compliment indeed. (Hear, hear.) I strongly object, in the public interest, to the notion that a man is doing something he ought not to do, something of which he ought to be a little ashamed, if he accepts the responsibility of aiding one of those great public corporations who carry on so much of the business upon which, remember, the prosperity of the country depends. (Hear, hear.) I cannot imagine a more honourable use of such brains and energy as Providence may have given any citizen of this country than that he should expend them in such a good work." —The Times.

They are special agents of company

"Director" under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1906, s. 266, includes "any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called."

A director is not bound to bring any special qualifications to his office, but if he is acquainted with the particular business carried on by the company he must give the company the advantage of his knowledge when transacting the company's business. Reedman Woods' Statutes, No. 1, 1911, 1 Ch. 125.

The directors are agents of the company (Perghman v. Widom, 2 Ch. 77); they are special, not general, agents; that is to say, they have such powers only as are vested in them by the memorandum and articles, and in dealing with the company is presumed to have read those documents, and accordingly to be cognizant of the extent of, and the restrictions on, the powers of the directors. Ernest v. Nicholls, 6 H. L. C. 419; Moham v. East Ang. Ford Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 406; Chaplin v. Henrick Building Soc., 6 Q. B. D. 606; and see Introductory Chapter. In most cases the powers of the directors are very wide. See clause 113, infra, p. 746. But even where the directors exceed their powers or infringe the restrictions imposed on them, the company may be bound; for an outsider dealing with the company is only bound to see that the transaction is apparently regular and consistent with the articles.

Royal British Bank v. Tapscott, 6 Ell. & B. 327; Bohmer v. I. Co., ubi supra. He need not go into internal matters, e.g., ascertain that a particular resolution has been passed, that a particular meeting has been duly held, or that particular formalities have been complied with; he is entitled to presume omnia rite acta. Turner v. London Bank of Indemnity, 2 App. Cas. 366; Davies v. R. R. & Co., 1894, 34 Ch. 678; Carr v. Carr, 1895, 1 Ch. 629; Rudra, & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 629; Hammersmith Loan Co., 1896, 2 Ch. 743; Broadwater v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., 1896, 2 Ch. 93, supra, pp. 79, 81; Re Canada Insurance Co., L. R. 5 Ch. 286; Moham v. East Ang. Ford Co., supra; but if a director knows of the irregularity the case is different. Howard v. Paton Tea Co., 38 Ch. D. 156; Turn. Mod. L., 7, 283.

Nor if directors have power to borrow money on its behalf is the lender bound to ascertain that the money is required for the purposes of the company. Daniel Payne & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 608; Harker v. Eastern Counties Rail. Co., 5 H. L. C. 331; Re Marseilles, &c. Rail. Co., 7 Ch. 161.

But directors who act in excess of their authority, e.g., borrow in excess of the borrowing limit, may be personally liable on the ground that they warrant their authority. Colten v. Wright (1857), 8 Ell. & Bl. 647; Weeks v. Propert, L. R. 8 C. P. 427; Fisbank's Executors v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. D. 54; Oliver v. Bank of England, (1901) 1 Ch. 810.

A director is not in the position of a managing partner, with individual powers as such. Ridley v. Plymouth Co., 2 Ex. 711; 17 L. J. Ex. 252; R. A. Cunningham, 58 L. T. 16. He is only one of a body of directors, and alone has no power, except such as is delegated by them to him, or vested in him individually by the articles. Ernest v. Nicholls, ubi supra. "Whatever authority is given by shareholders to directors is given to them as a body, and not to each of them individually." Per Turner, L. J., Nicol's case, 3 D. & J. 440 (1859); and see D'Arey v. The Tamar Rail. Co., L. R. 2 Ex. 158; Re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines, 42 Ch. D. 167. The company is entitled to their collective wisdom in meeting assembled (Imperial Co. v. Colman, 6 Ch. 559) unless the articles otherwise provide.

The director has a separate existence and entity from that of the company, and although largely interested in it as a shareholder, is not bound by oral promises to answer for its debt, default or misarranging, the company being "another" within the meaning of sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Harburg v. Biber Comb Co. v. Martin, (1902) 1 K. B. 778.

Form 251.

As directors are, in the eye of the law, agents of the company for which they are the general principles of the law of principal and agent regulate in most respects the relationship of the company and its directors. Hence (1) where directors make a contract in the name of or purporting to bind the company, the company - the principal - which is liable on it, not the directors (Green v. Wilson, 2 Ch. 77; Gadd v. Houghton, 1 Ex. D. 357); they are personally liable unless it appears that they undertook personal liability (v. Melrose, 3 H. & N. 177; McCallan v. Gilpin, 5 Q. B. D. 390; Devlin v. Ashworth, 21 T. L. R. 510), e.g., by contracting in their own name, or by contracting for the company without using the word "limited" as part of the name. See sect. 63 of the Act of 1908. (2) Where directors contract in their own names, but really on behalf of the company, the other party to the contract can, on discovering that the company is the real principal, sue the company on the contract. (3) Where directors enter into a contract which is within the power of the company, but is beyond the powers of the directors, the like any other principal, can ratify the contract. Grant v. United Railways, 30 C. D. 135; Lucas v. Union Bank of Australia, Cas. 300; London and New York Investment Corp., (1895) 2 Ch.

When directors enter into a contract on behalf of a company they must state that they are what they purport to be, that is, the company's agents in fact, and must answer for any damage which directly results from con- being given to the representation that they have authority. Colten v. E. & B. 301; 8 E. & B. 447, 657; Fishback's Executors v. Ham, 18 Q. B. D. 54 and see supra. And this, although the misrepresentation innocent. Starkey v. Bank of England, (1903) A. C. 114, 116; Hall v. Bank of England, (1902) 1 Ch. 610. The rule in Royal British, supra, p. 79, goes far, however, to render the doctrine of warranty of comparatively small importance.

Directors are not only agents, but they are in some sense and to some extent in the position of trustees. No doubt their position differs considerably from that of the trustees of a marriage settlement or will, and as we pointed out the strict rules applicable to such trustees do not apply in all respects to directors. The difference between an agent and a trustee is well explained by James L. J. in Smith v. Anderson, 15 Ch. D. 27.

Directors how far trustees

Nevertheless it is impossible now to dispute the proposition that they are in the same sense trustees that proposition having been established by a long series of cases.

Thus, in Charitable Corporation v. Sutton (1742), 2 Atk. 400, Lord Hardwicke, L. C., held that committeemen or directors of a chartered corporation who had misapplied its funds and committed breaches of its by-laws were liable as trustees for "breach of trust." So, in York & N. Ry. Co. v. Hudson (1853), 16 Beav. 185, directors who had improperly dealt with funds of the company were held liable as trustees.

So again, in Ferguson v. Wilson (1866), 2 Ch. 90, Lord Cairns said that directors being in the position of trustees, are, of course, liable in this court.

This twofold character of directors is, perhaps, best expressed in Lord Cairns's words in G. E. Ry. Co. v. Turner (1872), 8 Ch. 149, where he said:

Form 251. (p. 152): "The directors are the more trustees or agents of the company trustees of the company's money and property; agents in the transactions which they enter into on behalf of the company." And this is the way in which it is put by Sir George Jessel in the case of Forest & Dean, &c. Co. (1879), 10 C. D. 450: "Directors," said that learned judge, "are called trustees. They are, no doubt, trustees of assets which have come into their hands, or which are under their control." "Commercial trustees" is the title he gives them in the same case. And see York and North Midland Rail. Co. v. Hudson, supra; Parker v. McKenna, 10 Ch. 96. Farwell, J., expresses himself to the same effect in Young v. Naval, &c. Society of South Africa, (1905) 1 K. B. 687, 693. "Directors," he says, "being both agents of and trustees for the company, are entitled to be indemnified by the company against all losses and expenses properly sustained and incurred by them in the due performance of their office."

So in Joint Stock Discount Co. v. Brown, 8 Eq. 381, and many subsequent cases. Flitcroft's case, 21 Ch. D. 529; Pelly's case, ib. 492; Faure Electr. Co., 40 Ch. D. 150; Oxford Benefit Society, 35 Ch. D. 502; Leeds Estate Co. v. Shepherd, 36 Ch. D. 787; Masonic & General Life Co. v. Sharpe, (1892) 1 Ch. 154, where directors had misapplied funds of the company, it was declared that they had "committed a breach of trust and were jointly and separately liable" accordingly. It was as trustees that directors were held, before the Trustee Act, 1888, disentitled to claim the benefit of the Statutes of Limitation (see Flitcroft's case, 21 C. D. 519); and it is as trustees that they have since that Act been held entitled to the benefit of the qualified provisions for limitation of actions contained in sect. 8 of the Act of 1888. This was decided in Lords Motment Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 616, where Lindley, L. J., said: "Although directors are not, properly speaking, trustees, yet they have always been considered and treated as trustees of money which comes to their hands, or which is actually under their control, and ever since joint stock companies were invented directors have been held liable to make good moneys which they have misapplied, upon the same footing as if they were trustees."

"But this fiduciary position of directors does not extend to them as shareholders in their individual capacity; there is nothing, for instance, to prevent directors purchasing on their own account shares in the company from the executors of a deceased shareholder. Perceval v. Wright, (1902) 2 Ch. 421, conf. Barland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83."

And where a company had agreed to manage certain property of a landowner for a share in the profits of the estate, it was held that there was nothing in the doctrine of fiduciary relationship to prevent the company employing and paying one of its directors, who was an estate agent, to act professionally, and another director, who was an auctioneer, to sell. Both v. Standard Land Co., (1911) 1 Ch. 618.

As throwing some light on the process of reasoning by which directors are regarded as trustees, it is to be borne in mind that the funds of a company are by statute made applicable only to specific purposes, and are in that way impressed with the qualities of a trust fund. See Ement v. Croxwell (1866) 2 D. F. & J. 175, per Knight-Bruce and Turner, L. JJ.; and Great Eastern Rail. Co. v. Turner, 8 Ch. 149, per Lord Selborne; and Jehbun v. Rich, L. R. 7 H. L. 633, per Lord Hatherley; and Russell v. Wakefield Waterworks, 20 Eq. 474, per Jessel, M. R.; Morham v. Grant, (1900) 1 Q. B. 88. Thus they may be followed into the hands of any alienee who takes with notice of the breach of trust.

Frauds and torts of directors.

Any director who is a party to a fraud, such as the issuing of a fraudulent prospectus, or to the commission of any tort, is personally liable. This is on the principle that whoever commits a wrong is liable for it himself, and none the less so that he was acting as an agent or servant on behalf and for the benefit of another. Collins v. Thompson's Trustees, 4 Macq. 424, 432; Pollock on Torts, 7th ed. 190. So, too, if, by the order of the directors, a trespass is committed, a patent infringed, or other wrongful act committed, the directors who are parties to it are personally liable.

Again, if a director neglects to comply with the various requirements of the Companies Act, 1908, or brings himself within sect. 84 of the Act (replacing the provisions of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890), he is, or may be, liable in damages personally.

The Act imposes a number of penalties on the directors for breach of its provisions. See, for example, sect. 9 (default in relation to alterations of objects); sect. 18 (default in supplying copies of memorandum or articles); sect. 25 (default in keeping register of members); sect. 26 (default in making annual returns); sect. 30 (default in allowing inspection of register); sect. 41 (default as to sub-division of shares); sect. 44 (default in giving notice of increase of capital); sect. 63 (default as to publishing name); sect. 75 (default as to register of directors); sect. 87 (commencing business prematurely); sect. 88 (default in making a return of allotments); sect. 94 (default in issuing certificates); sect. 95 (default in filing accounts of receiver); sect. 99 (default in registering mortgages); sect. 100 (default in registering mortgages or charges); sect. 101 (default in allowing inspection); sect. 281 (false returns and statements).

Statutory penalties imposed on directors.

"By accepting a trust of this sort (i.e., a directorship) a person," says Lord Hardwicke, "is bound to exercise it with fidelity and reasonable diligence" (Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 405); and Jessel, M. R., in another case, said "directors are bound to use fair and reasonable diligence in the discharge of their duties and to act honestly, but they are not bound to do more." (Forest of Dean, &c. Co., 10 C. D. 452. "A director is not bound to take any definite part in the conduct of the company's business, but so far as he does undertake it he must use reasonable care in its despatch." Per Neville, J., Brazilian Rubber Plantations (No. 1), (1911) 1 Ch. 425. They are not liable for a mere error of judgment, and there is no implied warranty by a director that he is competent. Turquand v. Marshall (1869), 4 Ch. 376; Gurney & Co. v. Gill, L. R. 5 H. L. 480; Dovey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477. "If the directors act within their powers, and with such care as is reasonably to be expected from them, having regard to their knowledge and experience, and if they act honestly for the benefit of the company which they represent, they discharge both their legal and equitable duty to the company, and will not be liable for mistakes or errors of judgment." Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Nitrate Syndicate, (1899) 2 Ch. 392.

It has sometimes been said that directors are only liable for gross negligence, but there is not in fact any decision to that effect, and the expression "gross" does not really assist in defining the directors' liability; for, as observed by Rolfe, B., in Widom v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 115, "gross negligence is the same thing as 'negligence,' with the addition of a vituperative epithet." And this epigram was cited with approval by Willes, J., in Griff v. General, &c. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 603; affirmed L. R. 3 C. P. 576; and Erie, C. J., referring to this expression in 35 L. J. C. P. 321, said: "I advisedly abstain from using a word to which I can attach no definite meaning; and no one, so far as I know, ever was able to do so." The expression, however, was defended by Lord Chelmsford in Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 317, 336, and was resuscitated by the Court of Appeal in National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 672; but the dissent of Lords, upon the appeal in the same case (Dovey v. Cory, supra), significantly abstained from using the term.

It may be taken, however, that, in determining whether a director has been guilty of negligence, the Court will, of course, take into account the character of the business, the number of the directors, the provisions of the articles, the ordinary course of management and practice of directors, the extent of their knowledge and experience, and, in fact, all the surrounding and special circumstances of the particular case; there can be no question that the directors are not expected to take every possible precaution to safeguard the interest of the company and prevent deception.

A director is not to be held responsible for the fraud of his co-directors unless he has expressly or impliedly authorized it. Cargill v. Bower (1878), 10 C. D. 502. "A director cannot be held liable for being defrauded: to do so would make his position intolerable." Lord Hatherley, Land Credit Co. of Ireland v. Lord Fermoy (1876), 3 Ch. 772; and see Re Charles Denham & Co., 25 Ch. D. 752; Durey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477; Prelontaine v. Goss, (1907) A. C. 191.

So, too, if a director acts honestly and in accordance with a course of business which appears reasonably calculated to protect the interests of the company is not to be held liable merely because his subordinates or co-directors have deceived him: he is not called upon to distrust, to guard against the possibility of fraud being committed by the subordinates. "It is obvious," said Halbury, L. C., "that if there is such a duty, it must render anything like an intelligent devolution of labour impossible." See Durey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477.

Non-attendance at board meetings is not necessarily negligence. Boys' case, 34 L. T. 716; Forest of Dean Co., 10 C. D. 452; Denham & Co., 25 C. D. 752; Marquis of Rute's case, (1892) 2 Ch. 101; Exploring Land & Minerals Co., 94 L. T. 234; for a director is not bound to attend every board meeting, but the non-attendance may amount to such a dereliction of duty as to constitute negligence. Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 A. K. 105.

Misfeasance and breach of trust.

Besides negligence, directors, as agents and trustees, may be held liable for various other kinds of misconduct and delinquency. These are generally grouped together under the head of what is known as "misfeasance or breach of trust": the term "breach of trust" being generally confined to the misapplication of the funds of the company, and the term "misfeasance" to other breaches of duty which do not involve such misapplication.

"The words 'breach of trust' in sect. 215 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (the misfeasance section), are intended to include breach of duty." Per Neville, J., Brasiliian Rubber Plantations (No. 1), (1911) 1 Ch. 425.

Examples of misfeasance and breach of trust.

The following are some cases in which directors have been made liable for misfeasance or breach of trust: Stringer's case, L. R. 4 Ch. 475; London General Bank (1), (1895) 2 Ch. 673 (directors ordered to repay dividends declared and paid under delusive balance-sheet); Rand's case, L. R. 10 Ch. 104 (director ordered to repay bonus improperly paid to him); Merchants' Office v. Armstrong, W. N. (1901) 163; 17 T. L. R. 700 (directors ordered to repay large sums paid to one of their body before the company started for "services" in obtaining subscriptions for shares, this being extra remuneration); National Funds Assurance Co., 10 C. D. 118; Alexander v. Palace, 21 C. D. 149; Flitcroft's case, 21 C. D. 519; Denham & Co., 25 C. D. 752; Sharpe, (1892) 1 Ch. 154; London and General Bank (2), (1895) 2 Ch. 673 (directors ordered to repay dividends improperly paid to shareholders out of capital); De Ruigne's case, 5 C. D. 306; Pearson's case, 5 C. D. 306; Metcalf's case, 13 C. D. 169; but not where the shareholders complained had participated in the dividend; Towry v. African Tug Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 558; De Ruigne's case, supra; Pearson's case, supra; Metcalf's case, supra; Co-operative Association, 27 Ch. D. 322 (orders against directors who had improperly obtained their qualification shares from promoters or vendors).

Archers case, (1892) 1 Ch. 332 (orders against directors who had accepted their qualification from the promoter in trust for the promoter, and then executed blank transfers of the shares in favour of the promoter, thus enabling him at any moment to displace them); London and South Western Canal Co., (1911) 1 Ch. 316 (order to compel director who had obtained from promoter secret advantage an indemnity against loss on his qualification - to account to company); Postage Stamp, &c. Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 566 (directors ordered to account for gift of shares by vendor); Englefield Co., 8 C. D. 388 (directors ordered to make good sum paid to promoter for preliminary expenses, out of which directors' qualification provided); Marzetti's case, 28 W. R. 511 (director ordered to repay sums nominally paid for preliminary expenses, but really for rigging the market); Geo. Newman & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 674 (director held liable for present made to himself without the sanction of the company's articles); Loughlan v. Miller, 6 F. 413, Ct. of Sess. (agreement by director with the manager to share latter's bonus); Parker v. McKenna, 10 Ch. 118 (directors held liable for illegitimate profits made by dealings with the company's shares); Houston Deep Sea Co. v. Ansell, 39 C. D. 339 (managing director held liable for secret commission); Cape Breton Co., 29 C. D. 795 (as to which see Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83; and 12 App. Cas. 652 (director selling his own property to the company without disclosure). "The misfeasance in such a case is not selling, but in not disclosing." Per Lord Herschell. And see Part II., 9th ed. 612.

Directors who purposely abstain from making inquiries in pursuance of an understanding between them to that effect into the price paid to each other for properties sold to the company are guilty of a gross dereliction of duty. Good v. A. P. Co., Ltd. v. Grosland, 20 T. L. R. 800.

In cases of misfeasance or breach of trust the delinquent director has no right to set-off. Anglo-French Co-operative Society, 21 C. D. 492; Carrage Supply Association, 27 C. D. 322; Fletcher's case, 21 C. D. 519.

A very material alteration of the law in favour of directors has been made by sect. 279 of the Companies Act, 1908, empowering the Court to grant relief in certain cases. The section runs as follows:

279. If in any proceeding against a director, or person occupying the position of director, of a company for negligence or breach of trust it appears to the Court hearing the case that the director or person is or may be liable in respect of the negligence or breach of trust, but has acted honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the negligence or breach of trust, that Court may relieve him, either wholly or partly, from his liability on such terms as the Court may think proper.

It is not enough to prove that the applicant for relief acted reasonably and honestly. It must further be proved that he ought fairly to be excused. National Trustee Co. of Australasia v. General Finance Co., (1905) A. C. 373. Nor is it enough that he acted "honestly," he must have acted "reasonably" as well. Re Dice, Dice v. Roebuck, (1909) 1 Ch. 328. See also Re Smith, South v. Thompson, 71 L. J. Ch. 411; Re Turner, Barker v. Turner, (1897) 1 Ch. 536; Re Second East Dulwich 745th Starr-Bowkett Building Society, 68 L. J. Ch. 196; Re Grindley, Clews v. Grindley, (1898) 2 Ch. 593; Perrins v. Bellamy, (1899) 1 Ch. 797; Re Lord de Clifford, (1900) 2 Ch. 707; Palmer v. Emerson, (1911) 1 Ch. 758; and Re Mackay, (1911) 1 Ch. 300.

Directors who dispose of the company's property pending a winding-up petition are prima facie liable, on a winding-up, for all such moneys not expended by them in the ordinary course of business. Companies Act, 1908, s. 205 (2); North Harbour Works, 35 W. R. 827.

The remedy of a company against a delinquent director, whether for negligence, fraud, misfeasance, or breach of trust, is, whilst the company is a going concern, by action. Joint Stock Bank v. Brown, 6 Eq. 361; Nant-y-Glo, &c. Co. v. Evans, 13 C. D. 736. If the company is being wound up, the remedy is in most cases under sect. 215 of the Companies Act, 1908.

Effect of Companies
Act, 1908.

The Act of 1908, reproducing the Companies Act, 1900, considerably affects the position of directors, and the following points with reference to it should be noted:

1. If they are to be appointed by the articles of association and the company is to issue a prospectus inviting subscriptions for shares, they should see that sect. 72 is duly complied with.
2. They should bear in mind sect. 73 (3), imposing a fine for acting without qualification.
3. They should bear in mind sect. 85, and the serious danger of personal liability for the return of subscriptions if the company allots shares in violation of sect. 85 of the Act of 1900.
4. They should remember their liability to pay damages for breach of sect. 26.
5. They should avoid, by complying with the Act, their liability to heavy fines under sect. 87 (5) if the company commences business before it is entitled.
6. They should remember the limits of their power to pay underwriting and other commissions under sect. 89, and their liability for payments not authorized by paragraph (1) of that section.
7. They should bear in mind their duty under sect. 80 as to filing prospectuses.
8. They should study under proper advice the elaborate and burdensome provisions of sect. 81 as to prospectuses and the disclosure to be made thereby, and should remember the liabilities of the directors for non-compliance.
9. They should have due regard to sect. 83 as to variation of contracts.
10. They should not forget their duties under sect. 85 of the Act as to statutory meetings.
11. They should not forget sect. 84 as to convening general meetings.
12. They should bear in remembrance sects. 93-102 as to registration of mortgages and charges and the penalties imposed on the directors.
13. They should not forget sect. 26 as to annual summaries, and sect. 75 as to keeping a register of directors and filing copy with the Registrar of Companies.
14. They should see that the provisions of sects. 112, 113 as to audit are carried out, and above all that they do not subject themselves to the penalties of misdemeanour under sect. 281 as to false statements.

Number of
directors.

83. [Until otherwise determined by a general meeting] the number of the directors shall not be less than [three] or more than [seven].

It is seldom that a large number of directors is a benefit to a company; if the company is a large one, and there is much business to be done by the board it may be a necessity; but in many companies the powers and duties of the board are for the most part delegated to a managing director or manager, and where this is the case there is no reason for having a large number of directors. Even where this is not done, it is commonly found that a moderate number are by reason of the increased individual responsibility, more likely to work. In the absence of the first seven words it seems that the number cannot be reduced without a special resolution. Bennett Bros., Ltd. v. Lewis, 40 S. J. 14. But Form 251. query whether this is so where a clause like 98, infra, appears. Prima facie where the number is below the prescribed minimum the remaining directors cannot act, but usually this is met by a clause like 90, infra.

The quorum clause does not operate unless and until the minimum number of directors is duly appointed. Nly, Npink & Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 430.

81. The persons hereinafter named shall be the first directors, that is to First say: A. of —; B. of —; and C. of —, &c. directors.

It is usual to appoint the directors by the articles, but the plan adopted in clause 69 of Table A. is sometimes preferred, namely, to provide that: "The number of the directors and the names of the first directors shall be determined in writing by a majority of the subscribers of the memorandum of association"; or preferably thus: "The first directors shall be appointed by the subscribers hereto, or the majority of them, by an instrument in writing under their hands." In either case the appointment should be made at a meeting of the subscribers at which a majority is present. Howbeach Coal Co., Ltd. v. Teague, 5 H. & N. 151; 29 L. J. Ex. 137; London & Southern Co., 31 C. D. 223. The notice convening the meeting, which need not be a seven days' notice (John Morley Building Co. v. Barras, (1891) 2 Ch. 386), ought to specify the purpose for which it is convened. Howbeach Coal Co. v. Teague, supra. An appointment in writing signed by all the subscribers is valid. Girard Northern Salt Co., 44 C. D. 472.

Where the subscribers are to appoint the directors, the articles generally declare that: "Until the first directors shall have been appointed, the subscribers to the memorandum of association shall be deemed for all purposes to be the directors, save that clause 86 hereof is not made to apply."

And where the subscribers are directors under such a clause, they hold office until the first directors are actually appointed, notwithstanding there is an article to the effect that the whole of the directors shall retire at the first general meeting. John Morley Building Co. v. Barras, supra.

Where no directors are appointed, and a meeting could not be called in accordance with the articles, it was held that sect. 52 of the Companies Act, 1862 (now replaced by sect. 67 of the Act of 1908), applied, and accordingly that five members could call a meeting. Brick and Stone Co., W. N. (1878) 140.

NOTE. See sect. 72 of the Act as to the necessity for qualifying a person named in articles as a director where the public are to be invited to subscribe for shares, supra, p. 6.

As to clergy, see 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 28 et seq., and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 14, by which it is provided under penalty that it shall not be lawful for any spiritual person holding any cathedral preferment or benefice, or any curacy or lectureship, or who shall be licensed to perform the duties of any ecclesiastical office, to act as director of any trading concern.

85. The directors shall have power from time to time and at any time to appoint any other persons to be directors, but so that the total number of directors shall not at any time exceed the maximum number, fixed as above, and so that no such appointment shall be effective unless two-thirds of the directors [in the United Kingdom] concur therein. Power for directors to appoint additional directors.

Form 251.

This clause is very commonly inserted, and is found convenient, especially where less than the maximum number are appointed by the articles. Sometimes it is considered expedient to insert, after the word "time," "before the ordinary general meeting to be held in the year —." In that case clause 99a, as to casual vacancies, must be inserted.

Although it is often done, it is doubtful whether, under such a clause, or under clause 99a, infra, directors can be appointed in pursuance of a contract with some person or company for the purpose of giving such person or company a voice in the management. See Stace and Worth's case, 4 Ch. 682; James v. Eve, L. R. 6 H. L. 335; De Ruvière's case, 5 C. Div. 396. Conf. Greenwell v. Porter, (1902) 1 Ch. 530.

As to an alternate director, see Form 280, infra.

Where quotation on the Stock Exchange, London, is required, the following clause should be substituted for the above:

[85a. The directors shall have power at any time, and from time to time, to appoint any qualified person as a director, either to fill a casual vacancy or as an addition to the Board, but so that the total number of directors shall not at any time exceed the maximum number fixed as above. But any director so appointed shall hold office only until the next following ordinary general meeting of the coy, and shall then be eligible for re-election.]

The word "until" may be read either as inclusive or exclusive according to the sense. In many cases it includes the day named. See Kerr v. Jones, 1 Dow, 538; Dawkins v. Rudnor, 3 Dow, 535; Isaacs v. Royal Insurance, L. R. 5 Ex. 396; Bellhouse v. Mellor, 28 L. J. Ex. 141; Government Stock v. Manila Rail. Co., (1897) A. C. 81.

Qualification
of directors.

86. The qualification of a director shall be the holding of shares in the coy [or shall be the holding of shares in the coy of the nominal value of £——].

No qualification of a director was required by the Act of 1862, nor is it required by the Act of 1908. By Art. 70 of Table A., where it applies, a director's qualification is made the holding of one share at least.

The above clause must be read in conjunction with sects. 72 and 73 of the Companies Act, 1908.

Sect. 72 is only material where the first directors are named in the articles, as in clause 81, supra. It has no application to a "private company." In such cases, sect. 72 in effect requires that a director shall either subscribe the memorandum of association for his qualification, or shall sign and file a contract to take his qualification. See further, supra, p. 6. If compliance with sect. 72 would be inconvenient—(1) omit the clause (81) "naming" the first directors, and in lieu thereof provide, as in clause 84a, that the subscribers may appoint the first directors; or (2) omit the qualification clause; or (3) insert in the above qualification clause, after the word "director," the words "not being one of the first directors."

73.--(1.) Without prejudice to the restrictions imposed by the last foregoing section, it shall be the duty of every director who is by the regulations of the company required to hold a specified share qualification, and who is not already qualified, to obtain his qualification within two months after his appointment, or such shorter time as may be fixed by the regulations of the company.

(2.) The office of director of a company shall be vacated if the director does not within two months from the date of his appointment, or within such shorter time as may be fixed by the regulations of the company, obtain his qualification, or if after the expiration of such period or shorter time he ceases at any time to hold his qualification: and a person vacating office under this section shall be incapable of being re-appointed director of the company until he has obtained his qualification.

(3.) If after the expiration of the said period or shorter time any unqualified person acts as director of a company, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day between the expiration of the said period or shorter time and the last day on which it is proved that he acted as a director.

In relation to this section, it is to be observed as follows:

- 1) The section does not require the insertion in the articles of a qualification clause. It is therefore legal, as it was under the old law (viz., the law in force prior to 1st January, 1901, when the Companies Act, 1900, came into operation), to omit the qualification clause, or to make the qualification as small as desired, or to make it applicable only to some of the directors.
- 2) The section does not touch the cases in which the qualification clause provides that no person shall be "eligible" as a director unless he holds a specified number of shares, for in such cases the possession of the requisite qualification is a condition precedent to a valid election; and if a person who does not possess the qualification is expressed to be elected, the election is void and he does not become a director (Barber's case, 5 C. D. 963; Jenner's case, 7 C. D. 132), and therefore does not come within the words of the section.
- 3) The section applies to companies formed before the Act of 1900 came into operation (1st January, 1901) as well as to companies formed after that Act came into operation. See sect. 31 of the Act.
- 4) Under the old law a director, under a clause as above, had a reasonable time within which to obtain his qualification. Brown's case, 9 Ch. 102. But what was a reasonable time was undefined: it depended on the circumstances of the particular case. Lord Inchiquin's case, (1891) 3 Ch. 28. It might be a month or more, though if the articles provided that a director was to vacate office if he did not acquire his qualification within a specified period, that was regarded as indicating what was in the circumstances a reasonable time. Ex parte Cammell, (1894) 2 Ch. 392; Pandora Theatre, 28 S. J. 238; Onslow's case, 57 L. J. Ch. 338; Self-acting Sewing Machine Co., 34 W. R. 658. But the section has altered the law in this respect, and has fixed the time within which the qualification is to be acquired, viz., within two months from the director's appointment, or such shorter time as may be fixed by the regulations.
- (5) Under the old law a director who did not qualify within a reasonable time did not at the expiration of that time vacate office, unless indeed the articles of the company so provided. On the contrary, he continued in office until by resignation or removal or otherwise he vacated the office. The section alters the law in this respect, and in effect provides that at the expiration of the two months or shorter time the director shall ipso facto vacate office.

- (6) Under the old law (where the qualification clause was as above, imposing a duty to qualify), a director who did not qualify within a reasonable time might at the expiration of that time be placed by the officers of the company on the register of members for shares sufficient to qualify him, and although this was done behind his back and without his consent, he was estopped from repudiating the allotment and liable to pay for the shares in due course. See Brown's case, 9 Ch. 109; Lord Inchiquin's case, (1891) 3 Ch. 28; Molins v. London, B. and M. Insurance Co., (1902) 2 K. B. 589; but the allotment was not effective unless made before resignation and winding-up. See Cammell's case, (1894) 2 Ch. 392; and The Isan Co., Hutchinson's case, (1895) 1 Ch. 226.

The section appears to alter the law in this respect, for at the expiration of the time limited the director vacates office; it therefore ceases to be his duty to take up the qualification, and if without his request the shares are allotted to him, there appears to be nothing to preclude him from repudiating. Cammell's case, (1894) 2 Ch. 392; Salisbury Jones' case, (1904) 3 Ch. 356.

- (7) Under the old law a director who did not qualify within a reasonable time, or who ceased to hold his qualification, might nevertheless continue to act as a director without incurring any definite responsibility to the company for damages. In theory he was liable to pay damages for his breach of duty, but in practice it was impossible to prove damage. Coventry and Dixon's case, 14 C. D. 660. The section alters this, and renders the director liable to a fine not exceeding 5*l.* a day. See sub-sect. 3. This sub-section, however, does not appear to apply to a person who is invalidly appointed as a director, but only to one who is validly appointed.
- (8) Under the old law a director under a clause framed as above was duly qualified if he held the requisite shares, even though he had no beneficial interest in them and merely held as trustee for another person, nor did the insertion in the clause, after the word "holding," of the words "in his own right" render a beneficial ownership necessary, for it was long since held that those words did not refer to beneficial ownership, and meant in his own right as contrasted with a holding as legal personal representative or trustee in bankruptcy. Pulbrook v. Richmond Mining Co., 9 C. D. 610. Whether this remarkable construction of the words was or was not right it is now too late to question. See Bainbridge v. Smith, 41 C. Div. 642; Cooper v. Griffin, (1892) 1 Q. B. 740, C. A.; Howard v. Suttles, (1893) 1 Q. B. 1; Archer's case, supra; Sutton v. English and Colonial Produce Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 502. It certainly goes far to defeat the object of a qualification clause, which is that the director should have a personal stake in the company. The section has not altered the law in this respect, and accordingly a director may still under a clause as above qualify by borrowing the shares or taking a transfer in trust for the transferor. But if a person is entered on the register as holding shares as liquidator of some other company, he does not hold "in his own right." Boschoek Proprietary Co. v. Fuke, (1906) 1 Ch. 148; and see Sutton v. English and

Colonial Produce Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 502, according to which if the beneficiary gives notice to the company that he claims the shares, the holder thereupon ceases to hold "in his own right," but it seems doubtful whether this decision can stand consistently with the older cases.

Form 251.

- (9) Under the old law a director could, under a clause as above, qualify by being one of the joint holders of the requisite number of shares. Glory Paper Mills Co., Dunster's case, (1894) 3 Ch. 473, C. A. The section has not altered the law in this respect. See Grundy v. Briggs, (1910) 1 Ch. 444.

The object of a qualification clause as above mentioned is to give the director a pecuniary interest in the company so that he may be risking his own as well as other people's money (Archer's case, (1892) 1 Ch. 337); and some people have great faith in this feature of a qualification as a guarantee of good management; but of course the mere holding a qualification in no way assures the competence of the director: he may be duly qualified and yet wholly incompetent. It is only calculated to make him more careful. Sometimes a man manages other people's affairs better than his own.

Moreover, as he may hold the shares as a mere trustee, or as one of several joint holders, the qualification may afford only a modicum of security if it does not render the security wholly illusory. To fortify the position it is sometimes deemed expedient to insert after the word "holding" the words "AS SOLE ABSOLUTE BENEFICIAL OWNER AND NOT MERELY AS TRUSTEE."

In the absence of a qualification clause, the law does not require a director to be a member of or to have any interest in the company which he directs, and there are thousands of companies the articles of which require no qualification, including the many companies to which Table A., simpliciter, applies. Sometimes, so far from benefiting a company, a qualification clause may detrimentally affect its interest, e.g., by excluding from the directorate an able man who could render great services to the company, but has not the requisite funds to take up the qualification.

Where there is a qualification clause it is allowable to modify its operation to any extent, e.g., by providing that "the qualification of a director, not being one of the first directors, shall be," &c.; or that "the qualification of the directors other than A. B. shall," &c.; or that "the qualification of every director elected or appointed after the — day of — shall be," &c.; or that "the qualification of the directors shall be fixed by the statutory meeting, and until so fixed no qualification shall be necessary."

As to the amount of the qualification: This is usually fixed with reference to the capital of the company, but a qualification of 100*l.* or 200*l.* of shares or less is very common. Where, however, the capital exceeds 50,000*l.* or 100,000*l.*, the qualification is sometimes larger, e.g., 500*l.* or 1,000*l.*, and occasionally in very important concerns and in private companies the qualification is as much as 5,000*l.* or 10,000*l.*, or even more. As a guarantee of careful management, a share qualification is, of course, useless unless it is substantial.

Where the qualification clause is framed as above, that is to say, provides that the qualification of a director shall be the holding of so many shares, this does not mean that the director must take that number of shares from the company. The meaning of such a clause is that the director is to acquire the requisite qualification in some way or other, whether from the company or by transfer from a friend, or by purchase in the market. Brown's case, 9 Ch. 102; and the Companies Act, 1908, has not altered this. Molincaux v. London, &c. Insurance Co., (1902) 2 K. B. 589.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, it would seem that a director may transfer his qualification shares as freely as if he were not a director. Cawley & Co., 42 C. Div. 209. The decision in South London Fish Market, 39 C. Div. 324, was based on the terms of the special Act; but if he does, he gives up his directorship. Gilbert's case, L. R. 5 Ch. 565.

Whether the acts of a director who has not been duly appointed, or who is disqualified, are void, must depend on the circumstances of the case. Clause 111, infra, and sects. 71, 74 of the Act (see infra, p. 743) will apply in most cases, but only as to acts done before the defect or disqualification is shown. Hallowes v. Fernie, 3 Ch. 467; Murray v. Bush, L. R. 6 H. L. 53; Bridport, &c. Co., 2 Ch. 191; Briton Medical v. Jones, 61 L. T. 384; British Asbestos Co. v. Boyd, (1903) 2 Ch. 439; Re Bank of Syria, (1900) 2 Ch. 272; Dawson v. African Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 6. And not, it would seem, in favour of any person at the time of the act done having notice of the defects or disqualification. Staffordshire Gas Co., 66 L. T. 413; Tyne Steamship Co. v. Brown, 75 L. T. 483; Howard v. Patent Ivory Co., 38 Ch. D. 186.

A director who accepts his qualification shares as a secret gift from the promoters or vendors is guilty of a gross breach of trust. Hay's case, 10 Ch. 593, 604; Englefield Co., 8 C. Div. 388; Carling's case, 1 C. Div. 115; Twyecross v. Grant, 2 C. P. Div. 493; De Ruvigne's case, 5 C. D. 306; Pearson's case, 5 C. D. 336; Carriage Supply Association, 27 Ch. D. 322; Boston Shipping Co., 39 C. D. 339. And he is liable to give up the shares or, at the option of the company, to account for their value. S. C.; Hay's case, 10 Ch. 593; Weston's case, 10 C. Div. 579; Postage Stamp, &c. Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 566. And there is no right of set-off. Carriage Supply Association, 27 C. D. 322.

And where he buys his qualification from a promoter who agrees to indemnify him, he is accountable to the company, for the indemnity is a thing of value. Archer's case, (1892) 1 Ch. 322, C. A.

In London and S. W. Canal Co., (1911) 1 Ch. 346, where the articles of association provided that the qualification of a director should be "the holding of at least 100 shares in the company," and some of the directors accepted their qualification from the promoter of the company on the terms that they should hold the shares in trust for him and should execute (as they in fact did) blank transfers so that he might deal with them as he might require, the Court held that the directors were guilty of misfeasance and must contribute to the assets of the company (which had gone into liquidation) a sum equal to the par value of the shares.

The London Stock Exchange requires a qualification, and also the addition of the words following:—

First directors
—qualification
as to.

87. A first director may act before acquiring his qualification, but shall in any case acquire the same within one month from his appointment; and unless he shall do so, he shall be deemed to have agreed to take the said shares from the company, and the same shall be forthwith allotted to him accordingly.

Having regard to sect. 73 of the Companies Act, 1908, supra, p. 719, this clause may be superfluous.

Under the old law it was decided in relation to a clause as above—

- (a) That a person who continued to act as a director after the month was up was liable in a winding-up to be placed on the list of contributors for his qualification shares, even though no allotment was made before the commencement of the winding-up. Isaacs' case, Form 251. (1892) 2 Ch. 158.

- (b) That à fortiori he was liable where the qualification shares were allotted to him before the commencement of a winding-up, even though that allotment was made after notice of his resignation. Hercynia Copper Co., (1894) 2 Ch. 403.
- (c) That a director who without qualifying resigned within the time allowed for qualification ought not, in a winding-up, to be placed on the list of contributories for his qualification shares, no allotment thereof having been made before the commencement of the winding-up. Salisbury-Jones and Dale's case, (1894) 3 Ch. 356.

But the new Act materially affects the operation of the clause, for in specifying one month as the time within which the director must acquire his qualification the clause fixes within the meaning of sect. 73 of the Companies Act, 1908, a "shorter time" than two months, and accordingly, at the end of the month, the director, if he has not obtained his qualification, vacates office. Now, it may be that notwithstanding this the company might act on the clause, and allot him his qualification—that is to say, the shares which he agreed to take. See Molineux v. London, &c. Insurance, (1902) 2 K. B. 589. But if no allotment is made prior to a winding-up, it would seem that the ex-director should not be held liable in a winding-up to be placed on the list of contributories for the shares, for, the company not having accepted the offer whilst it was a going concern, it is not just and equitable to place him on the list of contributories in the winding-up. See the above case, and Hutchinson's case, (1895) 1 Ch. 226; Salisbury-Jones and Dale's case, (1894) 3 Ch. 356; and Ex parte Cammell, (1894) 2 Ch. 392.

[88. A director may retire from his office upon giving one month's notice in writing to the coy of his intention so to do, and such resignation shall take effect upon the expiration of such notice or its earlier acceptance.] Power for director to retire.

More commonly a paragraph, "If by notice in writing to the company he resign his office," is added to clause 90, and this seems the best plan; for a director cannot be compelled to act.

Even in the absence of any express power to resign, it is submitted that, unless the articles are specially framed, a director may by notice to the company resign his directorship. Directors "are merely agents of the company" (per Lord Cairns, Ferguson v. Wilson, 2 Ch. 89), and an agent may determine his agency. Story on Agency, sect. 478.

Where a director, who was both a permanent and an ordinary director, resigned his seat on the board, it was held on the facts that he had resigned both directorships. Moseley v. Koffyfontein Mines, (1910) 2 Ch. 382.

It is conceived that the requisite notice should be served on the company in the manner provided for by sect. 116 of the Act, viz., by leaving it at the registered office of the company, and that a notice so served is effective. In Municipal Freehold Land Co. v. Pollington, 63 L. T. 238, it was held that, under Table A., a director might resign, but that he must resign "into the hands of the company," and that a notice read at a board meeting (and, therefore, no doubt served on the company in accordance with sect. 116 of the Act) was not an effective notice to the company for such a purpose. Apparently therefore the resignation, to be effective, must be given to all the members. This decision appears to disregard the fact that the company is a separate Form 251. persons (pp. 27 and 28), and that the Act has provided by sect. 116 special means of giving notice to that persons. Why are the plain terms of sect. 116 not to have full effect?

In Metropolitan Bank v. Heiron, 5 Ex. Div. 319, Cotton, L. J., said that "it was made known in the only way in which the company can know anything, by a communication made to the directors at a regular board meeting."

It may be observed that Table A. contains no clause as to resignation.

In practice it is always assumed that a director can retire mero motu—the object of a clause is to fix the length of notice, or to restrict the right; and Warrington, J., so held in Transport Co. v. Schonberg (1905), 21 T. L. R. 395.

A director may part with his qualification shares, and so vacate office by disqualification. Gilbert's case, 5 Ch. 565; Companies Act, 1908, s. 73 (2).

A resignation once made is irrevocable. Reg. v. Mayor of Wigan, 14 Q. B. D. 908; Glossop v. Glossop, (1907) 2 Ch. 270.

Remuneration of directors.

89. The directors shall be pd out of the funds of the coy by way of remuneration for their services at the rate of £— p.a. and such further sums as the coy in general meeting may from time to time determine, and such remuneration shall be divided among them in such proportions and manner as the directors may determine, and in default of such determination within the year equally. [The directors shall also be pd their travelling expenses of attending and returning from board [and committee] meetings.]

Under such a form of article a decision by the directors as to how the remuneration is to be divided is a condition precedent to a director's right to sue the company for remuneration. Morrell v. Oxford Portland Cement Co., 26 T. L. R. 682.

Sometimes these words are added: "And in default of such determination, among them in proportion to their respective attendances at board meetings," or "among them equally."

The amount of remuneration to be paid to directors is a matter of internal management. Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83; Normandy v. Ind, Coopr & Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 84.

Directors are not entitled to remuneration, except by virtue of the articles of the company. Dunstan v. Imperial, &c. Co., 3 B. & Ad. 125; George Newman & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 674, 686; Young v. Naval, &c. Society, (1905) 1 K. B. 687, 693. But where the articles fix remuneration as above, the clause is not only an authority to the directors to pay themselves the remuneration out of the funds of the company, but a director, who is a member, has a right of action against the company for his remuneration. Whatever the effect of sect. 14 of the Act of 1908 may be—as to which, see supra, p. 632—if the director is not a member, the articles are to be regarded as an offer made by the company; and if he acts, he and the company are to be treated as having agreed by parol that he shall be employed on the terms specified. Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Co. (1889), 1 Meg. 385; International Cable Co., 66 L. T. 254; Ex parte Beckwith, (1898) 1 Ch. 324; Isaacs' case, (1892) 2 Ch. 158; Peruvian Co., (1894) 3 Ch. 690; Molineaux v. London, &c. Insurance, (1902) 2 K. B. 589.

A director can, therefore, sue for remuneration agreed to be paid him by the company (Orton v. Cleveland, 3 H. & C. 868; Nell v. Atlantic Co., 11 T. L. R. 407, C. A.), and prove for it in the winding-up like an ordinary creditor. Beckwith's case, (1898) 1 Ch. 324; Al Biscuit Co., W. N. (1899)

Form 251.

115; Dale v. Plant, 43 Ch. D. 255; Leicester Club Co., Cannon's case (1885), 30 Ch. D. 620—which was a decision that a director's remuneration is a sum due to him "in his character of a member by way of dividends, profits, or otherwise" within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1862, s. 38 (7) (Companies Act, 1908, s. 123 (1) (vii))—cannot be relied on.

The directors may vote themselves a sum on account of fixed remuneration even where the articles provide for remuneration by way of annual salary. Wood Ships, &c. Co., 62 L. T. 760.

Where the remuneration is payable "at such times as the directors may determine," it is a condition precedent to the right to payment that the directors should have determined the time. Caridad Copper Mining Co. v. Swallow, (1902) 2 K. B. 44; Inman v. Acroyd, 82 L. T. 620; affirmed, (1901) 2 K. B. 613; and see Morrell v. Oxford Portland Cement Co., 26 T. L. R. 682, supra.

Where a director is entitled to act before qualifying, he is entitled to remuneration under the clause. Portsmouth & Southsea Cable Co., 66 L. T. 253.

A director's remuneration is for his services, and, accordingly, a director entitled to a percentage of the profits of a company as remuneration is not entitled to a percentage of the proceeds of sale of assets sold in a winding-up, unless the contrary is clearly expressed. Frames v. Bullfontein Mining Co., (1891) 1 Ch. 140.

If the articles contain a provision for remuneration, a promise by a director to give his services gratis in the absence of some valid consideration, and therefore not binding (Lambert v. Northern, &c. Co., 18 W. R. 180); at any rate, as regards the persons who were members of the company at the time of the promise.

But according to Wright, J., the observations of the Vice-Chancellor in that case are only directed to a case where the remuneration has already been earned, and where the agreement as to acting as a director is only partially performed, and there has been no breach of it, the directors by resolution may make a new contract with the company varying any agreement as to remuneration. McConnell's claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 728, 733.

Unless the articles provide that the fees shall be paid out of the profits only, there is nothing to prevent their being paid out of capital. Harvey Lewis' case, 26 L. T. 673. But if the articles provide that directors' fees are to be paid out of profits only, or that the directors are not to be entitled to remuneration until certain profits have been realized, the directors will be liable to refund any sums received by them in contravention of such regulations. Oxford Benefit, &c. Society, 35 C. D. 502; Leeds, &c. Society v. Shepherd, 36 C. D. 787.

Directors' remuneration is subject to deductions for income tax. Boschoek Proprietary Co. v. Fuke, (1906) 1 Ch. 645, and a contract to pay free of income tax is void. Sect. 103 of the Income Tax Act, 1842.

The taking of remuneration beyond that fixed is a misfeasance. Whitehall Court, 56 L. T. 280; George Newman & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 674; Merchants' Fire Office v. Armstrong, 17 T. L. R. 709; Young v. Naval, &c. Society of South Africa, (1905) 1 K. B. 687; Leeds Estate Co. v. Shepherd (1887), 36 Ch. D. 809.

And unless the articles otherwise provide, as in the concluding words of the above clause, a director is not, in addition to his remuneration, entitled to his travelling expenses of attending board meetings. Young v. Naval, &c. Society, supra. And co-directors who authorize such payments are personally responsible. Ibid. But under a special article or a resolution of the company the payment may be made. Ibid. And see Marmor Limited v. Alexander (1908), S. C. 78, Court of Sessions. Where the articles fix the remuneration of directors and provide that the company may by resolution in general meeting grant to Form 251. the directors any additional remuneration, this will not authorize the directors granting a retiring pension to a managing director. Normandy v. Ind. Crops & Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 84, sed quare.

Where the clause provides that a director is to be paid so much per annum, the words "at the rate of" being omitted, and he vacates office before the end of a current year, the question whether he can maintain a claim for an apportioned part of the remuneration for that year has given rise to some difference of opinion. In Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Mining Co., in the Court of Appeal (1889), 1 Meg. 385, the article was as follows, and not as stated in the report: "The directors shall each receive by way of remuneration out of the funds of the company in each year the sum of 200*l.*, and the chairman in addition 100*l.* per annum." The words "at the rate of" were not present (as appears from the articles registered at Somerset House). A director resigned in the course of a current year, and was held entitled to an apportioned part of the remuneration for that year. Lord Halsbury said: "As to the point of the service being determined in the middle and not at the end of the year, disentitling the plaintiff to anything because the service was for a year, the judgment of Stephen, J., was right. But upon the articles there are two cases in which the service could be brought to an earlier termination than a year, namely, if the directors give a month's notice of resignation, the resignation must be accepted by the company; but if this were done, then both the parties contemplated an earlier determination of the service than a full year. On the other hand, the company could, if it thought fit, by special resolution [presumably for removal or winding-up] determine the service between it and its servants. There was, therefore, a reciprocal right to put an end to the service at an earlier period than the end of the year. It follows from that, as a necessary consequence, that both parties must have contemplated that, as this was a service for hire and reward, a proportionate part of the remuneration agreed upon should be paid if the service . . . determined at an earlier period than the full year."

But in Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., (1899) 1 Ch. 775, where the article provided that "the directors shall be entitled to receive by way of remuneration in each year 5,000*l.*," Cozens-Hardy, J., held, that a director who vacated office before the end of a current year was not entitled to any apportionment. This case was followed by Wright, J., in McConnell's case, (1901) 1 Ch. 728, the words being "each director shall be paid the sum of 300*l.* per annum"; and by Bruce, J., in Inman v. Acroyd and Bert, 82 L. T. 621. See also Central de Kaap Gold Mines, W. N. (1899) 216, 235; 69 L. J. Ch. 18 (Wright, J.). In these four cases the Court no doubt proceeded on the assumption that the report of Swabey's case was correct, and that the article in that case contained the words "at the rate of." Certainly, Lord Alverstone, C. J., acted on this assumption in Harrison v. British Mutoscope, &c. Co. (Times, Nov. 10, 1903). There the words were "the sum of 1,000*l.* per annum." In the meantime, Inman v. Acroyd had been taken to the Court of Appeal, (1901) 1 Q. B. 614, and affirmed, but on the ground that it was by the articles left to the directors to apportion the remuneration at the end of each year.

This case, therefore, really turned on the construction of the particular article, and, as it was carefully distinguished from Swabey's case, the authority of that case, on an article omitting the words "at the rate of," remains unshaken.

Further, it is not easy to see why the Apportionment Act, 1870, does not apply. That Act expressly provides that all rents, annuities (including salaries and pensions), and other periodical payments in the nature of income shall be apportionable, and provides for the recovery in due course of an apportioned part of an annuity determined by death or otherwise. The Act was, however, clearly referred to and declared to be inapplicable, both in Salton v. Neu Beeston Cycle Co. and Inman v. Acroyd; but it is evident that the point requires reconsideration. In Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., supra, Lowndes v. Earl Stamford (1852), 18 Q. B. 425 (decided on the Apportionment Act, 1834), was relied on against apportionability, but the wording of that Act was very different to that of the Act of 1870.

Form 251.

Where the remuneration was payable "for each year," and the company went into liquidation a few days before the expiration of a year, but the director's work for the year was completed, he was held entitled to remuneration for the year. Shaws, Bryant & Co., W. N. (1901) 124.

A director may in some cases be entitled to remuneration although not qualified. Salton v. New Beeston, &c. Co., (1899) 1 Ch. 775; International Cable Co., 66 L. T. 253.

Where a director is appointed receiver and manager by the Court in a debenture holders' action, he is entitled to remuneration in both capacities. South Western of Venezuela, &c. Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 701. But a person acting as but not duly appointed a director is not entitled to a quantum meruit for his services. Woolf v. East Nigel, &c. Co., 21 T. L. R. 660; Rodega Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 276.

A set-off, within three months of a winding-up, of calls payable by directors against their remuneration, was held a fraudulent preference, even though the directors had reasonable grounds for supposing the company would not have to pay the original debt shown to have been existing at the time. Washington Diamond Mining Co., (1893) 3 Ch. 95.

The proper way of taking in execution overdue directors' fees is attachment of the debt. A receiver of directors' fees was refused altogether in Hamilton v. Brogden, W. N. (1891) 36.

Directors purchasing their shares to discharge fees due to them (if the articles authorize prepayment) is not misfeasance, nor is it a fraudulent preference, unless there is a winding-up within three months. Manon's case, 30 W. R. 378; R. A. W. Wood v. Ship Woodite Co., 2 Meg. C. R. 164; but see Sykes' case, 13 Eq. 255.

Directors must not, it need hardly be said, pay income tax on their remuneration out of the company's funds. Boschoek Proprietary Co. v. Fuke, (1906) 1 Ch. 148.

The following alternative clauses are given by way of illustration of the many modes of providing for remuneration which are to be found in articles of association:—

"As remuneration for their services each director shall be paid a fixed salary at the rate of £— per annum, and the chairman shall be paid an additional sum at the rate of £— per annum, and the directors shall be paid such further remuneration, if any, as the company in general meeting shall from time to time determine, and such further remuneration shall be divided," &c.

"The directors shall be paid by way of remuneration for their services a sum at the rate of £— per annum, and whenever the profits of any year available for dividend on the ordinary shares shall be more than sufficient to pay a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. on the capital paid up on the ordinary shares the directors shall be entitled to — per cent. of the surplus profits of such year, and such further remuneration shall be divided," &c.

"Each of the directors of the company shall be entitled by way of remuneration for his services to a fixed salary at the rate of £— per annum, and also whenever in respect of any year a dividend at a rate exceeding 10 per cent. is paid on the ordinary shares in the capital of the company, the directors shall be entitled to a sum equal to 10 per cent. on the dividend in excess of — per cent. so divided [or they shall be entitled to an additional sum of £— in Form 251. respect of every 1 per cent. of dividend for such year declared in excess of — per cent.]."

Where the division of the remuneration is left to the directors to determine, and there is no provision for default as in the above clause, no director can claim remuneration until after such determination. Inman v. Acroyd, (1901) 1 K. B. 613; Morrell v. Oxford Portland Cement Co., 26 T. L. R. 682. It seems expedient to divide the remuneration by the articles.

Where, in addition to fixed remuneration as above, the directors are given a share in, or commission on, the profits, the Stock Exchange generally require a limit.

A director who holds his qualification share as trustee for another company is not liable to account to the latter for his director's fees. Re Dover Coalfield Extension, (1908) 1 Ch. 65.

Directors may act notwithstanding vacancy.

90. The continuing directors may act notwithstanding any vacancy in their body; [but so that if the number falls below the minimum above fixed the directors shall not, except for the purpose of filling vacancies, act so long as the number is below the minimum].

Where a maximum and minimum number are fixed as above [clause 90], the directors cannot act if the number falls below the required minimum (Alma Spinning Co., 16 C. D. 681; British Empire Match Co., 59 L. T. 292). However, in Sly, Spink & Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 430, it was held that power to act notwithstanding vacancies only applied after a board consisting of more than the minimum number had been constituted, unless there is power to act notwithstanding vacancies. Scottish Petroleum Co., 23 C. Div. 431; Faure v. Phillipart, 58 L. T. 527; Bennett v. Lewis, 48 S. J. 14. The words in brackets are sometimes inserted, and occasionally the words "so long as the minimum number exists" are used instead: but they may cause inconvenience.

Where the words in brackets are omitted, the remaining words are not to be limited to the case of filling up a vacancy or to cases of emergency. Per Wright, J., Owen and Ashworth's Claim, (1900) 2 Ch. 272; affirmed on this part of the case, (1901) 1 Ch. 115. Sometimes the words "but this provision shall be deemed directory only" are added to clause 90, i.e., directory as distinguished from imperative (Lindley on Companies, 6th ed. 226); but the words are not intelligible to an average director.

The acts of directors of a defective board may still be valid in favour of a person who has no notice of the irregularity. British Asbestos Co., (1903) 2 Ch. 439; but see Sly, Spink & Co., supra.

91. The office of a director shall ipso facto be vacated:—

It is clear that even without the words ipso facto a director in each of the cases specified vacates office automatically. Bodega Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 276; Hunnings v. Williamson, 11 Q. B. D. 3. They were originally inserted to meet the decision in Turnbull v. Winding Club, 70 L. T. 92.

When office of director to be vacated.

(a) If he accepts or holds any other office [or place of profit] under the coy [except that of managing director or departmental manager—but the position of trustee of a deed for securing debentures or debenture stock of the company, or of solicitor, or banker, is not to be considered an office or place of profit]. Form 251.

The words in brackets will be inserted where deemed expedient.

Prima facie a director who accepts another incompatible office under the company vacates his directorship. Milman v. Thatcher, 2 T. R. 81; Eales v. Cumberland Lead Co., 6 H. & N. 481; 3 L. T. 861; Iron Ship, &c. Co. v. Bunt, L. R. 3 C. P. 484. In the last-mentioned case the articles contained a provision as above (a). A. had been appointed secretary at a salary, and, whilst secretary, was elected a director, and acted as such, still, however, continuing to perform the duties of the secretary. It was held that the acceptance of the office of director vacated the office of secretary, and that the subsequent gratuitous performance of the duties of the latter office did not disqualify him under (a).

As to the words in brackets, cases very commonly arise in which it is desirable to allow of the appointment of a director as departmental manager or trustee of a debenture deed, and occasionally as solicitor or banker, and it may therefore be expedient to qualify the clause accordingly, for the words "place of profit" are far-reaching, and have been held to cover a trusteeship of a debenture deed. Ashley v. New Tivoli, (1899) 1 Ch. 151. But, as a rule, it is not desirable that a director should be trustee of a debenture holders' trust deed, involving as such a position does a divided duty. As to a director vacating his office by being appointed secretary, and subsequent acts curing the defect, see British Asbestos Co. v. Boyd, (1903) 2 Ch. 439.

Sometimes this sub-clause is omitted and a clause inserted that—

"A director may hold any other office under the company in conjunction with the office of director and on such terms as to remuneration and otherwise as the directors may arrange."

Under such a clause he cannot hold office as an auditor. See sect. 112 (3) of the Act.

(b) If he becomes bankrupt or suspends payment or compounds with his creditors.

Sometimes the word "insolvent" is inserted. This word was construed, in Reg. v. Sudlers' Co., 10 H. L. C. 404, to mean publicly insolvent; but that case has recently been distinguished in James v. Rookwood Colliery Co., 28 T. L. R. 215, where it was held that "insolvent" does not mean public or notorious insolvency, but what Jessel, M. R., called commercial insolvency, that is, simply a man's not being able to pay his debts as they become due.

The real aim of the disqualification is to rid the board of an unfit man; for a person who has mismanaged his own affairs to the extent of bankruptcy or insolvency is not likely to be a successful manager of the company's business. Not to speak of the temptations to irregularities incident to impecuniosity. To have an insolvent director, moreover, reflects on the credit of a company; all these considerations for vacating a director's office on insolvency are independent of whether the insolvency is private or public. It is the same with lunacy. If a director is non compos mentis it matters nothing whether he has been found lunatic by inquisition or not. His presence on the board would be equally disastrous to the management.

Form 251.

In Sissons & Co. v. Sissons, 64 Sol. J. 862, a director was held disqualified under an "insolvent" clause where he had called a meeting of his creditors and submitted to them a statement of affairs showing an excess of liabilities over assets, and the creditors had resolved to accept a composition.

"Becomes bankrupt" here means after election. The article does not prevent the appointment of a person who at the time is an undischarged bankrupt to be a director. Dawson v. African Consolidated Land and Trading Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 6 (C. A.).

(c) If he is found lunatic or becomes of unsound mind.

(d) If he ceases to hold the required amount of shares or stock to qualify him for office [or do not acquire the same within two months after election or appointment].

See supra, p. 719, as to sect. 73 of the Companies Act, 1908.

A director does not "cease to hold shares" where he has never acquired them. Forbes' case, 8 Ch. 777. Or by the qualification being raised. Molineux v. London, &c. Co., (1902) 2 K. B. 589.

When a director ceased for a few days to hold his qualification and so vacated office, but shortly afterwards acquired the same and was recognized as a director by the continuing directors who had power to fill up casual vacancies, it was held that the case must be treated in effect as a re-appointment. Dawson v. African Consolidated Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 6. And the same conclusion was reached when the vacancy was caused by a director being appointed secretary. British Asbestos Co. v. Boyd, (1903) 2 Ch. 439.

(e) If he is absent from the meetings of the directors during a period of three calendar months without special leave of absence from the directors.

This sub-clause is sometimes inserted. Occasionally the words, "If he absents himself" have been used; but a clause in that form applies only to voluntary or deliberate absence, not to involuntary absence such as that caused by illness. Mack's Claim, W. N. (1900) 114; McConnell's Claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 28.

As to the validity of acts done by a disqualified director, see infra, clause 111. p. 743, and supra, p. 722. See also Halifax Sugar Refining Co. v. Franklyn, 62 L. T. N. S. 563; Owen and Ashworth's Claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 115; Howbeach Coal Co. v. Teague, 5 H. & N. 151; Dawson v. African Land Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 6; Iron Ship Co. v. Blunt, L. R. 3 C. P. 484; Sharp v. Dawes, 2 Q. B. D. 26.

Where an office was to be vacated "if he absents himself during six months, except from temporary illness or other cause approved by the board," it was held that the officer was entitled to an opportunity of explaining his absence. Richardson v. Methley School Board, (1893) 3 Ch. 510.

As to a director's liability for negligence by non-attendance at board meetings, see p. 714, supra.

[(f) If he is concerned or interested in or participates in the profits of any contract with or work done for the coy; but no director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any coy which has entered into contracts with or done any work for this coy, or which is concerned in or Form 251.

participates in the profits of any contract with the coy.
Nevertheless he shall not vote in respect of any contract in which he is so interested.]

Where this is used, clause 93, infra, will be omitted. Although being interested, &c. automatically vacates the office, the disqualification only continues so long as the contract continues, and if after the contract has come to an end the person interested is re-elected, his election is good, although the fact of his having been interested has not then been discovered. Bodega Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 276. A man who is a shareholder in another company which contracts with the company is "interested" in the contract. Todd v. Robinson, Q. B. Div. 739; Dimes v. Grand Junction, 3 H. L. C. 759; and see Whiteley v. Barley, 21 Q. B. Div. 154; City of London Electric Lighting Co. v. Mayor of London, (1903) A. C. 434; Turnbull v. West Riding Club, 70 L. T. 92.

(g) If by notice in writing to the coy he resigns his office.

A valid resignation cannot be withdrawn. Reg. v. Mayor of Wigan, 14 Q. B. D. 908.

It does not require acceptance. Transport, Ltd. v. Schonberg, 21 T. L. R. 305; and see notes to clause 88, supra.

Sometimes a further paragraph is added:—

(h) If he is requested in writing by all his co-directors to resign.]

92. No director shall be disqualified by his office from contracting with the coy either as vendor, purchaser, or otherwise, nor shall any such contract, or any contract or arrangement entered into by or on behalf of the coy in which any director shall be in any way interested, be avoided, nor shall any director so contracting or being so interested be liable to account to the coy for any profit realized by any such contract or arrangement by reason of such director holding that office or the fiduciary relation thereby established, but it is declared that the nature of his interest must be disclosed by him at the meeting of the directors at which the contract or arrangement is determined on, if his interest then exists, or in any other case at the first meeting of the directors after the acquisition of his interest, and that no director shall as a director vote in respect of any contract or arrangement in which he is so interested as aforesaid; and if he do so vote his vote shall not be counted [but this prohibition shall not apply to the agreement mentioned in clause 3 hereof or to any matters arising thereout, or to any contract by or on behalf of the coy to give to the directors or any of them any security for advances or by way of indemnity, or to a settlement or set-off of cross-claims, and it may at any time or times be suspended or relaxed to any extent by a general meeting].

Directors may contract with company.

Sometimes the words are added: "A general notice that a director is a member of any specified firm or company, and is to be regarded as interested Form 251. in any subsequent transactions with such firm or company, shall be sufficient disclosure under this clause, and after such general notice it shall not be necessary to give any special notice relating to any particular transaction with such firm or company."

The reference to the preliminary agreement is only required where a director is interested in that agreement as a vendor or otherwise.

But when the number of directors is small it may be necessary to relax the rule still further, as otherwise a proper quorum (see clause 106, infra) cannot be obtained, for a quorum of directors means a quorum competent to transact and vote on the business before the board, which an interested director hypothetically is not. Greymouth Point, &c. Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 32.

As a director stands in a fiduciary relation towards the company, he cannot, unless the articles otherwise provide, contract with the company. Albion, &c. Co. v. Martin, 1 C. Div. 580. Nor does it make any difference that the contract is open and above-board as between the contracting director and his co-directors. Ibid. For the company is entitled to the collective wisdom of its directors. Imperial, &c. Association v. Coleman, 6 Ch. 558; as to which, see Costa Rica Rail. Co. v. Forwood, (1900) 1 Ch. 756, affirmed (1901) 1 Ch. 746. And a director is not "allowed to enter into engagements conflicting, or which may possibly conflict, with the interests of those whom he is bound to protect. So strictly is this principle adhered to that no question is allowed to be raised as to the fairness or unfairness of a contract so entered into." Aberdeen Co. v. Blackie, 1 Macq. 461; Parker v. McKenna, 10 Ch. 111; Bray v. Ford, (1896) A. C. 50; Re Cape Breton Co., 29 Ch. D. 795; Chesterfield and Boythorpe Colliery v. Black, 26 W. R. 207; Leeds and Hanley Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 809; Boston Deep Sea Fishing Co. v. Ansell, 39 Ch. D. 339.

But a company may unquestionably waive the benefit of the rule. Imperial, &c. Association v. Coleman, 6 Ch. 568; L. R. 6 H. L. 190; Southall v. British Mutual, &c. Society, 6 Ch. 619; Black v. Mallalue, 7 W. R. 303; Adamson's case, 18 Eq. 670; Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 358; Costa Rica Rail. Co. v. Forwood, supra. (In the last case cited, the profits were only collateral, the director being interested as a large shareholder in another company and a partner in the firm that managed it.)

And it has now become very common to do so, and to insert clauses to the effect of the above. Moreover, the company in general meeting can sanction a contract in which a director is interested. Grant v. United Switchback Co., 40 C. Div. 135.

But when a contract is to be submitted to a meeting for confirmation, and directors of the company are interested therein, the notice convening the meeting must give particulars as to such interest. Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 338 (C. A.); Tieszen v. Henderson, (1899) 1 Ch. 861; Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 84.

It may be convenient here to refer more explicitly to the well-settled rule that an agent cannot, without the knowledge and consent of his principal, be allowed to make any profit out of the matter of his agency beyond his proper remuneration. This rule applies with peculiar stringency to the directors of joint-stock companies.

This rule, as Lord Cairns, L. C., said (Parker v. McKenna, 10 Ch. 96, 118), is "not a technical or arbitrary rule. It is a rule founded upon the highest and truest principles of morality. No man can, in this Court, acting as an agent, be allowed to put himself into a position in which his interest and duty will conflict."

Lord Herschell has put the proposition somewhat differently, thus:—"It is an inflexible rule of a Court of Equity that a person in a fiduciary position such as the respondent's is not, unless otherwise expressly provided, entitled to make a profit; he is not allowed to put himself in a position where his interest and duty conflict. It does not appear to me that this rule is, as has been said, founded upon principles of morality. I regard it rather as based on the consideration that, human nature being what it is, there is danger in such circumstances of the person holding a fiduciary position being swayed by interest rather than by duty, and thus prejudicing those whom he was bound to protect. It has, therefore, been deemed expedient to lay down this positive rule. But I am satisfied that it might be departed from in many cases without any breach of morality, without any wrong being inflicted, and without any consciousness of wrong-doing. Indeed, it is obvious that it might sometimes be to the advantage of the beneficiaries that their trustee should act for them professionally rather than a stranger, even though the trustee were paid for his services." Bray v. Ford, (1896) A. C. 44, 51.

All that is required is that the other directors should have such knowledge as will enable them to scrutinize the terms of the contract with more than usual care. Imperial Association v. Coleman, 6 H. L. 190; Southall v. British Mutual, 6 Ch. 619; Adamson's case, 18 Eq. 670; Costa Rica Co. v. Forwood, (1906) 1 Ch. 756.

It is sufficient to bring the case within the rule if, although the contract is not directly with the company, the interest is such as to cause a conflict between interest and duty. Barnacle v. Clark, (1900) 1 Q. B. 279. And even without showing privity of contract between them a sub-agent is liable to the original principal. Powell v. Evan Jones & Co., (1905) 1 K. B. 11.

See the above cases and the following:—

Parker v. Lewis, 8 Ch. 1035; Ottoman Bank v. Farley, 17 W. R. 761; Carling's case, 1 C. Div. 123; Morvah Consols, &c. Co., 2 C. Div. 1; Morison v. Thompson, L. R. 9 Q. B. 480; Pearson's case, 5 C. Div. 336; Phosphate Co. v. Hartmont, ibid. 394; Dunne v. English, 18 Eq. 524; De Buscho v. Alt, 8 C. Div. 300; Eden v. Ridsdale's Co., 23 Q. B. D. 368; Boston Deep Sea Co. v. Ansell, 39 C. Div. 339.

Mere notice of an intention not to perform a contract will not put an interested director in an uninterested position; he must obtain a proper release from persons competent to give it. Gloucester Municipal Election Petition, (1901) 1 Q. B. 683; Shipway v. Broadwood, (1899) 1 Q. B. 369.

A director cannot sue for a bribe. Harrington v. Victoria Dock, 3 Q. B. D. 549. And a dishonest agent cannot recover his remuneration from his principal (Andrews v. Ramsey, (1903) 2 K. B. 635); but if he has obtained, without fraud and bona fide believing that under a custom he is entitled to retain it, a discount, he is not debarred from recovering his remuneration less such discount. Hippisley v. Knee, (1905) 1 K. B. 1.

The company can sue the briber for the amount, because what the agent acquires he acquires for the company. Mayor of Salford v. Lever, (1891) 1 Q. B. 188; Whaley Bridge Co. v. Green, 5 Q. B. D. 109; Grant v. Gold Exploration and Development Syndicate, (1900) 1 Q. B. 233, in which case the company was held entitled to sue for the full amount of the commission promised less the amount actually paid, although by subsequent arrangement the amount had been reduced.

In the alternative the company may, if it chooses, rescind the contract, for where one party to a contract bribes or has any underhand dealing with the agent of the other party, the latter on discovery may repudiate the contract. Panama and Pacific, &c. Co. v. Indiarubber, &c. Co. (1875), 10 Ch. 515 (C. A.); Shipway v. Broadwood, (1899) 1 Q. B. 369 (C. A.); and see the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906.

In such cases the Court will not enter into an inquiry what effect the bribe had on the agent. "Directly it is proved that money was paid or promised to the Form 251. agent of the other party, it is quite unnecessary to go farther and see what effect that had on the mind of the person to whom it was paid or to be paid." Per Chitty, L. J., in the case last mentioned. In direct conflict with these decisions is Rowland v. Chapman, W. N. (1901) 153, in which Buckley, J., held that a contract was not rendered voidable by bribing the other party's agent, if, having regard to the amount, the balance of his interest was in favour of doing his duty to his principal.

Sometimes voting is permitted; and it would appear that even when the party interested may not vote as a director he may vote as a shareholder in the event of the matter being referred to a general meeting. N. W. Transportation Co. v. Beatty, 12 App. Cas. 589; Greenfield v. Porter, (1902) 1 Ch. 530; Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83.

At times a clause as follows is inserted:—

93. A director of this coy may be, or become, a director of any coy promoted by this coy, or in which it may be interested as a vendor, shareholder, or otherwise, and no such director shall be accountable for any benefits received as director or member of such coy."

Such a clause is occasionally inserted where the formation of other companies is in view.

Prima facie a director may act as a director of even a rival company. London, &c. Co. v. New Mashonaland Co., W. N. (1891) 165. And if he holds his qualification in trust for another concern he is not accountable for his fees to that concern. Dover Coalfields Extension, Ltd., (1908) 1 Ch. 65.

A limited company which has the requisite power may be the sole director of another company. Bulawayo Market Co., (1907) 2 Ch. 458.

ROTATION OF DIRECTORS.

Rotation and retirement of directors.

94. At the ordinary general meeting to be held in the year —, and at every succeeding ordinary general meeting, one-third of the directors, or, if their number is not a multiple of three, then the number nearest to, but not exceeding one-third, shall retire from office.

The above is a clause which is in very general use. Sometimes it is provided in the case of a small number of directors, e.g., five or less, that "two [or one] of the directors shall retire."

Sometimes the clause is framed like clause 82 of Table A., and provides that the meeting is to stand adjourned for a week; and that if at the adjourned meeting their places are not filled up the directors shall continue in office. It has been held that in such case, even if the adjourned meeting is not in fact held, the directors will continue in office. Great Northern Salt, 44 C. D. 472.

Table A. provides that:—

"At the first ordinary meeting of the company, the whole of the directors shall retire from office; and at the ordinary meeting in every subsequent year one-third of the directors for the time being, or, if their number is not three or a multiple of three, then the number nearest to one-third shall retire from office."

But this form of clause is seldom adopted in its integrity. The promoters generally nominate the first directors, and it is considered only fair that they should have a reasonable time to try their policy. Of course, if the company chooses, it can at any time remove them under clause 99.

Form 251.

95. The one-third, or other nearest number, to retire at the ordinary meeting to be held in the year — shall, unless the directors agree among themselves, be determined by lot; in every subsequent year the one-third, or other nearest number, who have been longest in office shall retire. As between two or more who have been in office an equal length of time the director to retire shall in default of agreement between them be determined by lot. The length of time a director has been in office shall be computed from his last election or appointment where he has previously vacated office. A retiring director shall be eligible for re-election.

Which directors to retire.

96. The coy at any general meeting at which any directors retire in manner aforesaid shall fill up the vacated offices by electing a like number of persons to be directors [and without notice in that behalf may fill up any other vacancies].

Meeting to fill up vacancies.

The words in brackets are very commonly absent, and in such case it is by no means clear that the meeting could, without notice, fill up a vacancy, unless it was caused by retirement "in manner aforesaid." But see Munster v. Cammell Co., 21 C. D. 188, and compare with Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. Div. 1.

Votes given in favour of a disqualified person may be thrown away where notice of the disqualification is brought home to the voters. Reg. v. Tewkesbury, L. R. 3 Q. B. 635. And in the result the candidate who stands next may be entitled to office.

Where there are several vacancies to be filled up, each candidate's name should be put and voted on separately. To put forward a list and vote for the candidates therein in a batch is not allowable, for the meeting is not bound to fill up the vacancies, and list voting, in the absence of special provision, is only allowable where a given number are to be elected on a given day under a statute to an official position. See Reg. v. Brightwell, 10 A. & E. 176; Reg. v. Player, 2 B. & A. 707; Re v. Monday, 2 Cowp. 530.

97. If, at any general meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place, the places of the retiring directors are not filled up, the retiring directors, or such of them as have not had their places filled up, shall, if willing, continue in office until the ordinary meeting in the next year, and so on from year to year until their places are filled up, unless it shall be determined at such meeting [on due notice] to reduce the number of directors.

Retiring directors to remain in office till successors appointed.

If by reason of the refusal of a director to continue there remains a vacancy, it can be filled up as a casual vacancy. See Munster v. Cammell Co., ubi supra. "Casual vacancy" means any vacancy not occurring by effluxion of time, that is, any vacancy occurring by death, resignation, or bankruptcy. York Tramways v. Willows, 8 Q. B. D. 694.

But for this clause the acts of a director who, after his office was vacated, under clause 95, continued to act, would, subject to sect. 74 of the Act (infra, p. 743, note to clause 111), be void as against the members. Garden Gully, &c. Co. v. McLister, 1 App. Cas. 39. Apart from such a clause, a director whose term of office is up vacates office, and if he continues to act is merely a de facto director. See Tyne Steamship Insurance Association v. Brown, 74 L. T. 283. See infra, clause 111.

A shareholder can vote for his own election, for he is not in a fiduciary position. If he appoints a proxy, clearly the proxy can vote for the appointor, and it would seem that he can vote in his own favour with or without express authority, for it is the appointor who votes. Qui facit per alium facit per se. The doctrine that a person empowered to appoint new trustees cannot appoint himself trustee (Skrat's Settlement, 42 C. D. 522), is not applicable, for in that case the power is a fiduciary one.

If the words in brackets are omitted, it seems that a resolution not to fill up the places of the retiring directors, and to "reduce the number of directors accordingly," is operative without notice, if the reduced number is not below the minimum fixed by the articles. Bennett Bros., Ltd. v. Lewis, 48 S. J. 14.

general meeting to increase or reduce number of directors.

98. The coy in general meeting may from time to time increase or reduce the number of directors, and may [alter their qualification and may] also determine in what rotation such increased or reduced number is to go out of office.

The words in brackets are sometimes found useful.

remove director by

99. The coy may by extraordinary resolution remove any director before the expiration of his period of office, and appoint another [qualified] person in his stead: the person so appointed shall hold office during such time only as the director in whose place he is appointed would have held the same if he had not been removed.

Directors of a company cannot be removed during their term of office by the shareholders, unless there is a special provision for that purpose in the articles. Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. Div. 1; Isle of Wight Rail. Co. v. Tahourdin, 25 Ch. D. 330; Browne v. La Trinidad, 37 Ch. D. 11; and see Logan v. Davis, 104 L. T. 914, infra, p. 738.

If there is no power the articles must first be altered, and then the power exercised. However, if in any case where there is no power it is desired to act promptly, a special resolution can be passed giving power to a general meeting to remove, and the notice convening the confirmatory meeting can state that if the resolution is confirmed a further resolution will be proposed removing Mr. A. from office. Sometimes the majority is not sufficiently powerful to pass a special resolution for removal, as was the case in Automatic Self-cleansing Filter Syndicate Co. v. Cunniffame, (1906) 2 Ch. 34. Where this is the situation a mere majority of the shareholders cannot interfere with the mandate given to the directors by the whole body of shareholders. Gramophone and Typewriter, (1908) 2 K. B. 80; Salmon v. Quin and Axtens, (1909) 1 Ch. 311, affirmed by House of Lords; Logan v. Davis, supra. See, however, Marshall's Valve Gear Co. v. Manning, Wardle & Co., (1909) 1 Ch. 267. But it may still be expedient in such a case to pass a resolution approving of the director's exclusion, for where the majority of shareholders is against a director, the Court will not force him on the company by injunction. Harben v. Phillips, 23 C. Div. 14; Bainbridge v. Smith, 41 C. Div. 462. It is a different matter where the directors—as distinguished from the company—exclude a co-director from acting. Then the Court will interfere, as against the directors, by injunction. Pulbrook v. Richmond Mining Co., 9 Ch. D. 610.

As to the meaning of extraordinary resolution, see sect. 69 of the Act, and p. 1092, infra. Table A., clause 86, provides for removal by extraordinary resolution. Sometimes the clause is framed as follows: "The company in general meeting may," &c.

Sometimes where paragraph (A) of clause 91 is not inserted, it is considered expedient to insert a clause to the effect that "the directors may, at a meeting specially convened for the purpose by a resolution of a three-fourths majority of the directors present thereat, suspend any director, and at the expiration of fourteen days a director so suspended shall vacate office, unless he, within that period, gives notice to the company that he appeals to a general meeting; and if he so appeals the directors shall, with all convenient speed, convene a general meeting to consider such appeal, and such meeting may annul the suspension or may affirm it and remove the director."

Where the power to remove is only for reasonable cause, it is for the meeting to decide what is reasonable cause, and the Court will not interfere with their decision. Underwick v. Snell, 2 M. & G. 216; and see Gresham Life, 8 Ch. 449; Osgood v. Nelson, L. R. 5 H. L. 636. If a director cannot be removed, and the result is a deadlock, a winding-up order may, semble, be obtained. Sailing Ship Kentmere, W. N. (1897) 58; and see Brick and Stone Co., W. N. (1878) 58.

99a. Any casual vacancy occurring among the directors may be filled up by the directors; but any person so chosen shall retain his office so long only as the vacating director would have retained the same if no vacancy had occurred.]

Directors may fill up casual vacancies.

This clause is usually inserted where clause 85 is not used. It would be extremely inconvenient in most cases if a general meeting of the company had to be called to fill up a casual vacancy.

A casual vacancy means any vacancy arising otherwise than by retirement under clause 94 (Munster v. Cammell Co., 21 C. D. 183), e.g., any vacancy occurring by death, resignation, or bankruptcy. York Tramways v. Willows, 8 Q. B. Div. 694. The Court will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion. Lambert v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co., 30 W. R. 914.

To fill up a vacancy there must be a quorum. Newhaven v. Newhaven, 30 C. D. 380.

Where the directors are given a general power [supra, note to clause 85] to appoint additional directors, this clause will be omitted.

100. No person, not being a retiring director, shall, unless recommended by the directors for election, be eligible for election to the office of director at any general meeting, unless he, or some other member intending to propose him, has, at least seven clear days

When candidate for office of director must give notice.

Form 251. before the meeting, left at the office a notice in writing duly signed, signifying his candidature for the office, or the intention of such member to propose him.

This clause is found convenient and for the benefit of a company. It enables inquiries to be made as to a candidate's antecedents, &c., &c. See Barber's case, 5 C. Div. 963.

Register of directors and notification of changes to registrar.

101. The coy is to keep at its office a register containing the names and addresses and occupations of its directors, and is to send to the Registrar of Companies a copy of such register, and shall from time to time notify to the registrar any change that takes place in such directors, as required by sect. 75 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

The above clause is in the terms of sect. 75 of the Companies Act, 1908. It seems desirable to insert such a clause by way of reminder, but if preferred the clause can easily provide that the directors shall comply with sect. 75 in regard to keeping a register of directors or managers, and notifying changes to the registrar.

MANAGING DIRECTOR.

Power to appoint managing director.

102. The directors may, from time to time, appoint one or more of their body to be managing director or managing directors of the coy, either for a fixed term or without any limitation as to the period for which he or they is or are to hold such office, and may from time to time remove or dismiss him or them from office and appoint another or others in his or their place or places.

The above and the following are the usual clauses as to a managing director. It seems expedient in most cases to insert them in order to avoid the necessity of having to alter the articles. Of course, the exercise of the powers contained in these clauses is optional. Not uncommonly the first managing director is appointed by the articles.

Where directors, under a power vested in them by the articles, have appointed one of themselves managing director, a majority of the shareholders, though disapproving the appointment, cannot interfere, because by another article the directors are to carry on the business "subject to such regulation as may be made by the company in general meeting." Logan v. Davis, 104 L. T. 914.

What provisions he will be subject to.

103. A managing director shall not, while he continues to hold that office, be subject to retirement by rotation, and he shall not be taken into account in determining the rotation of retirement of directors, but he shall, subject to the provisions of any contract between him and the coy, be subject to the same provisions as to resignation and removal as the other directors of the coy, and if he cease to hold the office of director from any cause, he shall, ipso facto and immediately, Form 251. cease to be a managing director.

104. The remuneration of a managing director shall from time to time be fixed by the directors, and may be by way of salary, or commission, or participation in profits, or by any or all of those modes. Remuneration of managing director.

Sometimes the articles give him a commission on the profits, or on the surplus profits, or on the dividend paid.

A managing director may be entitled in a winding-up to prove for arrears of salary in competition with outside creditors. Dale and Plant, 43 C. D. 255. And see Ex parte Beckwith, (1898) 1 Ch. 324; Shaw, Bryant & Co., W. N. (1901) 124.

But a managing director whose salary has not been duly assigned to him may have to account for it. Liverpool Household Stores, 62 L. T. 878.

Where a managing director is appointed for a term with a covenant not to compete with the company, and a winding-up commences whereby the company is disabled from continuing his employment, he may be entitled to disregard the covenant. Measures Brothers v. Measures, (1910) 2 Ch. 248; General Billposting Co. v. Atkinson, (1909) A. C. 118.

105. The directors may from time to time entrust to and confer upon a managing director for the time being such of the powers exercisable under these presents by the directors as they may think fit, and may confer such powers for such time, and to be exercised for such objects and purposes, and upon such terms and conditions, and with such restrictions as they think expedient; and they may confer such powers, either collaterally with, or to the exclusion of, and in substitution for, all or any of the powers of the directors in that behalf; and may from time to time revoke, withdraw, alter, or vary all or any of such powers. Powers and duties of managing director.

These powers will be conferred by resolution of the directors. In the absence of express power to delegate, the maxim "delegatus non potest delegare" applies to directors. Howard's case, 1 Ch. 561; Harris's case, 7 Ch. 587. In the latter case, there being a power to delegate, it was held that an allotment made by a committee, instead of by the board of directors, was valid. See also Land Credit Co., 4 Ch. 460. See the general power of delegation, infra, clause 109. For exceptions to rule, see De Bussche v. Alt, 8 C. Div. 300; and Rossiter v. Trafalgar Co., 27 Beav. 380. The mere appointment of a manager by directors under a power for that purpose will only operate as a delegation to such manager of the ordinary commercial business of the company. Cartmell's case, L. R. 9 Ch. 696. Persons dealing bond fide with a managing director are entitled to assume that he has all such powers as he purports to exercise, if they are powers which, according to the constitution of the company, a managing director might have. Biggerstaff v. Rowatt's Wharf, (1896) 2 Ch. 93; Owen and Ashworth's Claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 115.

Form 251.

PROCEEDINGS OF DIRECTORS.

Meetings of directors, and quorum.

106. The directors may meet together for the dispatch of business, adjourn, and otherwise regulate their meetings and proceedings, as they think fit, and may determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business. Until otherwise determined, two directors shall be a quorum. [A director interested is to be counted in a quorum notwithstanding his interest.]

The directors must, prima facie, act by resolution at a board meeting duly convened and constituted (per Cozens-Hardy, J., Haycraft Gold Reduction and Mining Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 230; see also Harben v. Phillips, 23 Ch. D. 14), for the company is entitled to the benefit of their combined wisdom in board meeting assembled. But if the articles so provide (see clause 112), a resolution in writing, signed by the directors without meeting, is as effective as a resolution passed at a meeting.

If a general meeting is convened by the secretary without proper authority, it is irregular (Haycraft Gold Reduction, &c. Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 230; State of Wyoming Syndicate, (1901) 2 Ch. 431 (Wright, J.)), unless before the day fixed the directors ratify the act of the secretary. Hooper v. Kerr, Stuart & Co., 45 S. J. 139 (22 December, 1900); Transport Co. v. Schonberg, 21 T. L. R. 305.

Where, as above (clause 83), it is provided that there shall be a certain minimum number of directors, and the articles fix the quorum, it seems that if by vacancies the number be reduced to less than the minimum, in the absence of a clause similar to 90, nothing can be done until the minimum number is made up (Alma Spinning Co., 16 Ch. D. 681; Kirk v. Bell, 16 Q. B. 290; Scottish Petroleum Co., 23 C. Div. 413; Faure v. Phillipsart, 58 L. T. 527; Owen & Ashworth's Claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 115; British Empire Match Co., 59 L. T. 292; Sly, Spink & Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 430); though it may be that in such cases the remaining directors could exercise a power to fill up the vacancy. York Tramways Co. v. Willows, 8 Q. B. Div. 685. Notwithstanding the defectiveness of the board the acts of the directors may be valid in favour of a person who has no notice of the irregularity. British Asbestos Co., (1903) 1 Ch. 439.

A quorum, it has been held, means a quorum competent to transact and vote on the business before the board, and a resolution passed only by what would be a quorum if one of the number was not interested and prohibited from voting is invalid. Greymouth Point, &c. Co., Yuill v. Same, (1904) 1 Ch. 32.

Where no quorum is fixed by the articles, and no power to fix a quorum is given, the directors must act on the footing that, to constitute a valid meeting, all the directors must be summoned, and a majority must be present. York Tramways Co. v. Willows, ubi supra. And where the articles give power to appoint a quorum, and do not provide as above for an interim quorum, there must be a majority of the directors present at a duly convened meeting in order effectually to exercise the power. Portuguese Copper Mines Co., 42 C. Div. 161. If no quorum has been fixed the number that usually act will do. Lyster v. Cass (1867), 4 Eq. 233. Moreover, a meeting of the directors to be effective must be duly convened by proper notice to each director. Browne v. La Trinidad, 37 C. D. 1; Harben v. Phillips, supra; Homer Co., 39 C. D. 546; Haycraft Gold, &c. Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 230. But there may be cases in which, even in the absence of a provision to the contrary as above, notice need not be given to a director who is abroad (Halifax Sugar Co., 62 L. T. 564); unless, perhaps, he is within easy reach. Portuguese Copper Mines Co., 42 C. Div. 167. Reasonable notice should be given; but where very short notice is given to a director, and he does not at once object, he may be taken to waive any objection. Broena v. La Trinidad, 37 C. Div. 1; see supra. Unless otherwise provided by the regulations of the company, or of the directors, the notice convening a meeting of the directors need not specify the business to be transacted. La Compagnie de Mayville v. Whitley, (1896) 1 Ch. 788.

Very commonly the directors determine to hold ordinary board meetings on a specified day or days in each week or month, and at a specified place and hour, and of course notice of such determination renders it unnecessary to give further notice of each such meeting.

If the directors act at an irregular board meeting, what they do may be void (Homer Co., 39 C. D. 546), and the company may be involved in serious consequent difficulties. But it is usually open to a subsequent regular board meeting to ratify what has been done by an irregular board. Portuguese Copper Mines Co., 45 C. Div. 28; Land Credit Co., 4 Ch. 473; Hooper v. Kerr, Stuart & Co., 83 L. T. 729; State of Wyoming Syndicate, (1901) 2 Ch. 431. In Portuguese Copper Mines there was an allotment of shares to A. made by an irregular board. Some time afterwards, A. not having repudiated the allotment, it was ratified by a regular board, and it was held that A. was bound.

The decision of the Court of Appeal in Bolton Partners v. Lambert, 41 C. Div. 295, goes much further. In that case it was held that a contract made by A., purporting to act on behalf of a company (but in fact without authority), could be ratified by the company notwithstanding that the other party to such contract had repudiated before the ratification. This is a startling doctrine. The cases of National Coffee Palace, 24 C. Div. 374; Richardson v. Williamson, L. R. 6 Q. B. 276; Firbank v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. Div. 54, which show that where one person purports to act as agent for another he is to be regarded as representing that he is authorized by that other, were not cited; and, having regard to these cases, it may be that, if the agent is in fact unauthorized, the other party may, on the ground of misrepresentation, repudiate the contract before it has been ratified. It has now been judicially declared that Bolton Partners v. Lambert may require reconsideration. Fleming v. Bank of New Zealand, (1900) A. C. 587, 588. In any case ratification must be within a reasonable time. Portuguese Copper Mines Co., 45 C. Div. 30; Metropolitan Asylums Board v. Kingham, 6 T. L. R. 217.

Where the director intends but does not purport to act as agent for the company, the company cannot ratify. Keighley, Mazted & Co. v. Durant, (1901) A. C. 240.

A formal resolution is not in all cases necessary to show that directors have sanctioned a particular transaction, as the following observations of Giffard, L. J., show. "I have no hesitation in saying," remarked the learned judge, "that it was not necessary for the directors to pass any resolution in order to make the acceptance of bills binding on the company, or in saying that if the directors met together, and the chairman, with their knowledge, accepted a bill of exchange, that would bind the company. In the same way, if a bill of exchange had been accepted by the chairman, without due authority, and the directors afterwards, at a meeting, knowing that the acceptance had been given and dealt with, acted on the footing that the bill had been properly accepted, I should not have the least hesitation in saying that the acceptance would bind the company." Land Credit Co., 4 Ch. 460, 473. But see the note to clause 111.

As to ratification by a general meeting. Grant v. United Switchback Co., 40 C. D. 135; Boschoek Proprietary Co., Ltd. v. Fuke, (1906) 1 Ch. 148.

106a. A director may at any time [and the secretary, upon the request of a director, shall] convene a meeting of the directors. [It Director may summon meeting.]

Form 251. shall not be necessary to give notice of a meeting of the directors to a director who is not in the United Kingdom.] Questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes, and in case of an equality of votes, the chairman shall have a second or casting vote.

How questions to be decided.

A person dealing with the company is not bound to ascertain that the seal has been affixed by the authority of a duly constituted board. County of Gloucester Bank v. Rudry Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 629; Owen and Ashworth's Claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 115; conf. Mayor of Sturges v. Bank of England, 21 Q. B. D. 161, and other cases, supra, p. 83.

Where, as in Table A., the power to appoint the first directors is vested in the subscribers, they need not hold a meeting in order to make a valid appointment. Great Northern Salt, &c. Co., 44 C. D. 472, supra, p. 717. But in such a case all the subscribers must sign and not merely a majority. John Morley Building Co. v. Bourne, (1891) 2 Ch. 392.

Sometimes proxies are allowed, as thus:—"A director may attend and vote by proxy at any meeting of the directors, provided such proxy is a member and has been approved of as such by the unanimous vote of the directors, and has been appointed by writing under the hand of the appointor. The appointment may be general or for any particular meeting or meetings. The appointee may be another director of the company."

Chairman.

107. The directors may elect a chairman of their meetings, and determine the period for which he is to hold office; but if no such chairman is elected, or if at any meeting the chairman is not present at the time appointed for holding the same, the directors present shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

Sometimes the first chairman is specified, so as to avoid discussion.

Powers of quorum.

108. A meeting of the directors for the time being at which a quorum is present shall be competent to exercise all or any of the authorities, powers, and discretions by or under the articles of the company for the time being vested in or exercisable by the directors generally.

This clause merely expresses that which has hitherto been generally assumed; but as some doubt has been raised whether the ordinary clause (106) as to a quorum enables a board meeting to act in regard to important matters, it seems desirable to provide as above. See New Sombbrero Co. v. Erlanger, 5 C. Div. 73; 3 App. Cas. 1218; Alma Spinning Co., 16 C. D. 681; York Tramways v. Willows, 8 Q. B. Div. 697. A director who, being interested, is disqualified from voting cannot prima facie be counted in a quorum. Ibid.; Re Greymouth Point Elizabeth Rail. Co., Yuill v. Same, (1904) 1 Ch. 32. And it must not be forgotten that, although a quorum may in fact be present, if they have not been duly summoned they do not form a properly constituted meeting capable of transacting business. Homer District Co., 39 C. D. 546.

Power to appoint committees and to delegate.

109. The directors may delegate any of their powers to committees consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit. Any committee so formed shall, in the exercise of the powers so delegated, conform to any regulations that may from time to time be Form 251. imposed upon it by the directors.

Without an authority of this kind directors cannot delegate. Cobb v. Becke, 6 Q. B. 929.

The above clause is generally inserted, and is of great practical convenience. See Taurine Co., 25 C. D. 118; Harris's case, 7 Ch. 587; Leeds Estate Co. v. Shepherd, 36 Ch. D. 787. It will be observed that the committee may consist of one member only.

Where the directors have authority to delegate their powers to committees, such delegation may be presumed, if one or two directors act for the company in a matter which might have been delegated to them. Totterdell v. Farsham Brick Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 674; Regent's Canal Co., W. N. (1867) 79; Lyster's case, 4 Eq. 238; Mahoney v. East Holyford Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 869. See, however, Premier Industrial Bank v. Carlton Manufacturing Co., (1909) 1 K. B. 106.

Delegation does not prevent the directors generally from acting in regard to the matter delegated. Huth v. Clarke, 25 Q. B. D. 391.

If directors delegate their powers to a committee without fixing a quorum, whatever the committee does must, unless the articles otherwise provide, be done in the presence of all its members. Liverpool Household Stores, 62 L. T. 876.

110. The meetings and proceedings of any such committee, consisting of two or more members, shall be governed by the provisions herein contained for regulating the meetings and proceedings of the directors, so far as the same are applicable thereto, and are not superseded by any regulations made by the directors under the last preceding clause. Proceedings of committee.

It is conceived that this clause gives power to a committee of several to appoint a quorum. But prima facie a committee cannot appoint a quorum, or sub-delegate or act unless all the members are present. Liverpool Household Stores, ubi supra; Cook v. Ward, 2 C. P. D. 255.

111. All acts done by any meeting of the directors, or by a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding that it shall afterwards be discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of such directors or persons acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director. When acts of directors or committee valid, notwithstanding defective appointment, &c.

It is to be observed that this clause, unlike sects. 71 (3), 74 of the Act, is not qualified by the words "until the contrary is proved." The clause is effective not only in favour of the members, but of outsiders. Thus, in Mahoney v. East Holyford Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 887, the de facto directors had not been duly appointed, but the company was bound by their acts as regards an outsider. The articles contained sect. 74 (85) as above, and Lord Cairns said:—

Form 251. "It appears to me that this is exactly such a case as the 85th section of the articles is meant to meet. There is no regular appointment of directors, and the persons so acting may perhaps have been disqualified; but the acts done by them are to be taken as being as valid as if they had been duly appointed and qualified."

See also Newhaven v. Newhaven, 30 C. D. 363; Re Bank of Syria, (1900) 2 Ch. 272; Howbeach Coal Co. v. Teague, 5 H. & N. 151; and Briton Medical Co. v. Jones, 61 L. T. 384, in which it was held that under sect. 67 of the Companies Act, 1862 (Companies Act, 1908, ss. 71 (3), 74), a call made by directors who had not been duly appointed was valid; and Dawson v. African Consolidated, &c. Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 6; 46 W. R. 132, is to the same effect. So where B., one of the directors of a company with an article in the form above, vacated office by being appointed secretary in October, but resigned the latter office on 2nd December, and at a board meeting on 4th December attended only by B. and R. (another director) a letter was received from M., the third director, resigning his directorship, and B. and R. thereupon resolved that B. should be managing director, and at the next meeting B. and R. purported to appoint D. a director, and B. and R. acted as directors till after 3rd March, 1903, when they discovered the irregularities: Farwell, J., held that the irregularities in the appointments of B. and D. (the quorum being two), and the subsequent acts of the three, were validated by the article and by sect. 67 of the Act of 1862, and that the three were a duly constituted board. British Asbestos Co. v. Boyd, (1903) 2 Ch. 439. See also Transport Ltd. v. Schonberg, 21 T. L. R. 306; County Life Ass. Co., 5 Ch. 288; Gre. Northern Salt Co., 44 C. D. 472; and Murray v. Bush, L. R. 6 H. L. 37. A director who takes part in irregular proceedings may be estopped from setting up the irregularity. Faure v. Phillipart, 58 L. T. 527; York Tramways v. Willows, 8 Q. B. Div. 685.

As to convening a general meeting by de facto directors, see Roschoek Proprietary Co., Ltd. v. Fuke, (1906) 1 Ch. 148.

The clause may not protect a person who knows of the defect. Staffordshire Gas, 66 L. T. 414; Tyne, &c. Co. v. Brown, 74 L. T. 483; Murray v. Bush, L. R. 6 H. L. 77. As to invalidity of a directors' meeting where some directors are not summoned, see Harben v. Phillips, 23 C. D. 34.

Resolution without board meeting valid.

[112. A resolution in writing, signed by all the directors, shall be as valid and effectual as if it had been passed at a meeting of the directors duly called and constituted.]

As regards this clause, it must be borne in mind that the London Stock Exchange Committee regard it as objectionable, and accordingly, where a quotation is desired, it should be omitted. In other cases it is found convenient. In the absence of such a clause directors cannot act without a board meeting. Nicol's case, 3 D. & J. 440; Hayercraft Gold Reduction and Mining Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 230; State of Wyoming Syndicate, (1901) 2 Ch. 431; D'Arcy v. The Tamar, &c. Co., L. R. 2 Ex. 158; Re Marseilles Rail. Co., L. R. 7 Ch. 169; Re Great Northern Salt Works, 59 L. J. Ch. 288. Compare Collie's Claim, 12 Eq. 258.

Remuneration for extra service.

112a. If any director, being willing, shall be called upon to perform extra services, or to make any special exertions in going or residing abroad, or otherwise for any of the purposes of the company, the coy shall remunerate the director so doing, either by a fixed sum or by a percentage of profits, or otherwise as may be determined by the directors, and such remuneration may be either in addition to or in substitution for his or their share in the remuneration above provided. Form 251.

This clause is commonly inserted. It must be clearly made out that the services are extra: for when services are rendered to a company by one of its own directors the presumption is that they are not "extra services." Lockhart v. Moldacott, 5 T. L. R. 307. Travelling expenses to attend board meetings will not be allowed, see Young v. Naval Soc., (1905) 1 K. B. 687; Marmor, Lim. v. Alexander, 8. C., 78 Ct. of Sess. 78.

MINUTES.

[112b. The directors shall cause minutes to be duly entered in books provided for the purpose— Minutes to be made.

- (a) Of all appointments of officers.
- (b) Of the names of the directors present at each meeting of the directors and of any committee of directors.
- (c) Of all orders made by the directors and committees of directors.
- (d) Of all resolutions and proceedings of general meetings and of meetings of the directors and committees.

And any such minutes of any meeting of the directors, or of any committee, or of the coy, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of such meeting, or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting, shall be receivable as prima facie evidence of the matters stated in such minutes.]

See sect. 71 of the Act of 1908 as to the company's duty to cause minutes to be kept.

The above clause is sometimes inserted, and may possibly be useful as a reminder, but if brevity is desired it can be omitted; for sect. 71 of the Act sufficiently provides for these matters.

Even apart from the Act, the clause would appear to be effectual as against any member of the company, although, of course, not against strangers. See Roney's case, 12 W. R. 816, 994; 4 D. J. & S. 426.

Entries in the company's books which would be irregular unless based on resolutions of the board afford prima facie evidence of the resolutions, even though no minute thereof is forthcoming. Re Knight, 2 Ch. 321; Grent Northern Salt, 44 C. D. 483; and see Lane's case, 1 D. J. & S. 509.

And so, too, a letter written by the secretary will be presumed prima facie to have been written with the authority of the directors. Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency, 5 C. Div. 687; but see George Whitchurch, Limited, (1902) A. C. 117, 124.

The absence, however, of any minute of an alleged transaction is material when the party who alleges the transaction was a director. Re Rotherham Co. (1884), 25 Ch. D. 109.

The fact that the proceeding at a meeting are entered in the minute book is not conclusive that the proceedings were regular, and does not preclude the Form 251. Court from inquiring into the validity of the notice convening the meeting. Betts & Co. v. Macnaghten, (1910) 1 Ch. 430.

The minutes, being only prima facie evidence, may be contradicted by other evidence (Totthill's case, 1 Ch. 85; and see 16 W. R. 1192), but if signed by the chairman are to be taken prima facie as correct. Indian Zedane Co., 26 C. D. 70; and see Southampton Docks Co. v. Richards, 1 Man. & Gr. 448.

A bargain may be made out, even though not recorded in the book (Pyl. Works (No. 2), (1891) 1 Ch. 184), and a man may be held to be a member although no allotment is entered in the minutes. Great Northern Salt Co., 44 C. D. 472. But absence of any minute of an alleged transaction is material where the party alleging the transaction was a director. Rotherham Co. (1884), 25 C. D. 109.

A director who is present at a meeting of the Board at which the minutes of proceedings at a prior board are confirmed is not thereby made responsible for what was done at the prior board. Lands Allotment Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 616.

POWERS OF DIRECTORS.

General powers of company vested in directors.

113. The management of the business of the company shall be vested in the directors, who, in addition to the powers and authorities by these presents or otherwise expressly conferred upon them, may exercise all such powers and do all such acts and things as may be exercised or done by the company and are not hereby or by statute expressly directed or required to be exercised or done by the company in general meeting, but subject nevertheless to the provisions of the statutes, and of these presents, and to any regulations from time to time made by the company in general meeting: provided that no regulation so made shall invalidate any prior act of the directors which would have been valid if such regulation had not been made.

The above clause is usual. If it is desired to limit the authority of the directors, express provision is accordingly made, but, subject thereto, the general powers of the company are almost always given to the directors. See and compare clause 55 of Table A.

And such a general delegation is valid and effectual. Thus, in Patent Fil. Co., 6 Ch. 13, the articles authorized the borrowing of money with the sanction of an extraordinary meeting of the company; they also contained a clause substantially the same as above. The directors overdraw the company's banking account, and, being required by the bank to give security, deposited title deeds of property belonging to the company. It was held in the winding-up of the company that the mortgage was valid. James, L. J., said (inter alia) that it was "plain that, under these articles, the directors can do anything which the company could do, unless it is an act which they are specially prohibited from doing. I can find nothing in the memorandum or articles to prevent the directors from making the best terms they can with a creditor of the company by selling or pledging part of the property of the company." And Mellish, L. J., said (inter alia): "The articles give to the directors the whole powers of the company, subject to the provisions of the articles and of the Companies Act, 1862, and I cannot find anything either in the Act or the articles to prohibit their making a mortgage by deposit. . . . There being nothing in the articles to prohibit the giving of such security, I am of opinion that the company can give it as well for a past debt as a future one."

See also Anglo-Danubian Co., 20 Eq. 339. There the articles contained express power to borrow (clause 29), and also (clause 66) a general delegation of powers as above. The question was, whether the directors had power to issue debentures at a discount. Jessel, M. R., held that they could: "There is nothing in these articles to limit the amount of interest; the directors might give 10 per cent., 20 per cent., or 30 per cent., and they might give that interest by way of discount. If, therefore, I went on the mere words of the 29th clause, I should hold this was within their powers. But, looking to the 66th clause, I cannot have any possible doubt. The directors can do anything the company can do; and as there are no regulations prescribed by the articles or the company under the 66th clause, they may borrow on any terms they think fit." See also Australian Co. v. Mounsey, 4 K. & J. 733; Peruvian Rail. Co., 2 Ch. 617; Hampson v. Pries's Patent Candle Co., 45 L. J. Ch. 437; Pyle Works (No. 2), (1891) 1 Ch. 173.

In exercising these powers, whether general or special, directors must always bear in mind that they are trustees for the company and must exercise the powers for the benefit of the company and for that alone. Richmond's case, 4 K. & J. 325; Gilbert's case, 5 Ch. 559; Re Gresham Life Assurance Society, Ex parte Penney, L. R. 8 Ch. 907; Punt v. Symons & Co., (1903) 2 Ch. 506; Percival v. Wright, (1902) 2 Ch. 421.

And where the directors act bonâ fide in exercise of a discretion vested in them by the regulations, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion. Gresham Life, supra.

If the directors propose to enter into some contract, or do something of which the majority disapprove, it may sometimes be practicable to make a regulation under the above clause; and if the directors threaten to disobey, an action can be brought in the name of the company to restrain them.

Where the articles vest the general powers of the company in the directors "subject to such regulations not being inconsistent with the aforesaid regulations" as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting, the company in general meeting cannot override the directors' powers by prescribing a regulation or passing a resolution inconsistent with the articles. Automatic Self-Cleansing Co. v. Cunningham, (1906) 2 Ch. 34; Gramophone and Typewriter, (1908) 2 K. B. 89; Salmon v. Quin and Axtens, (1909) A. C. 433; Logan v. Davis, 104 L. T. 914. See, however, Marshall's Valve Gear Co. v. Manning, Wardle & Co., (1909) 1 Ch. 267.

Where it is desired to give general meetings more effective control, omit the words "and to any regulations from time to time made by the company in general meeting" and substitute the words "and the exercise of such powers, authorities and discretion shall be subject also to the control and regulations of any general meeting specially convened for the purpose"; thus following the provisions of s. 90 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 16).

114. Without prejudice to the general powers conferred by the last preceding clause, and the other powers conferred by these presents, it is hereby expressly declared that the directors shall have the following powers; that is to say, power—

Specific powers given to directors.

From what is said in the note to clause 113, it seems that many of the subsections of this clause might without danger be omitted. Nevertheless, it is usual expressly to confer all, or some, of the powers contained in them, and reasons for doing so are not wanting; e.g., 1. Directors like, as far as possible, to have express authority; for where express authority is given by the articles, the company cannot complain that an act of the directors pursuant thereto is ultra vires. Thus, where the articles authorized the directors to pay 6,000*l.* to the promoters of the company, it was held, on demurrer, that payment without taxation was not improper. Croskey v. Bank of Wales, 4 Giff. 314. But express authority is no protection unless the directors act bond fide and are not guilty of negligence or fraud. Englefield Co., 8 C. Div. 388; Marzetti's case, 28 W. R. 541. So where the articles authorized the directors to acquire a specific business "upon such terms and under such stipulations as to guarantee or otherwise as may be agreed upon," it was held that they were under no obligation to consult the company in general meeting before making the purchase, although the business was insolvent and the purchase would involve undertaking vast liabilities. Overend & Gurney Co. v. Gibb, L. R. 5 H. L. 480. See also Blakely Ordnance Co., 3 Ch. 159; Bank of Turkey v. Ottoman Bank, 14 W. R. 819; Eley v. Positive, & Co. Soc., 1 Ex. Div. 88.

2. The insertion of express powers relieves the directors from responsibility; for, in the absence of fraud or gross negligence, they will not be under any personal liability to the company, even though, in the exercise of the powers entrusted to them, they are guilty of imprudence and want of judgment which result in a great loss to the company. Overend & Gurney Co. v. Gibb, ubi supra; Brazilian Rubber Plantations (No. 1), (1911) 1 Ch. 425.

3. Mortgagees, vendors, and other persons dealing with a company like to see the powers of the directors in black and white.

4. Commercial people like to have their powers clearly defined, and to be absolved from the duty of constantly consulting their legal advisers.

To carry agreement
into effect.

(1.) To take such steps as they think fit to carry into effect the said agreement of the — day of —.

If clause 3, supra, is inserted, this should be omitted.

To pay preliminary expenses.

(2.) To pay the costs, charges, and expenses preliminary and incidental to the promotion, formation, establishment, and registration of the company.

Such a power, though it is an authority to the directors to pay the costs, &c., will not give a promoter a right of action in respect of preliminary expenses against the company (Melhado v. Porto Alegre Rail. Co., L. R. 9 C. P. 503; Re Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co., 25 Ch. D. 103), at any rate, if he is not a party to the articles. Eley v. Positive, & Co. Soc., 1 Ex. D. 88. A promoter can only recover from the company what he has paid in preliminary expenses where he proves a contract by the company to pay (English and Colonial Produce Co., (1906) 2 Ch. 435); not even the registration fees. National Motor Mail Coach Co., (1908) 2 Ch. 515. See also Croskey v. Bank of Wales, 4 Giff. 318, cited supra, and Englefield Colliery Co., 8 C. Div. 388, where directors were held liable for moneys paid without vouchers or inquiry. See also Marzetti's case, 28 W. R. 541. The clause does not, of course, give power to pay that which it would be ultra vires the company to pay.

To acquire property.

(3.) To purchase or otherwise acquire for the company any property, rights, or privileges, which the company is authorized to acquire, at such price, and generally on such terms and conditions, as they think fit. Form 251.

- (4.) At their discretion, to pay for any ppty, rights, or privileges required by, or services rendered to, the coy, either wholly or partially in cash or in shares, bonds, debentures, or other securities of the coy, and any such shares may be issued either as fully pd up or with such amount credited as pd up thereon as may be agreed upon; and any such bonds, debentures, or other securities may be either specifically charged upon all or any part of the ppty of the coy and its uncalled capital, or not so charged.

To pay for property in debentures, &c.

Debentures issued by a company under a general power of borrowing in part discharge of existing liabilities are valid. Inns of Court Hotel Co., 6 Eq. 82. See also Howard v. Patent Ivory Co., 38 C. D. 156.

If paid-up shares are issued under the above power, a contract in relation thereto will have to be filed under sect. 88 of the Act of 1908. See further, supra, pp. 64 et seq.

- (5.) To secure the fulfilment of any contracts or engagements entered into by the coy, by mortgage or charge of all or any of the ppty of the coy and its uncalled capital for the time being, or in such other manner as they may think fit.

To secure contracts by mortgage.

- (6.) To appoint, and at their discretion remove or suspend, such managers, secretaries, officers, clerks, agents, and servants for permanent, temporary, or special services, as they may from time to time think fit, and to determine their powers and duties, and fix their salaries or emoluments, and to require security in such instances and to such amount as they think fit.

To appoint officers, &c.

- (7.) To accept from any member such terms and conditions as shall be agreed, a surrender of his shares or stock or any part thereof.

To accept surrender of shares.

A power to accept surrenders is valid, at any rate to some extent; but, having regard to the decision in Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409, it is a power which can rarely be exercised without the sanction of the Court to the reduction of capital thereby effected.

Forfeiture of shares is recognized by sect. 26 (2) (g) of the Act of 1908, and by clauses 24—30 of Table A. (Bellerby v. Rowland, &c. Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 14 (C. A.)), but subject to this the law seems to be as follows:—

Firstly, as to paid-up shares.—A gratuitous surrender to the company may be valid (Balgoolie Distillery Co., L. R. 17 Ir. Eq. 263), if the circumstances are very special, e.g., where the surrender is part of a compromise. Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409; Bellerby v. Rowland, supra. A company cannot make any payment or give any valuable consideration for the surrender, for, as Lord Macnaghten said in Trevor v. Whitworth, supra, "A surrender of shares in consideration of a payment in money or money's worth by the company is Form 251. a purchase by it of its own shares and is ultra vires—that is to say, unless confirmed by the Court as a reduction of capital.

Secondly, as to shares on which there is a liability.—It may be that where a company is in a position to forfeit such shares, a bona fide arrangement for a surrender as a short cut to the same end, and without payment or consideration, is valid. See what was said in Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409; but it is rarely expedient to accept such a surrender. It is far better to proceed to forfeit the shares in due course, and thus avoid any question as to whether there has been an ultra vires reduction of the capital; for in accepting a surrender the directors incur a special risk. In the case of forfeiture the calls in arrear remain a recoverable debt, whereas in the case of surrender this is prima facie not the case. And, as a consequence, such a surrender of shares, partly paid, in consideration of a release from further liability is equivalent to a purchase by the company of its own shares, and is ultra vires and void Bellerby v. Rowland, &c. Co. In that case there was a surrender by the directors of partly paid shares, not as a short cut to forfeiture, but in order to reduce the paid-up capital and thus rectify the balance-sheet. The transaction was a bona fide one and greatly to the benefit of the company, yet Kekewich, J., and the Court of Appeal both held that it was ultra vires as a purchase by the company of its shares; and the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of Kekewich, J., in an action by the surrenderor, ordered his name to be restored to the register in respect of the shares.

And a fortiori nothing can be paid by the company for a surrender of partly paid shares. See what Lord Macnaghten said, supra.

A surrender of shares presents also this logical dilemma: If it is not intended to re-issue the shares, there is a reduction of capital; and if it is intended to re-issue them, the transaction involves a trafficking by the company in its own shares. See Hope v. International Financial Society, 4 C. D. 327.

In Eichbaum v. City of Chicago Co., (1891) 3 Ch. 459, Stirling, J., it is true, held that a surrender in exchange for other shares was valid. In coming to this decision he did not act on his own judgment, but on what he took to be the decision in Teasdale's case, 9 Ch. 54; but the decision in that case was only that Teasdale, having more than six years before the winding-up surrendered his shares in exchange for others, was not to be put on the list of contributories in respect of the surrendered shares. There was no decision that the shares given by the company in exchange were validly credited as paid up. No doubt there are in the judgments dicta which go far beyond the point decided, but they are associated with other dicta which have since been displaced by the decisions in Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409, and other cases. And in Bellerby v. Rowland, Stirling, L. J., with characteristic candour, admitted that he ought not to have followed Teasdale's case.

The following are some of the objections to surrenders in exchange:

According to the law as now settled, shares cannot be issued as paid up unless they are paid up in cash or money's worth. They have to be paid up somehow. But if shares credited as fully paid up are to be issued in exchange for paid up shares, the amount of the shares so issued is not thereby paid up either in cash or in kind, for the company gets nothing. The share (say 10*l.*) is one which the company could issue for cash, and instead of doing this it issues it credited as paid up without any equivalent addition to its capital assets. The 10*l.* already paid on the surrendered shares already belongs to the company absolutely; how, then, can the shareholder effectively pay up the share which is to be issued to him by agreeing that the company shall keep 10*l.* of its own money in payment and satisfaction of the 10*l.* which he is by the Acts bound to pay up in cash or in kind?

Again, the share to be issued in exchange is part of the capital of the company, and how can the company properly give any part of its capital as the consideration for the surrender to it of shares in its own capital? Surely this is a purchase of the company's own shares. See observations of Lord Macnaghten in Trevor v. Whitworth, supra, and per Lindley, L. J., Denver Hotel, (1893) 1 Ch. 504; British, & Co. v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399.

Again, it may be said that to issue shares in exchange for other shares is in effect to traffic in the company's own shares, especially where it is part of a scheme, as in Hope v. International Co., 4 C. D. 327. It is, ex hypothesi, not a single transaction, but a whole series of like transactions; and where is the company's power to traffic in its own shares? Does not this dilemma presented in that case arise? That is to say, either it is intended not to re-issue the surrendered shares, in which case there is a reduction of capital, or it is intended to issue them, in which case the scheme involves trafficking in the company's own shares. See the observations on that case in Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 425.

It is well known that Rigby, L. J., when at the Bar, advised, on the above grounds, that a proposed scheme of exchange would be ultra vires, and that the decision of Stirling, J., in Eichbaum v. City of Chicago Co., supra, could not be relied on, as it was based on a misapprehension of the point actually decided in Fensholt's case, supra, a view which was afterwards adopted by Stirling, L. J., himself. See supra.

Evidently, therefore, an exchange of shares involves very great risks and is most dangerous, and allottees of such shares under such an exchange, even though apparently protected by a filed contract (where the transaction was before 1901), may be held liable to pay up their shares in cash.

- 8.) To appoint any person or persons (whether incorporated or not) to accept and hold in trust for the coy any ppty belonging to the coy, or in which it is interested, or for any other purposes, and to execute and do all such deeds and things as may be requisite in relation to any such trust, and to provide for the remuneration of such trustee or trustees. To appoint trustees.
- (9.) To institute, conduct, defend, compound, or abandon any legal proceedings by or against the coy, or its officers, or otherwise concerning the affairs of the coy, and also to compound and allow time for payment or satisfaction of any debts due, and of any claims or demands by or against the coy. To bring and defend actions, &c.

Every company has an implied power to compromise disputes (Bath's case, 3 C. Div. 334; Dixon v. Evans, L. R. 5 H. L. 619), and directors may be able to compromise a claim by or against the company, even where some of the directors are interested. General Exchange Bank, 16 W. R. 1096. Such a clause does not authorize directors to pay costs of petition to wind up the company presented by themselves. Smith v. Duke of Manchester, 24 C. D. 611; 32 W. R. 83.

There is no need to say anything about proving in bankruptcy, for by sect. 148 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, it is provided that "For all or any of the purposes of this Act a corporation may act by any of its officers authorized in that behalf under the seal of the corporation." A clerk authorized under seal is an officer. Re Tomkins & Co., (1901) 1 Q. B. 476.

As to a bankruptcy petition by a company, see Re Calthrop, L. R. 3 Ch. 252; Re Whitley, 65 L. T. 351; Re Basset, 2 Manson, 171; and Peak Hill Goldfields, 1 K. B. 430.

Form 251.

The liquidator of a company may serve a bankruptcy notice, but the notice must be in the name of and on behalf of the company. Re Winterbottom, 18 Q. B. D. 446.

To refer to arbitration.

(10.) To refer any claims or demands by or against the coy to arbitration, and observe and perform the awards.

As to arbitration, see sect. 119 of the Act.

To give receipts.

(11.) To make and give receipts, releases, and other discharges for money payable to the coy, and for the claims and demands of the coy.

And such receipts may be effectual, even though the acting directors are not directors de jure. Mahoney v. East Holyford Mining Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 869.

To authorize acceptance, &c.

(12.) To determine who shall be entitled to sign on the coy's behalf bills, notes, receipts, acceptances, indorsements, cheques, releases, contracts, and documents.

It must be borne in mind that directors and other persons who on behalf of a company sign any bill of exchange, note, indorsement, cheque, &c., may be subject to penalties and personally liable on the contract unless the name of the company is correctly set forth. See sect. 63 of the Act of 1908. Atkin v. Wardle, 61 L. T. 23; and Dermatine Co. v. Ashworth, 21 T. L. R. 510. The omission of the word "limited" makes the name incorrect (Penrose v. Martyr, F. B. & E. 499), and so does the omission of the words "and reduced" where, under sect. 48 of the Act, they are part of the name. But see as to "Ltd." F. Stacey & Co., 28 T. L. R. 209, supra, p. 454.

To appoint attorneys.

(13.) From time to time to provide for the management of the affairs of the coy abroad in such manner as they think fit, and in particular to appoint any persons to be the attorneys or agents of the coy with such powers (including power to sub-delegate) and upon such terms as may be thought fit.

The above should be inserted where the company is likely to carry on business abroad, unless clause 114a, infra, is inserted. As to sub-delegation, see supra, clause 109.

As to the power to keep a colonial register, see sect. 34 of the Act of 1908.

To invest moneys.

(14.) To invest and deal with any of the moneys of the coy not immediately required for the purposes thereof, upon such securities (not being shares in this coy) and in such manner as they may think fit, and from time to time to vary or realize such investments.

A power to invest in securities does not warrant an application for a number of shares in a proposed company with a view to promoting it. It is not a bonâ fide investment. Joint-Stock Discount Co. v. Brown, 3 Eq. 139; 8 Eq. 381.

Form 251.

- (15.) To execute in the name and on behalf of the coy, in favour of any director or other person who may incur or be about to incur any personal liability for the benefit of the coy, such mortgages of the coy's property (present and future) as they think fit, and any such mortgage may contain a power of sale and such other powers, covenants, and provisions as shall be agreed on.]

To give security by way of indemnity.

Such a provision is very desirable, for in its absence difficult questions arise as to the powers of the directors in this behalf. See Southampton Co. v. Pincock, 12 W. R. 30.

A security may be given, see Pyle Works (No. 2), (1901) 1 Ch. 173. The Stock Exchange objects to this clause.

- (16.) To give to any person employed by the coy a commission on the profits of any particular business or transaction, or a share in the general profits of the coy, and such commission, or share of profits, shall be treated as part of the working expenses of the coy.

To give percentages.

An interest in profits is often found to render the services of an agent more beneficial to his employer. Apart from a special power, a person standing in a fiduciary relation to the company could not be given such an interest by the board. See notes to clause 93.

It is sometimes desired to take express power to pay private commissions to the agents of other concerns which have dealings with the company, and unfortunately the success of some companies largely depends on such payments. But such commissions are bribes in the eye of the law and a misapplication of the funds of the company, and it is apprehended that an effective power to pay them cannot be taken expressly or impliedly. A company which by its agents thus bribes or agrees to bribe the agent of another party is responsible in damages to that party. See supra, p. 733; and Harcnden & Sons v. Millhoff (1900), 16 T. L. R. 506. The position of directors who authorize such payments is also hazardous. See the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906. There is further the difficulty that an auditor may not unreasonably refuse to certify the accounts without vouchers, and further that he may refuse to certify unless the company's liability for damages is disclosed in the balance-sheet or otherwise.

In some cases it has been sought to meet these difficulties by giving to the manager or managing director an extra salary and a commission on profits, so that if he chooses to allow commission he will pay out of his own pocket; but it is doubtful whether a company can by such means escape responsibility, or whether the auditors, if they are cognizant of what is going on, can consistently with their duty ignore the company's liability.

Occasionally a clause as follows has been inserted in articles: "The auditors shall be at liberty to accept the certificate in writing of the managing director that a gratuitous payment for the benefit of the company has been made as sufficient evidence that the payment referred to in such certificate has in fact been duly made for the benefit of the company, and shall not require production of any further voucher for such payment." But such a clause, though it may meet the difficulty as to vouchers, does not meet the more formidable difficulty of illegality, which no sanction of the shareholders through the articles can condone.

To establish reserve fund.

- (17.) Before recommending any dividend, to set aside, out of the profits of the coy, such sums as they think proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies, or for equalising dividends, or for special dividends, or for repairing, improving, and maintaining any of the ppty of the coy, and for such other purposes as the directors shall in their absolute discretion think conducive to the interests of the coy; and to invest the several sums so set aside upon such investments (other than shares of the coy) as they may think fit, and from time to time to deal with and vary such investments, and dispose of all or any part thof for the benefit of the coy, and to divide the reserve fund into such special funds as they think fit [with full power to employ the assets constituting the reserve fund in the business of the coy, and that without being bound to keep the same separate from the other assets].

"Dividend" as here first used includes fixed cumulative dividends on preference shares. Bond v. Barrow Hematite Steel Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353, 352.

There is nothing to compel a company to divide the whole of its profits, though the regulations might be so framed. Stringer's case, 4 Ch. 494; Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83; Bond v. Barrow Hematite Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353.

Prima facie a company may form a reserve fund and the reserve fund may, subject to the control of a general meeting, be invested in such securities as the directors may select. Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83.

Where the articles do not provide for the retention of any part of the profits by way of reserve, the articles can no doubt be altered so as to give the power. Binney v. Ince Hall Co., 35 L. J. Ch. 363.

Where the articles appropriate the reserve fund to specific purposes, they can be altered. Walker v. London Tramways Co., 12 C. D. 705. And they must be altered before the reserve fund is applied in a way inconsistent with them. Eastern and Australian Steamship Co., Limited and Reduced, 68 L. T. 321.

The words in brackets are desirable, seeing that reserve funds are very commonly so employed.

A reserve fund accumulated out of profits preserves its character of undivided profits unless and until something is done effectually to convert it into capital. Bouch v. Sproule, 12 App. Cas. 385; Sugden v. Alsbury, W. N. (1890) 112; 45 C. D. 237; Re Armitage, (1893) 3 Ch. 337; Decido Pier Co., (1891) 2 Ch. 354. And can be applied, where the memorandum and articles authorize such a proceeding, in paying off preference or other shareholders, but the sanction of the Court is required. See United States Debenture Corp., Times, Aug. 2, 1905.

As to issuing paid-up shares in respect of the reserve, see Eastern and Aus. Co., ubi supra, and infra, Form 474.

As to the rights of classes of shareholders on the distribution of a reserve fund, see Bridgeport Navigation Co., before North, J., (1891) 1 Ch. 155; (1891) 2 Ch. 317; 84 L. T. 576, C. A.; Odeum Waterworks Co., (1901) 2 Ch. 190, n.; Partick, &c. Gas Co. v. Taylor, 18 C. of S. Cas. 1017, Sc.; Crickton's Oil Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 86; Bond v. Burrow Hamatite Steel Co., supra; W. J. Hall & Co., (1909) 1 Ch. 521; Re Microscope and Biograph Syndicate, (1899) 1 Ch. 896.

A company can, without carrying to reserve, carry forward any profit. Barnard v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 94.

If a company reducing its capital has a reserve fund, there is no obligation to apply in the first instance the whole of such reserve fund to replace the capital account, and if the reserve has been used in the business and not separately invested, and a loss occurs, the company is at liberty to apportion the loss as between the reserve and the paid-up capital, and treat a proportionate part of the loss as on reserve account. Hoare & Co., (1901) 2 Ch. 208.

As to providing for a secret reserve, see dicta in Newton v. Birmingham Small Arms Co., (1906) 2 Ch. 378. These dicta are not reconcilable with the audit provisions of the Act of 1908.

See further dicta in Young v. Brownlee & Co., (1911) S. C. 677 (Ct. of Sess.), where directors undervalued assets in balance sheet.

- (18.) From time to time to make, vary, and repeal bye-laws for the regulation of the business of the coy, its officers and servants. May make bye-laws.

Persons dealing with a company are deemed to have notice of the memorandum and articles of association (supra, p. 77), but not of bye-laws made by the directors. Royal Bank of India's case, 4 Ch. 252.

As to determining the reasonableness of bye-laws, see Krupp v. Johnson, (1898) 2 Q. B. 91.

(Until recently it was customary to add to the above clause the words "or the members of the company or any section thereof," but of late the registrar, acting, it is said, on the instructions of the Board of Trade, has objected to these words, and, to the infinite annoyance of the commercial world, who commonly insert the words, has required them to be struck out of articles tendered for registration, or else to be qualified by the addition of the words "Provided that no bye-law or regulation shall be made under this power which would amount to such an addition to or alteration of these articles as could only legally be made by special resolution passed and confirmed in accordance with sects. 13 and 69 of the Companies Act, 1908.")

The proviso is no doubt well meant—to prevent alteration of the articles under cover of a bye-law without a special resolution, but it ignores the fact that the articles are subject to the Act, and the Act indicates as clearly as can be (in sect. 13) that the articles can only be added to or altered by special resolution, and the directors and members are presumed to have read and understood the Act, so that there is no need to warn them; again, the clause does not purport to give power to make articles, but merely bye-laws which must obviously be regarded as rules of a subordinate character; further, if such a proviso as this is required here, why did not the Legislature add some such proviso to the latter part of clause 71 of Table A., which enables the company in general meeting to make regulations as to the exercise of the directors' powers? The absurdity of this official practice is emphasized by the fact that in the past many thousands of companies have been registered with the now prohibited words in their articles without any such proviso, and that no known mischief has resulted, and Form 251. that the Board of Trade have repeatedly passed articles under sect. 23 of the Companies Act, 1867 (now replaced by sect. 20 of the Companies Act, 1908), containing power to make bye-laws without any such proviso, e.g., the London Chamber of Commerce and most of the other chambers of commerce and law societies, and that articles containing the prohibited words without the proviso have been repeatedly passed by eminent judges, past and present, whilst at the Bar and on the Bench. However, in most cases, the words in question are not of any great importance; where they are considered important they can, after registration of the company, be inserted by special resolution without the proviso. There are, however, many cases in which it is an essential part of the company's scheme that there shall be power to make bye-laws, e.g., in a mutual insurance society, or in a club company, and in such cases, so long as the present official view is persisted in, there must be inserted words on the lines of the proviso.

May make contracts, &c.

(19.) To enter into all such negotiations and contracts, and rescind and vary all such contracts, and execute and do all such acts, deeds, and things in the name and on behalf of the company as they may consider expedient for or in relation to any of the matters aforesaid, or otherwise for the purposes of the company.

There can be little doubt that such a clause as above is a sufficient authority to the directors to vary contracts expressly adopted by the articles. See and consider Sahlgreen and Carrall's case, 3 Ch. 323, 329; and Lord Bell's case, 3 D. J. & S. 41; Dixon v. Evans, L. R. 5 H. L. 696; and pp. 333-334 as to contracts by companies.

LOCAL MANAGEMENT.

Where the company is going to carry on business abroad, the following clauses should be inserted; they have been found extremely useful.

The following provisions shall have effect:

Local management. 114a.—(1) The directors may from time to time provide for the management of the affairs of the company abroad [or in any special locality in the United Kingdom] in such manner as they shall think fit, and the provisions contained in the six next following paragraphs shall be without prejudice to the general powers conferred by this paragraph.

Local board. (2) The directors from time to time, and at any time, may establish any local boards or agencies for managing any of the affairs of the company abroad [or in any specified locality in the United Kingdom], and may appoint any persons to be members of such local board, or any managers or agents, and may fix their remuneration.

Delegation. (3) The directors from time to time, and at any time, may delegate to any person so appointed any of the powers, authorities, and discretions for the time being vested in the directors, and may authorize the members for the time being of any such local board, or any of them to fill up any vacancies therein, and to act notwithstanding vacancies and any such appointment or delegation may be made on such terms and subject to such conditions as the directors may think fit, and the directors may at any time remove any person so appointed, and may annul or vary any such delegation. Form 251.

(4) The directors may at any time, and from time to time, by power of attorney under the seal, appoint any persons to be the attorneys of the coy for such purposes and with such powers, authorities and discretions (not exceeding those vested in or exercisable by the directors under these presents), and for such period and subject to such conditions as the directors may from time to time think fit; and any such appointment may (if the directors think fit) be made in favour of the members or any of the members of any local board established as afd, or in favour of any coy, or of the members, directors, nominees, or managers of any coy or firm, or otherwise in favour of any fluctuating body of persons, whether nominated directly or indirectly by the directors; and any such power of attorney may contain such provisions for the protection or convenience of persons dealing with such attorneys as the directors think fit. Powers of attorney.

In carrying on business abroad it is generally found that a wide power of attorney under the company's common seal is requisite, and hence the importance of providing accordingly. The same instrument can authorize the attorneys to exercise the powers of the Acts below mentioned, and to exercise any other powers which it may seem desirable to delegate to them. See sect. 78 of the Act of 1908, and sect. 8 of the Conv. Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39).

See also Chap. XV., infra.

(5) Any such delegates or attorneys as afd may be authorized by the directors to sub-delegate all or any of the powers, authorities, and discretions for the time being vested in them. Sub-delegation.

(6) The coy may exercise the powers conferred by sect. 79 of the Cos Act, 1908, and such powers shall accordingly be vested in the directors. And the coy may cause to be kept in any colony in which it transacts business a branch register of members resident in such colony, and the word "colony" in this clause shall have the meaning assigned thereto by the Cos Act, 1908, s. 34 (3); and the directors may from time to time make such provisions as they may think fit respecting the keeping of any such branch register. Seals abroad and branch registers.

The following is a more elaborate form than (6):

1. The company may cause to be kept in Queensland, or in any other colony in Australasia in which it transacts business, a branch register or registers of members resident in Queensland, or in such other colony as the case may be. And the directors may from time to time appoint an authority in Queensland, or in any other colony in which a branch register is kept, to approve of or reject transfers, and to direct the registration of approved transfers in the branch register of such colony; and every such authority may, in respect of transfers or other entries proposed to be registered in the branch register for which such authority is appointed, exercise all the powers of the directors in the same manner and to the same extent and effect as if the directors themselves were actually present in the colony and exercised the same.

2. Subject to the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 34, and to the foregoing provisions, the directors may from time to time make such provisions as they may think fit respecting the keeping of such branch register or registers.

As to establishing a colonial register, see sect. 34 of the Act of 1908.

Local laws.

(7) The directors may comply with the requirements of any local law which in their opinion it shall in the interests of the company be necessary or expedient to comply with.

Sometimes the regulations contain special provisions pointing to some particular colonial Act, e.g.: "The company shall duly comply with the requirements of the New Zealand Act, known as the Mining Act Amendment Act, 1897, and the directors may do all such acts and things and execute all such powers of attorney and instruments as they may deem necessary or proper in order to carry into effect, provide, perform, and observe the provisions of the Mining Act, 1891, the Mining Act Amendment Act, 1897, the said Act of 1895, and any other Acts of the New Zealand Legislature. A certificate issued in respect of shares in any register kept pursuant to either of the two preceding clauses shall be under the official seal of the company, and any transfer of shares in either of the said registers may be deposited at the office where such registers are kept in New Zealand, and in applying clauses 14 and 15, and 32 to 38 inclusive, to shares on either of the said local registers, such clauses shall be read as if they were modified as follows, that is to say

"(a) In clause 11 the words 'New Zealand' shall be deemed to be inserted before the word 'seal.'

"(b) In clause 34 the words 'New Zealand' shall be deemed to be inserted before the word 'office.'

"(c) Throughout the clauses the words 'New Zealand authority' shall be deemed to be substituted for the word 'directors.'"

First solicitor.SOLICITORS.

This requires a word of caution. The article does not constitute a contract between the company and the solicitor. In Eley v. Positive Ass. Soc., 1 Ex. Div. 20; S. C., on appeal, 88, the articles of a company provided that "Mr. A. B., of ---, shall be the solicitor of the company, and shall transact all the legal business of the company, including parliamentary business, for the usual and accustomed fees and charges, and shall not be removed from his office unless for misconduct." Mr. A. B. was employed by the company after its incorporation, but there was no evidence of any agreement to employ him on the terms mentioned in the articles. He was not a subscriber to the articles, but he was a member of the company. It was held that the articles did not constitute a contract between the company and Mr. A. B., and that he could not sue the company for refusal to employ him. Baring-Gould v. Shipington Pick and Shore Co., (1899) 2 Ch. 80; Re Rotherham Alum Co., 25 Ch. D. 103;

Re Dale and Plant, 61 L. T. 207; National Motor Mail Coach Co., (1908) 2 Ch. 515 (C. A.), overruling English and Colonial Produce Co., (1906) 2 Ch. 433; and see supra, p. 633.

Where a solicitor is to be a director, say: "Messrs. A. and B. shall be the solicitors of the company, and shall be entitled to remuneration notwithstanding that a member of the firm is a director of the company."

As to an article giving a solicitor an annual retaining fee, see Rhodesian Properties, W. N. (1901), June 22.

SECRETARY.

114c. The first secretary of the coy shall be Mr. A. B. of &c., clerk First secretary
or whatever he may be].

Having regard to the fact that the secretary of the company is frequently mentioned in the Companies Act, 1908, it seems desirable to name him in the articles. See sect. 17, sub-sect. 2 (especially), also sect. 83, sect. 65, sub-sect. 3 (d), sect. 99 of the Companies Act, 1908. In the case of a club certain statutory requirements are made on the secretary. See Licensing Act, 1902, ss. 24 et seq.

As to the secretary of a company not being entitled to a lien, see Barnton Hotel Co. v. Cook (1899), 36 Sc. L. R. 938.

A secretary as such has no power to convene a general meeting (State of Wyoming Syndicate, (1901) 2 Ch. 431), though the directors may ratify the notice; Hooper v. Kerr, Stuart & Co., 83 L. T. 729, or to strike a name off the register of members (Wheatcroft's case, 29 L. T. 326), or to pass and register a transfer not approved by the directors. Chida Mines, Ltd. v. Anderson, 22 T. L. R. 27.

Representations by a secretary as such are not binding on the company. Barnett v. South London Tramways Co., 18 Q. B. D. 815; George Whitechurch, Ltd., (1902) A. C. 117-124; Chida Mines, Ltd. v. Anderson, 22 T. L. R. 27; and see p. 676. Even where a secretary is held out as a person to answer certain inquiries, the company incurs no liability for untrue answers if made by the secretary for his own private ends. British Mutual Bank v. Charnwood Forest Railway, 18 Q. B. D. 714; and see Ruben v. Great Fingall Consolidated, (1906) A. C. 439.

As to cheques to a company indorsed by the secretary and, without authority, paid into his private account, see Hannan's Lake View Central v. Armstrong, 16 T. L. R. 236.

As to cheques with forged signatures of directors, see Kepitiqalla Rubber Estates v. National Bank of India, 25 T. L. R. 402.

Where a man acts as secretary of two companies, it is not true as a general proposition that a fact which comes to his knowledge as secretary of one company is notice to him as secretary of the other company from the mere existence of the common relationship. In order to make it notice, it must be shown that it was his duty to the first company to communicate his knowledge to the second company. Fenwick, Stobart & Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 507.

A secretary is liable to heavy punishment for falsifying any books or documents of the company; see sect. 216 of the Act. He is also liable for misfeasance if he receives an improper commission. Barrow's case, 14 C. D. 433; McKay's case, 2 Ch. D. 1. But a secretary is in a very different position to a director, and is not to be fixed personally with liability for a misapplication of the company's funds though he may have known all about it. Joint-Stock Discount Co. v. Brown (1869), 8 Eq. 396.

Form 251. A secretary sued for negligence may set up the Statute of Limitations. Municipal Freehold Land Co. v. Pollington (1890), 63 L. T. 243. As to dismissal, see supra, p. 444.

Substitute. [114d. The directors may appoint a temporary substitute for the secretary, who shall, for the purposes of these presents, be deemed to be the secretary.]

THE SEAL.

Custody of seal. [115. The directors shall provide for the safe custody of the seal, and the seal shall never be used except by the authority of the directors, or a committee of the directors, previously given, and in the presence of two directors at the least, who shall sign every instrument to which the seal is affixed, and every such instrument shall be countersigned by the secretary or some other person appointed by the directors.]

A clause as above is sometimes inserted, and everyone dealing with the company is bound to take notice of it, but is not bound to ascertain that de facto directors have been duly appointed. County Life Assurance Co., 5 Ch. 288; Mahoney v. East Holyford Mining Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 859. Or that the seal has been affixed with the authority of a meeting duly constituted. County of Gloucester Bank v. Rudry, &c. Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 629; Davies v. Bolton & Co., (1894) 3 Ch. 678. And see Owen & Ashworth's Claim, (1901) 1 Ch. 115. But the rule does not apply where the seal has been fraudulently affixed and the signatures are forged. Ruben v. Great Fingall Consolidated, (1906) A. C. 430.

See further, supra, p. 79.

AUTHENTICATION OF DEEDS AND DOCUMENTS.

Deeds. 115a. The following provisions shall have effect:—

1. All deeds executed on behalf of the coy may be in such form, and contain such powers, provisoes, conditions, covenants, clauses, and agreemts as the directors shall think fit, and, in addition to being sealed with the seal of the coy, shall be signed by two directors, and countersigned by the secretary or such other officer as the directors from time to time appoint.

Bills. 2. All bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other negotiable instruments shall be accepted, made, drawn, or indorsed for and on behalf of the coy by two directors, and countersigned by the secretary or such other officer as afsd, and all cheques or orders for payment shall be signed by two directors, and countersigned by the secretary or such other officer as afsd.

Cheques. 3. Cheques or other negotiable instruments paid to the coy's banker for collection, and requiring the indorsement of the coy, may be indorsed on its behalf by the secretary or such other officer as afsd.

All moneys belonging to the coy shall be pd to such bankers as the directors shall from time to time in writing or by resolution of the directors appoint; and all receipts for money pd to the coy shall be signed by the secretary or such other officer as afd; and such receipt shall be an effectual discharge for the money therein stated to be received.

Form 251.

Receipts.

The above clauses are occasionally inserted, but there is no need for them. See note to the following clause.

115b. Any instrument bearing the common seal of the coy and issued for valuable consen shall be binding on the coy, notwithstanding any irregularity touching the authority of the directors to issue the same.

What securities under seal to be deemed valid.

The above clause is occasionally inserted. Patent File Co., 6 Ch. 85; Davies v. R. Bolton & Co., (1894) 3 Ch. 678. But it would seem to be merely the expression of the rule settled in a series of cases, of which Royal British Bank v. Turquand, 6 E. & B. 248, is a leading one. The rule is, that where a company is regulated by an Act of Parliament, general or special, or by deed of settlement, or memorandum and articles of association, registered in some public office, persons dealing with the directors are bound to read the Act and registered public documents of the company (supra, p. 79), and to see that the proposed dealing is not inconsistent therewith, but that is all: they need not inquire into the regularity of the internal proceedings. They may assume that all matters of "indoor management" have been done regularly. Thus, where the articles give power to borrow with the sanction of an ordinary resolution of a general meeting, a lender need not inquire whether the resolution has been passed. Royal British Bank v. Turquand, ubi supra; Agor v. Athenaeum Society, 3 C. B. N. S. 725. And see Ex parte Eagle Co., 4 K. & J. 549, as to execution of policies. In Land Credit of Ireland, 4 Ch. 460, it was held that as the company had power to accept bills, certain acceptances could not be impeached on the ground that they were irregularly issued. So, also, it has been held that the public is entitled to assume that a person acting de facto as the company's agent or director has been duly appointed. Smith v. Hull Glass Co., 11 C. B. 897; County Life, 5 Ch. 288; Mahoney v. East Holyford Co., 1. R. 7 H. L. 869. It may also assume that an instrument bearing the seal of the company was sealed pursuant to a resolution of a board meeting. County of Gloucester Bank v. Rudry, (1895) 1 Ch. 629; but see as to the limits of this rule, Ruben v. Great Fingall Consolidated, (1906) A. C. 430; overruling Slaw v. Port Philip, &c. Co., 13 Q. B. D. 103; also supra, p. 81. A person cannot avail himself of the presumption if he knows of the irregularity. Howard v. Patent Ivory Co., 38 Ch. D. 156, and it would seem that a person is not entitled to assume that a special resolution has been passed, for he can find out whether it has been passed or not by reference to the register. Irvine v. Union Bank, 2 App. Cas. 379.

Occasionally express provisions as to the execution of documents are inserted; but as a general rule it is better not to insert such provisions.

returns.

115c. The coy shall make the requisite annual returns in accordance with sect. 26 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

It may be well to insert the above clause as a reminder, for the penalties for default are onerous.

Sect. 26 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, is as follows:—

26.—(1) Every company having a share capital shall once at least in every year make a list of all persons who, on the fourteenth day after the first or only ordinary general meeting in the year, are members of the company, and of all persons who have ceased to be members since the date of the last return, or (in the case of the first return) of the incorporation of the company.

(2) The list must state the names, addresses, and occupations of all the past and present members therein mentioned, and the number of shares held by each of the existing members at the date of the return, specifying shares transferred since the date of the last return, or (in the case of the first return) of the incorporation of the company by persons who are still members and have ceased to be members respectively, and the dates of registration of the transfers, and must contain a summary distinguishing between shares issued for cash and shares issued as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and specifying the following particulars:—

- (a) The amount of the share capital of the company, and the number of the shares into which it is divided;
- (b) The number of shares taken from the commencement of the company up to the date of the return;
- (c) The amount called up on each share;
- (d) The total amount of calls received;
- (e) The total amount of calls unpaid;
- (f) The total amount of the sums (if any) paid by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures, or allowed by way of discount in respect of any debentures, since the date of the last return;
- (g) The total number of shares forfeited;
- (h) The total amount of share or stock for which share warrants are outstanding at the date of the return;
- (i) The total amount of share warrants issued and surrendered respectively since the date of the last return;
- (k) The number of shares or amount of stock comprised in each share warrant;
- (l) The names and addresses of the persons who at the date of the return are the directors of the company, or occupy the position of directors, by whatever name called; and
- (m) The total amount of debt due from the company in respect of all mortgages and charges which are required (or, in the case of a company registered in Scotland, which, if the company had been registered in England, would be required) to be registered with the registrar of companies under this Act, or which would have been required so to be registered if created after the first day of July nineteen hundred and eight.

(3) The summary must also (except where the company is a private company) include a statement, made up to such date as may be specified in the statement, in the form of a balance-sheet, audited by the company's auditors, and containing a summary of its share capital, its liabilities, and its assets, giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of those liabilities and assets, and how the values of the fixed assets have been arrived at, but the balance-sheet need not include a statement of profit and loss.

Form 251.

(4) The above list and summary must be contained in a separate part of the register of members, and must be completed within seven days after the fourteenth day aforesaid, and the company must forthwith forward to the registrar of companies a copy signed by the manager or by the secretary of the company.

(5) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the default continues, and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

"Default" in forwarding the required return to the registrar under this section means a wilful continued neglect to do the act, and does not, it seems, apply to a case where the default cannot be remedied. Dorté v. South African Super-aeration, Limited, 20 T. L. R. 425.

The obligation to forward the list and summary is independent of whether the ordinary general meeting is held in the year or not. Hence the directors cannot set up in self-defence that a meeting had not been held. Park v. Lawton, 1911 1 K. B. 588.

Default renders the company and its directors and managers liable to the statutory penalties. See Gibson v. Barton, L. R. 10 Q. B. 329; Edmunds v. Foster, 45 L. J. M. C. 41; Reg. v. Newton, 48 L. J. M. C. 77; and Reg. v. Tyler, (1891) 2 Q. B. 588. The company's penalty is 5l. per day. Reg. v. Catholic, &c. Co., 48 L. T. 675. Proceedings to enforce the penalty are taken before a magistrate, who may inquire into the sufficiency and accuracy of the return. Briton Medical, 37 W. R. 52. To comply with sect. 26 the general meeting, referred to in sect. 64 of the Act of 1908, as to which see note to clause 57, must be held at latest on 17th December.

See form of return, supra, p. 622.

DIVIDENDS.

116. Subject as aforesaid, the profits of the company shall be divisible among the members [holding ordinary shares] in proportion to the capital paid up on the [ordinary] shares held by them respectively.

"Subject as aforesaid." These words refer to any clause defining the rights of the preference shareholders (if any) and to any clause as to increase of capital and as to reserve; but sometimes it is considered expedient to provide more clearly as to the appropriation of profits, e.g.

116a. Subject as aforesaid, the profits of the company which it shall from time to time be determined to divide in respect of any year or other period shall be applied first in paying the fixed cumulative preferential dividend on the capital paid up on the preference shares to the close of such year or other period, and, secondly, in paying a dividend for such year or other period at the rate of --- p.c.p.a. on the capital paid up on the ordinary shares, and, thirdly, the surplus shall be applied to the payment of a dividend on the deferred shares in proportion to the capital paid up thereon.]

Form 251.

Or,

[116b. Subject, &c., shall be applied first in paying a dividend for such year or other period at the rate of — p.c.p.a. on the capital pd up on the preference shares, and, secondly, in paying a dividend for such year or other period at the rate, &c. on the capital pd up on the ordinary shares, and, thirdly, as to 20 p.c. of the surplus in paying a further dividend for such year or other period on the preference shares, and as to the residue in paying a further dividend for such year on the ordinary shares asfd.]

Or,

[116c. Subject, &c., shall be applied in paying the cumulative dividend on the preference shares to the close of such year or other period; secondly, in paying a dividend for such year or other period at the rate of 10 p.c. on the capital pd up on the ordinary shares; and, thirdly, in paying further dividends to the members in proportion to the shares held by them resply of whatever class.]

up in advance.

116d. Where capital is pd up in advance of calls upon the footing that the same shall carry interest, such capital shall not, whilst carrying interest, confer a right to participate in profits.

Clause 72 of the Table A. of the Act of 1862 provided that dividends were to be paid to members in proportion to their shares, but clause 98 of Table A (1908) now provides that "all dividends shall be declared and paid according to the amounts paid on the shares, but if and so long as nothing is paid up on any of the shares in the company dividends may be declared and paid according to the amounts of the shares."

In the absence of such a provision as that above or in Table A. dividend must be paid in proportion to the nominal amount of the capital held by each shareholder, and not in proportion to the amount paid up. Oakbank Oil Co. v. Crum, 8 App. Cas. 65; Wilkinson v. Cummings, 11 Hare, 37; Bloch v. Cropper, 11 App. Cas. 525.

Accordingly, a 10l. share with 1l. paid up will take as much as a 10l. fully paid-up share. But many persons consider such a mode of division inequitable, and insist on a provision as above (clause 116). This clause again, however, does not appear altogether fair, for it must be borne in mind that the company trades to some extent on the credit of its uncalled capital, and why should the shareholder who supply that credit get no reward?—especially as, in the event of the company being wound up, they will, unless the articles otherwise provide, be liable to contribute to the losses in proportion to the nominal amount of the shares held by them. Maude's case, 6 Ch. 51; and see the judgments in Oakbank Oil Co. v. Crum, ubi supra.

Accordingly, it is occasionally provided that "the profits of the company in each year shall be applicable to the payment of dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital, and the surplus shall be divided among the members in proportion to their shares." This approximates to ideal justice. See supra.

Where there are different classes of shares in the original capital the clause will be modified accordingly. See Forms 261 to 268a (inclusive), infra Form 251.

117. The coy in general meeting may declare a dividend to be paid to the members according to their rights and interests in the profits, and may fix the time for payment. Declaration of dividends.

Very commonly it is provided that "the directors may, with the sanction of the company in general meeting," declare dividends, but the general practice is for the directors to recommend and the meeting to declare the dividend, and it therefore seems better to frame the clause as above. See Re Denham & Co., 25 Ch. D. 763.

The declaration of a dividend gives to each shareholder the right to sue the company for the amount. Dalton v. Midland Rail. Co., 13 C. B. 478; Lindley on Companies, 6th ed. p. 609; Severn Rail. Co., (1896) 1 Ch. 559; Bond v. Harrow Hematite Steel Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353, 362; but see as to the right of withdrawal, Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Schroeder, 85 L. T. 29. Till declared, a dividend is not a debt, and it is doubtful whether a right to sue for a dividend without declaration can be given. In the case last mentioned the right to preferential dividend was given in emphatic terms, but it was held that a clause as above was impliedly made applicable.

Where the articles provide for the application of the profits for the time being "available for the dividend," these words impliedly exclude profits carried to reserve. Fisher v. Black and White Publishing Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 174.

In ascertaining profits, it is not allowable to take a particular asset and to treat the profit arising from the realization thereof as profit of the company without regard to the general result of the company's operations, whether in the shape of profit or loss for the current financial year. Foster v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208. See also Lubbock v. British Bank of South America, (1892) 2 Ch. 198.

Under such a clause, read in conjunction with clauses 58, 63, North, J., held that a company could only declare a dividend at the ordinary general meeting. Nicholson v. Rhodesia Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 434. This decision can, if desired, be overridden by introducing the words "ordinary or extraordinary" after the word "meeting," but it is scarcely worth making this alteration, for there is nothing to prevent the directors from calling an extraordinary general meeting to consider and, if thought fit, to approve of the payment by the directors (under clause 121) of an interim dividend, and then the directors can declare such dividend. Directors, though they cannot delegate their special powers to the members, may properly, if they think fit, consult a general meeting as to the exercise of their powers. Harrison v. Price's Patent Co., 45 L. J. Ch. 437.

A dividend "free of income tax" may be declared on ordinary shares where the profits to be applied in paying the same have already paid tax, for the company is not bound in such case to deduct the tax (supra, p. 101); but a dividend "free of income tax" on preference shares is objectionable as giving the holders more than their rights (Att.-Gen. v. Ashton Gas Co., (1901) 2 Ch. 621), and a provision in the articles that their dividend shall be so paid is void. Sect. 103, Income Tax Act, 1842.

As to payment of interest out of capital during construction, see Companies Act, 1908, s. 91, and p. 871.

[118. No larger dividend shall be declared than is recommended by the directors (but the coy in general meeting may declare a smaller dividend).] Restriction on amount of dividend.

Form 251.

The above clause is commonly used, sometimes with, sometimes without, the words in brackets. Profits may be carried forward. Prima facie there is no obligation to divide. Bond v. Barrow Hematite, (1902) 1 Ch. 352; Burland v. Earle, (1902) A. C. 83.

Dividend out of profit only, and not carry interest.

Points to be observed in declaring dividends:

Profits, not capital, available;

ultra vires if payment out of capital;

even if authorized by memorandum or articles:

or by general meeting.

Criminal liability of directors as to payment out of capital.

Modern decided cases militating against above rule.

119. No dividend shall be payable except out of the profits of the coy, and no dividend shall carry interest as against the coy.

In declaring dividends certain important points have to be borne in mind, viz.:—

1. Dividends are only to be paid out of profits, not out of capital. Oxford Benefit Building Society, 35 C. D. 592; National Funds Assurance Co., 10 C. D. 126; Flitcroft's case, 21 C. D. 519; Alexandra Palace Co., 21 C. D. 149; Leeds Estate v. Shepherd, 36 C. D. 807; Sharpe, (1892) 1 Ch. 154; Foster v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208; Fisher v. Black and White Publishing Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 174. As to decisions in derogation of this rule, see infra, p. 895.
2. Payment out of capital is ultra vires, for it amounts to a reduction of the paid-up capital, and no such reduction is allowable, unless sanctioned by the Court under sects. 46—56 of the Companies Act, 1908, or on unproductive capital under sect. 90 of the Act.
3. Even if such payment is expressly authorized by the memorandum of association, or by the articles of association, or by special resolution, it is equally ultra vires, for these documents cannot repeal the Act. Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409.
4. Much less can the sanction of a general meeting justify it. Flitcroft's case, 21 C. D. 519.
5. Directors who are parties to the payment of a fictitious dividend, in order to raise the price of the company's shares, may be criminally liable for a conspiracy. See per Lord Campbell, L. C., Burnes v. Pennell (1849), 2 H. L. C. 525; and Regina v. Esdaile (1858), 1 F. & F. 213.

This fundamental rule prohibiting payment of dividend out of capital as not only contrary to the Act, but commercially unsound, was at one time in serious danger of being relaxed or explained away by certain unfortunate decisions, of which the following are the most noteworthy:—Lee v. Neuchatel Co., 41 C. D. 1; Ferner v. General Commercial Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 263; Wilmer v. Macnair, (1895) 2 Ch. 245; Bosanquet, &c. v. St. John del Rey (1897), 77 L. T. 207; National Bank of Wales, supra.

See further, infra, pp. 857 et seq.

But the House of Lords, in the appeal in the case last mentioned sub nom. Dorey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477, threw so much doubt on their decisions as to effectually neutralize the mischief they threatened to do, and Bond v. Barrow Hematite, (1902) 1 Ch. 352, has still further minimized their operation. See further, infra, p. 866 et seq.

What to be deemed net profits.

[120. The declaration of the directors as to the amount of the net profits of the coy shall be conclusive.]

This clause is common, and is found useful; it precludes controversy over many difficult questions of management and account, but it does not enable the directors to declare profits where in reality there are none.

121. The directors may from time to time pay to the members such interim dividends as in their judgment the position of the company justifies. Form 251.
Interim dividends

The above clause is very commonly inserted.

Before declaring even an interim dividend, the directors must satisfy themselves that there are profits to divide. Towers v. African Tug Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 358; Lucas v. Fitzgerald, 20 T. L. R. 16. But, as stated by Lord Alverstone, C. J., in the last case, "the declaration of interim dividends depends much more upon estimates and opinions than the declaration of a final dividend, which is made upon the information contained in a formal balance-sheet."

Sometimes the clause says, "An interim dividend on account of the next final dividend," or some such words, but such provisions often lead to dispute. For instance, where further shares are issued between the interim dividend and the declaration of the final dividend, are the holders of these shares, on the final dividend being declared, entitled to insist on the other shareholders bringing the interim dividend into account? In some cases it would seem that they are: but the point can be provided for in the terms of allotment of the interim issue.

The directors' paramount duty is not to pay dividends out of capital, and accordingly, if after declaring an interim dividend and before payment the directors ascertain that it will, if paid, have to be paid out of capital, they may properly refuse to pay it. Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. J. H. Schroeder & Co., (1901), 17 T. L. R. 625; 85 L. T. 22.

122. The directors may retain any dividends on which the company has a lien, and may apply the same in or towards satisfaction of the debts, liabilities, or engagements in respect of which the lien exists. Debts may be deducted.

[123. Any general meeting declaring a dividend may make a call on the members of such amount as the meeting fixes, but so that the call on each member shall not exceed the dividend payable to him, and so that the call be made payable at the same time as the dividend, and the dividend may, if so arranged between the company and the member, be set off against the call. The making of a call under this clause shall be deemed ordinary business of an ordinary general meeting which declares a dividend.] Dividend and call together.

Set-off allowed.

A clause as above is not uncommonly inserted. But the London Stock Exchange object to it. It is clear that, in the absence of such a clause, a shareholder may authorize a company to retain any money due to him for dividends or otherwise, as to pay up his shares therewith, and that such payment would be equivalent to cash. See Rance's case, 6 Ch. 104, where a dividend paid by crediting the amount on the shares was treated as equivalent to cash. See also Bouch v. Sproule, 12 App. Cas. 385; Re Oppenheimer, (1907) 1 Ch. 399.

This clause and the following clause are used where it is desirable to capitalize profits, instead of paying them out in cash dividends.

Form 261. ture stock of any other coy. or in any one or more of such ways, and the directors shall give effect to such resolution; and, where any difficulty arises in regard to the distribution, they may settle the same as they think expedient, and in particular may issue fractional certificates, and may fix the value for distribution of such specific assets, or any part thereof, and may determine that cash payments shall be made to any members upon the footing of the value so fixed, in order to adjust the rights of all parties, and may vest any such specific assets in trustees upon trusts for the persons entitl to the dividend as may seem expedient to the directors. Where requisite, a proper contract shall be filed in accordance with sect. 88 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and the directors may appoint any person to sign such contract on behalf of the persons entitl to the dividend, and such appointment shall be effective.

In the absence of express authority, dividends cannot be paid in shares or debentures but only in cash. Wood v. Glenna Waterworks Co., 42 C. D. 645; Hale v. Gr. W. Rail. Co., 3 Ch. 262.

As to the allotment of paid-up shares in respect of reserve and the danger attending it, see Eastern and Aus. Co., 41 W. R. 373.

Effect of transfer.

124. A transfer of shares shall not pass the right to any dividend declared thereon before the registration of the transfer.

This is implied; the declaration vests a right of action. As to apportionment: as between a seller and buyer, the buyer is entitled to all dividends declared after his contract, unless otherwise agreed. Black v. Homersham, 4 Ex. D. 24. As between tenant for life and remainderman, the tenant for life takes all dividends and bonuses declared in his lifetime. Price v. Anderson, 15 Sim. 473; Hopkins' Trusts, 18 Eq. 696; Armitage v. Garnett, (1893) 3 Ch. 337; Malan v. Hitchens, (1894) 3 Ch. 578. The Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), may give his representatives a further right.

A company registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, is a public company within the meaning of sect. 5 of the Apportionment Act. Re Lysaght, (1898) 1 Ch. 115; but a declaration in a will that a share bequeathed "shall carry the dividend accruing at any death" is an "express stipulation" within sect. 7 of the Apportionment Act, that no apportionment shall take place. Ibid. And so also is a declaration in a will that "the whole of the income derived" from shares shall be paid to a person during his life. Meredith, 67 L. J. Ch. 409; 78 L. T. 492. Where after the death of the tenant for life shares are sold "cum dividend," and after sale a dividend is declared and received by the purchaser, out of profits part of which are earned before the death, the executor is not entitled to anything out of the dividend. Bathelot v. Stephens, (1896) 2 Ch. 241.

The Apportionment Act only applies to sums which are accruing but have not accrued due when the apportionment is said to be required. Ellis v. Rowbotham, (1900) 1 Q. B. 740.

But where dividend is paid in shares it may be regarded as being capitalized, in which case the tenant for life cannot claim it as income. Barton's Trusts, 5 Eq. 238; Houch v. Sproule, 12 App. Cas. 385; Re Oppenheimer, (1907) 1 Ch. 399.

In some cases a part of a dividend paid in shares or partly in shares may be held to be capital. Malam v. Hitchens, (1894) 3 Ch. 578; Ellis v. Barfield, W. N. (1891) 84. See Hume Nisbet's Settlement, 27 T. L. R. 461.

In some cases a dividend in the shape of paid-up shares will go to the tenant for life. Palmer v. Casel, 56 B. J. 363.

As to relation back of the title to dividends which are forfeited by bankruptcy, see Montefiore v. Guedalla, (1901) 1 Ch. 435; Re Heather, (1906) 2 Ch. 230.

Form 251.

125 The directors may retain the dividends payable upon shares in respect of which any person is under the transmission clause [clause 38] entitled to become a member, or which any person under that clause is entitled to transfer, until such person shall become a member in respect thereof or shall duly transfer the same.

Retention in certain cases.

126 Any one of several persons who are registered as the joint holders of any share may give effectual receipts for all dividends and payments on account of dividends in respect of such share.

Dividend to joint holders.

127 Unless otherwise directed any dividend may be paid by cheque or warrant sent through the post to the registered address of the member entitled, or, in the case of joint holders, to the registered address of that one whose name stands first on the register in respect of the joint holding; and every cheque or warrant so sent shall be made payable to the order of the person to whom it is sent.

Payment by post.

The above clause is commonly inserted, and expressly sanctions what is the ordinary practice, namely, to pay dividends by cheque or warrant sent through the post.

Apart from such a clause, if the dividend warrant is lost in the post the loss falls on the stock or share holder. Thainwall v. Gt. Northern Rail. Co., (1910) 2 K. B. 509.

The clause allows the shareholder to give special directions, e.g., to pay all dividends to his bankers, viz.:

To the — Coy, Limtd.

I direct that until further notice all dividends from time to time becoming payable on any shares in [or stock of] the above-named coy for the time being standing in my name be paid to Messrs. —, of [for my account], and their receipt shall be a good discharge.

Form 251.

In the absence of such a direction payment to one of two joint holders would seem to be good against the other, for "the old rule of common law that payment to one of two joint creditors is a good discharge of the joint debt, still remains good." Per Farwell, J., in Parrell v. Benthurst, (1901) 2 Ch. 160, 161.

Such directions are not liable to stamp duty. See Stamp Act, 1891, Schedule under Letter of Attorney, exemptions (3). Where, pursuant to the articles or at the request or with the consent of the shareholder, a cheque or dividend is sent through the post, it is at his risk. Warwick v. Nokes, Peake, 67; Hawkins v. Rutt, ibid. 186; Leake, 897; Thornwall v. Gl. Northern Ry. Co. (1910) 2 K. B. 309.

The following clause is occasionally used:

Notice of dividend.

[127a. Notice of the declaration of any dividend, whether interim or otherwise, shall be given (by advertisement, and also) to the holders of registered shares and registered stock in manner herein provided.]

Unclaimed dividends.

128. All dividends unclaimed for one year after having been declared may be invested or otherwise made use of by the directors for the benefit of the coy until claimed (and all dividends unclaimed for five years after having been declared may be forfeited by the directors for the benefit of the coy).

The Committee of the Stock Exchange object to the above clause in so far as it provides for the forfeiture of dividends unclaimed for five years, and accordingly, if a quotation is desired, it should be modified or omitted.

As to when dividends are barred by lapse of time:—In Barton v. North Street Ry. Co., 38 Ch. D. 463, Kay, J., appeared to consider that a shareholder might be regarded as a partner, and would not lose his rights by non-claim whilst the partnership continued. See Peana v. Pickwick, 16 Beav. 246. But partnership rules should not be imported. The company is a separate body, and upon the declaration of the dividend the shareholder has a right of action (see p. 765), and if this is not upon a specialty it is barred by non-claim for six years under 21 Jac. 1, c. 16 (Serren, & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 531), whereas if it is upon a specialty, it requires twenty years to bar the claim. Cornwall Mortgage Co., (1897) 2 Ch. 74; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3.

In Artizans' Land and Mortgage Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 796, it was held by Byrne, J., that where the share certificates in the usual form are under the common seal, dividends in respect thereof are specialty debts; but this view requires reconsideration, for the right to the share and to dividend is independent of the certificate, and the certificate is not a deed, nor is it a contract. As to specialty debts, see Holland v. Holland, 4 Ch. 449; Telbot v. Earl of Shaftesbury, 16 Eq. 28.

ACCOUNTS.Accounts to be kept.

129. The directors shall cause true accounts to be kept of the sums of money received and expended by the coy, and the matters in respect of which such receipt and expenditure takes place, and of the assets, credits, and liabilities of the coy.

keeping proper accounts is one of the first duties of directors in their capacities of agents and trustees. White v. Lincoln (1803), 8 Ves. 363; and Seeley v. Foulie, 3 Nev. 40; Ferriman v. Green, 1 J. & W. 135, 140.

Under 25 & 26 Viet. c. 96, s. 84, directors keeping fraudulent accounts or publishing fraudulent statements incur criminal liability. As to falsification of books and papers in winding-up, see sect. 216 of the Act. As to false returns, see sect. 281.

Form 251.

100. The books of account shall be kept at the office or at such other place or places as the directors think fit. Where to be kept.

A clause in the articles providing that the books shall be kept at a particular place like the registered office may prevent the creation of a lien on the books. Capital Fire Association, 24 C. Div. 408; 49 L. T. 697; 32 W. R. 260; as to which, see Hawkes, Atkinson v. Lockhart, (1898) 2 Ch. 1.

131. The directors shall from time to time determine whether and to what extent, and at what times and places, and under what conditions or regulations, the accounts and books of the coy, or any of them, shall be open to the inspection of the members; and no member shall have any right of inspecting any account or book or document of the coy, except as conferred by statute or authorized by the directors, or by the coy in general meeting. Inspection by members.

Clause 105 of Table A. is a copy of the above clause.

The above clause is commonly used. Few companies allow members free access to the books. But the clause does not qualify the statutory right of a shareholder to inspect the register of members and the register of mortgages (Companies Act, 1908, ss. 30, 100, 101, 102).

As to the common law right to inspect, see Ree v. Merchant Taylors' Co., 2 B. & Ad. 115. As to a partner's right, see Trego v. Hunt, (1895) 1 Ch. 462; and as to a cestui que trust's right to information, see Tillot, (1892) 1 Ch. 86.

In an action by a shareholder against the company, the company may, notwithstanding the clause, be ordered to produce letters between the directors and their legal advisers before action brought. Gouand v. Edison, 59 L. T. 813; W. N. (1888) 194.

Where a right of inspection is given as regards "the books wherein the proceedings of the company are recorded," a member has no right to inspect the minute book of proceedings of directors. Rey. v. Marquitta, & Co., 1 E. & E. 289. And it is not advisable to allow it, for it may be used for all sorts of purposes hostile to the company. See Burn v. London & S. Wales Coal Co., W. N. (1890) 209; 7 T. L. R. 118.

A right to inspect usually gives a right to take copies (Mutter v. Eastern, & Co., 38 C. D. 92), so held in regard to the register of mortgages (Nelson v. Anglo-American Land Mortgage Agency Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 130), without being required to give any reason (Holland v. Dickson, 37 C. D. 669); and in regard to the registry of members; but the right to take extracts is impliedly negatived where the Act gives a right to have copies on payment. Balaghut Mining Co., (1901) 2 K. B. 665, C. A., overruling Boord v. African Consolidated Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 596.

Form 251.

A director is entitled virtute officii to inspect. Burn v. London & South Wales Coal Co., W. N. (1890) 200.

A right of inspection given by the articles ceases when the voluntary winding-up begins. Yorkshire, &c. Co., 9 Eq. 650; 18 W. R. 541, approved by C. A. in Kent Coalfields Syndicate, (1898) 1 Q. B. 754.

On a winding-up, whether compulsorily or under supervision, the power to order inspection, under sect. 30 or sects. 100, 101, ceases. Kent Coalfields Syndicate, supra; Somerset v. Land Securities, W. N. (1897) 29. But under sect. 221 the Court has express power to permit inspection by creditors or contributories (see North Brazilian Sugar, 37 C. Div. 83).

Table A. of 1862, clause 78, provides as follows:

"The books of account shall be kept at the registered office of the company, and, subject to any reasonable restrictions as to time and manner of inspecting the same that may be imposed by the company in general meeting, shall be open to the inspection of the members during the hours of business."

See also clause 104 of Table A., 1908.

By sect. 114 of the Act of 1908, "Holders of preference shares and debentures of a company shall have the same right to receive and inspect the balance-sheets of the company, and the reports of the auditors, and other reports as is possessed by the holders of ordinary shares in the company." This does not apply to a private company, ibid.

Annual account and balance-sheet.

132. At the ordinary meeting in the year — and in each subsequent year, the directors shall lay before the coy a profit and loss account, and a balance-sheet, containing a summary of the ppty and liabilities of the coy, made up to a date not more than four months before the meeting, from the time when the last preceding account and balance-sheet were made up, or, in the case of the first account and balance-sheet, from the incorporation of the coy.

Annual report
of directors.

133. Every such balance-sheet shall be accompanied by a report of the directors as to the state and condition of the coy, and as to the amount which they recommend to be pd out of the profits by way of dividend or bonus to the members, and the amount (if any) which they propose to carry to the reserve fund, according to the provisions in that behalf hnbefore contained; and the account, report, and balance-sheet shall be signed by two directors and counter-signed by the secretary.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, sect. 84, directors keeping fraudulent accounts, or publishing fraudulent statements, are guilty of a misdemeanour.

Where a report contains false statements and is adopted by the company in general meeting and industriously circulated, the company may be liable to persons acting on those statements. National Exchange Co. v. Drew, 2 Macq. 103; New Brunswick Co. v. Conybrave, 9 H. L. C. 711.

Copy to be sent to members.

134. A printed copy of such account, balance-sheet, and report shall, seven days previously to the meeting, be served on the registered holders of shares, in the manner in which notices are hnbfr directed to be served, [and two copies of these documents shall at the same time be forwarded to the secretary of the Share and Loan Department, Stock Exchange, London.] Form 251.

Sometimes it is provided, instead of this, that the balance-sheet shall lie for inspection at the office. In private companies this clause is commonly omitted.

Where the number of members is very large, as in a co-operative store, it is sometimes provided that a copy of the balance-sheet shall only be sent to those members who hold more than a specified number of shares, but that "any other member shall be entitled to a copy on application at the office within such seven days, and during the same period a copy thereof shall lie for inspection by members at the office."

Where quotation on the London Stock Exchange is wanted, the words in brackets must be used.

Sometimes the words "the accidental omission to send any such documents to a member shall not invalidate the proceedings at the meeting" are added to the above clause, and occasionally clauses are inserted to the effect that the balance-sheet is not to be laid before a general meeting. See Form 300a, infra.

AUDIT.

135. Once at least in every year [except the year --] the accounts of the coy shall be examined, and the correctness of the profit and loss account and balance-sheet ascertained by one or more auditor or auditors. Accounts to be audited annually.

The auditors are agents of the company, but constructive notice of facts coming to their knowledge is not imputed to the shareholders. Spackman v. Evans, L. R. 3 H. L. 171, 196, 236.

The regulations dealing with audit are now contained in sects. 112 and 113 of the Act of 1908.

136. The coy at each ordinary general meeting shall appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next ordinary general meeting, and the following provisions shall have effect, that is to say: Audit provisions.

- (1) If an appointment of auditors is not made at an ordinary general meeting, the Board of Trade may, on the application of any member of the coy, appoint an auditor for the current year and fix the remuneration to be pd to him by the coy for his services.
- (2) A director or other officer of the coy shall not be capable of being appointed auditor of the coy.

An auditor is in a fiduciary position and should not have any conflicting interest or duty.

- (3) A person, other than a retiring auditor, shall not be capable of being appointed auditor at an ordinary general meeting unless notice of an intention to nominate that person to the office of auditor has been given by a shareholder to the coy not less than fourteen days before the meeting, and the coy shall send a copy of any such notice to the retiring auditor, and shall give notice thereof to the shareholders, either by advertisement or in any other mode allowed by the articles, not less than seven days before the meeting.

Provided that if, after notice of the intention to nominate an auditor has been ~~so~~ given, an ordinary general meeting is called for a date fourteen days or less after the notice has been given, the notice, though not given within the time required by this provision, shall be deemed to have been properly given for the purposes thereof, and the notice to be sent or given by the company may, instead of being sent or given within the time required by this provision, be sent or given at the same time as the notice of the ordinary general meeting.

- (4) The first auditors of the coy may be appointed by the directors before the statutory meeting, and if so appointed shall hold office until the first ordinary general meeting unless previously removed by a resolution of the shareholders in general meeting, in which case the shareholders at that meeting may appoint auditors.
- (5) The directors may fill any casual vacancy in the office of auditor, but while any such vacancy continues the surviving or continuing auditor or auditors (if any) may act.

The above clause follows closely the provisions of sect. 112 of the Companies Act, 1908. Audit clauses are usually inserted in articles, and it would be inconvenient if the articles made one set of provisions in regard to the matter whilst the statute made other provisions. No doubt the articles might be silent about audit, thus causing the statute to operate; but it has been customary to insert audit clauses, and it is convenient to set them out.

If preferred, clauses 136, 137, and 138 can be omitted and the following words can be substituted:

"The provisions of the Companies Act, 1908, as to auditors shall apply."

As to auditor's lien for his fees, see Findlay v. Waddell, (1910) S. C. 670 (Ct. of SESS.).

Remuneration of auditors.

137. The remuneration of the auditors shall be fixed by the coy in general meeting, except that the remuneration of any auditors appointed before the statutory meeting or to fill any casual vacancy may be fixed by the directors.

This clause follows sect. 112 of the Act of 1908. Sometimes auditors perform extra work as accountants, men of business, experts, but as they stand in a fiduciary position, there is a difficulty in their being remunerated, unless with the sanction of a general meeting.

Rights and duties of auditors.

138.—(1) Every auditor of the coy shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the coy, and shall be entitl to require from the directors and officers of the coy such Form 251.

information and explanation as may be necessary for the performance of the duties of the auditors.

2) The auditors shall make a report to the shareholders on the accounts examined by them, and on every balance-sheet laid before the coy in general meeting during their tenure of office, and the report shall state—

- (a) Whether or not they have obtained all the information and explanations they have required; and
- (b) Whether in their opinion the balance-sheet referred to in the report is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the coy's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them and as shown by the books of the coy.

(c) The balance-sheet shall be signed on behalf of the board by two of the directors of the coy, or, if there is only one director, by that director, and the auditors' report shall be attached to the balance-sheet, or there shall be inserted at the foot of the balance-sheet a reference to the report, and the report shall be read before the coy in general meeting, and shall be open to inspection by any shareholder.

Any shareholder shall be entitled to be furnished with a copy of the balance-sheet and auditors' report at a charge not exceeding sixpence for every hundred words.

This clause follows sect. 113 of the Act of 1908, except as to sub-sects. (4) and (5), which are set out at p. 777, infra, and relate to penalties and banking company.

An auditor who accepts office pursuant to the regulations of a company is bound to conform to the terms of these regulations. "Auditors," said Lindley, L. J., in Kingston Cotton Co. (No. 2), (1896) 2 Ch. 284 (C. A.), "are, in my opinion, bound to see what exceptional duties, if any, are cast upon them by the articles of the company whose accounts they are called upon to audit.
Ignorance of the articles and of exceptional duties imposed by them would not afford any legal justification for not observing them." And à fortiori he is bound to perform the duties imposed on him by the Acts.

"It is no part of an auditor's duty," as Lindley, L. J., said in another leading case on the subject (London and General Bank, (1895) 2 Ch. 673), "to give advice either to directors or shareholders as to what they ought to do."

"An auditor has nothing to do with the prudence or imprudence of making loans with or without security. It is nothing to him whether the business of a company is being conducted prudently or imprudently, profitably or unprofit-ably. It is nothing to him whether dividends are properly or improperly declared, provided he discharges his own duty to the shareholders. His business is to ascertain and state the true financial position of the company at the time of the audit, and his duty is confined to that. But then comes the question:
How is he to ascertain that position? The answer is: By examining the books of the company. But he does not discharge his duty by doing this without inquiry and without taking any trouble to see that the books themselves show the company's true position. He must take reasonable care to ascertain that they do so. Unless he does this, his audit would be worse than idle farce.
Assuming the books to be so kept as to show the true position of a company, the Form 251. auditor has to frame a balance-sheet showing that position according to the books, and to certify that the balance-sheet presented is correct in that sense. But his first duty is to examine the books not merely for the purpose of ascertaining what they do show, but also for the purpose of satisfying himself that they show the true financial position of the company. This is quite in accordance with the decision of Stirling, J., in Leeds Estate Building and Investment Co. v. Shepherd, 36 Ch. D. 787. An auditor, however," goes on Lord Lindley, "is not bound to do more than exercise reasonable care and skill in making inquiries and investigations. He is not an insurer; he does not guarantee that the books do correctly show the true position of the company's affairs; he does not even guarantee that his balance-sheet is accurate according to the books of the company. If he did, he would be responsible for an error on his part, even if he were himself deceived without any want of reasonable care on his part—say, by the fraudulent concealment of a book from him. His obligation is not so onerous as this. Such is to be the duty of the auditor; he must be honest—i.e., he must not certify what he does not believe to be true, and he must take reasonable care and skill before he believes that what he certifies is true. What is reasonable care in any particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case. Where there is nothing to excite suspicion, very little inquiry will be reasonably sufficient, and, in practice, I believe, business men select a few cases at haphazard, see that they are right, and assume that others like them are correct also. Where suspicion is aroused, more care is obviously necessary; but still an auditor is not bound to exercise more than reasonable care and skill even in a case of suspicion, and he is perfectly justified in acting on the opinion of an expert where special knowledge is required." And Lopes, L. J., in Kingston Cotton Mills Co. (No. 2), supra, at p. 775, added: "Auditors must not be made liable for not tracking out ingenious and carefully-laid schemes of fraud when there is nothing to arouse their suspicion, and when those frauds are perpetrated by tried servants of the company and are undetected for years by the directors. So to hold would make the position of an auditor intolerable. The appeal will be allowed." An auditor should not be satisfied merely by vouchers, apparently formal and regular, but should, by fair and reasonable examination of them, see that they are not for payments in any way unauthorized, or illegal or improper. Per Lord Russell, C. J., in Thomas v. Deconport Corporation, (1900) 1 Q. B. 16, 21. In accordance with these principles, it was held in the above case that auditors who, without any ground for suspicion, had accepted and acted on the certificate of the manager of the company as to the amount and value of the company's stock, such manager having been long in the service of the company, and being a man of high character and unquestioned competence and trusted by every one who knew him, were not under any liability, though the valuation proved to have been false to the knowledge of the manager. "The question," said Lindley, L. J., in Kingston Cotton Mills Co. (No. 2), supra, at p. 287 of the report, "is whether, no suspicion of anything wrong being entertained, there was a want of reasonable care on the part of the auditors in relying on the returns made by a competent and trusted expert relating to matters on which information from such a person was essential. I cannot think there was. The manager had no apparent conflict between his interest and his duty. His position was not similar to that of a cashier who has to account for the cash which he receives, and whose own account of his receipts and payments could not reasonably be taken by an auditor without further inquiry."

This is the correct view of an auditor's position. Squire Cash Chemist, Ltd. v. Ball (1911), 27 T. L. R. 269; affirmed 28 T. L. R. 81.

An auditor—it has been laid down—who is appointed to investigate the condition of a business is bound to make a reasonable and proper investigation of the account and stock sheets, and if, as a reasonably prudent man, he ought to conclude on the investigation that something is wrong, it is his duty to call his employer's attention to the fact. In making his investigation an auditor is entitled to rely on documents vouched by servants of the business, unless he has reason to believe those servants to be dishonest. Though it is not his duty to consider whether the business is prudently or imprudently conducted, he must consider and report to the shareholders whether the balance-sheet exhibits a correct view of the state of the company's affairs and its true financial position at the date of the audit: this must be ascertained by examining the books and, as a rule, the necessary information as to the financial position, and not merely the means of acquiring it, must be placed before the shareholders. London and General Bank (No. 3), (1895) 2 Ch. 673.

An auditor who commits a breach of his duty may be sued by the company in an action (Leeds Estate, &c. Co. v. Shepherd, 36 Ch. D. 787), or may be proceeded against in a winding-up for misfeasance under sect. 215 of the Act. London and General Bank, (1895) 2 Ch. 166 (C. A.); Kingston Cotton Mills Co. (No. 2), (1896) 2 Ch. 279 (C. A.). But to be open to attack under sect. 215 an auditor must be an officer of the company. An accountant who is merely called in to audit the accounts pro hac vice is not an officer. Western Counties Steam Bakeries, (1897) 1 Ch. 617 (C. A.). An auditor may set up the Statute of Limitations. Leeds Estate Building Co. v. Shepherd, supra.

A director is entitled to assume that the auditors perform their duty, and is not bound to supervise or test the accuracy of their work. Dorey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477.

An auditor cannot obtain an interim injunction to restrain the directors from interfering with the performance of his duties. Coff v. London and County Land, (1912) 1 Ch. 440.

Sub-sects. (4), (5) of the Act of 1908 are as follows:

(4) If any copy of a balance-sheet which has not been signed as required by this section is issued, circulated, or published, or if any copy of a balance-sheet is issued, circulated, or published without either having a copy of the auditors' report attached thereto or containing such reference to that report as is required by this section, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds.

(5) In the case of a banking company registered after the fifteenth day of August eighteen hundred and seventy-nine—

- (a) if the company has branch banks beyond the limits of Europe, it shall be sufficient if the auditor is allowed access to such copies of and extracts from the books and accounts of any such branch as have been transmitted to the head office of the company in the United Kingdom; and
- (b) the balance-sheet must be signed by the secretary or manager (if any), and where there are more than three directors of the company by at least three of those directors, and where there are not more than three directors by all the directors.

Form 251.

When accounts to be deemed finally settled.

139. Every account of the directors, when audited and approved by a general meeting, shall be conclusive, except as regards any error discovered therein within three months next after the approval thereof. Whenever any such error is discovered within that period, the account shall forthwith be corrected, and thenceforth shall be conclusive.

Approved by Bacon, V.-C., in London Financial Co. v. Kelk, 26 C. D. 151.

NOTICES.

How notices to be served on members.

140. A notice may be served by the company upon any member, either personally or by sending it through the post in a prepaid envelope or wrapper, addressed to such member at his registered place of address.

How notices to be given to
company.

The register of members, to be kept pursuant to sect. 25 of the Act, is to contain (inter alia) the addresses of the members.

As to notices to the company, the Act provides:

Sect. 116.—A document may be served on a company by leaving it or sending it by post to the registered office of the company.

"Document" includes summons, notice, order and other legal process and registers. Sect. 285.

This includes a writ of summons. White v. Land, &c. Co., W. N. (1883) 174; Sup. Ct. Rules, Order IX. r. 8, An. Pr., latest edition.

"Where an Act passed after the commencement of this Act authorizes or requires any document to be served by post, whether the expression 'serve' or the expression 'give' or 'send' or any other expression is used then, unless the contrary intention appears, the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying and posting a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post." Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 26.

Authentica-
tion of notices
by company.

Sect. 117.—A document or proceeding requiring authentication by a company may be signed by a director, secretary, or other authorized officer of the company, and need not be under its common seal. See also sect. 63 of the Act.

The above sects. 116, 117, so far as they relate to notices, are sometimes inserted as clauses in the articles.

Sect. 20 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, provides as follows:—

20. In this Act and in every other Act whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act expressions referring to writing shall unless the contrary intention appears be construed as including references to printing, lithography, photography, and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form.

A verbal notice given in the absence of the secretary to a clerk of the company, at the company's office during office hours, has been held to be a notice to the company under certain circumstances. Teulon's case, (1894) 3 Ch. 272.

Notice to a managing director, in that character, on a matter affecting the business of the company under his management, is notice to the company. Jaegen, &c. Co. v. Fallen, 77 L. T. R. 180; but knowledge of a fact by a single director is not necessarily notice to the company. Hampshire Land Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 743; Marseilles, &c. Co., L. R. 7 Ch. 161; David Payne & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 608.

If a member is known to be dead, it is enough, whilst his name remains on the register, to send a notice to his registered address. Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656. Form 251.

141. Each holder of registered shares, whose registered place of address is not in the United Kingdom, may from time to time notify in writing to the coy an address in the United Kingdom, which shall be deemed his registered place of address within the meaning of the last preceding clause. Members resident abroad.

It is generally deemed expedient to make special provision for the service of notices on members resident abroad.

It does not follow that they are, in the absence of such a provision, entitled to notice.

By clause 111 of Table A.: "If a member has no registered address in the United Kingdom and has not supplied to the company an address within the United Kingdom for the giving of notices to him, a notice addressed to him and advertised in a newspaper circulating in the neighbourhood of the registered office of the company shall be deemed to be duly given to him on the day on which the advertisement appears." The necessity of some such provision is obvious. It was long since held by Mulins, V.-C., in Union Hill Silver Co., 22 L. T. 400, that it is not necessary to serve notice on shareholders who have chosen to reside outside the United Kingdom. And this rule, being entirely consistent with common sense and common convenience, has been acted on ever since. See also Halifax Sugar Co. v. Franklyn, 62 L. T. 564, and Small v. Bailey, 2 H. L. C. 789. In the many cases, however, in which the regulations provide as below that the notice is to be deemed to be served on the day following that on which it is posted the difficulty is entirely removed.

142. As regards those members who have no registered place of address, a notice posted up in the office shall be deemed to be well served on them at the expiration of twenty-four hours after it is so posted up. Notices where no address.

Sometimes it is provided that in such case a member shall not be entitled to any notice.

143. The holder of a share warrant shall not, unless otherwise expressed therein, be entitled in respect thereof to notice of any general meeting of the coy. No notice to holders of share warrants.

The holder of a share warrant is generally deprived of the right to notice of general meetings. Sometimes he is permitted to appoint an address for service, but the objection is, that the company will have no means of ascertaining when the share warrant has been parted with, and may, unknowingly, continue to send notices to a person who has ceased to be a member. If the holder of a share warrant is to be entitled to notice, the usual plan is to provide that it shall be given by advertisement. In such case, the following clause will be inserted, instead of the above:—

Form 351.

"Any notice required to be given by the company to the holder of share warrants shall be given by advertising the same once in a London daily newspaper."

The objection to the general adoption of the plan is the publicity which attends it; companies do not like to publish notice of their private affairs.

The following clause is sometimes adopted, and is not open to the same objection:

"The holder of a share warrant may from time to time notify in writing to the company some place in England to be called his address for service, and notice of any general meeting convened within the six months next following such notification shall (unless the meeting is convened by advertisement) be served on the holder of such share warrant by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to him at his address for service. But, save as aforesaid, the holder of a share warrant shall not be entitled to notice of any general meeting."

When notice may be given by advertisement.

144. Any notice required to be given by the coy to the members, or any of them, and not expressly provided for by these presents, shall be sufficiently given if given by advertisement.

How to be advertised.

145. Any notice required to be, or which may be given by advertisement, shall be advertised once in two [London] daily newspapers.

Notice to joint holders.

146. All notices shall, with respect to any registered shares to which persons are jointly entld, be given to whichever of such persons is named first in the register, and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the holders of such shares.

When notice by post deemed to be served.

147. Any notice sent by post shall be deemed to have been served on the day following that on which the envelope or wrapper containing the same is posted, and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that the envelope or wrapper containing the notice was properly addressed and put into the post-office. And a certificate in writing signed by any manager, secretary, or other officer of the coy. that the envelope or wrapper containing the notice was so addressed and posted shall be conclusive evidence thereof.

It is not necessary to follow literally the address on the register, provided that a substantially accurate designation of the place of abode is given. Liverpool, &c. Co. v. Haughton, 23 W. R. 93.

Handing to a postman outside a post-office or pillar-box is not "posting." London and Northern Bank, (1900) 1 Ch. 220.

Even in the absence of express provision notice may be sent by post, where the circumstances show that the parties contemplated that the post might be used as a means of communication. Brumer v. Moore, (1904) 1 Ch. 305; Homehold Fire Insurance Co. v. Grant, 4 Ex. D. 216; Henthorn v. Fraser, (1892) 2 Ch. 27; James v. Institute of Auditors (1908), 98 L. T. 228, 230.

Transferees, &c., bound by prior notices.

[148. Every person who, by operation of law, transfer, or other means whatsoever, shall become entld to any share, shall be bound by every notice in respect of such share or stock which, previously to his name and address being entered on the register, shall be duly given to the person from whom he derives his title to such share or stock.) Form 251.

The above clause is not uncommon, but it is not by any means essential, and may be omitted if brevity is desired. It does not appear in Table A., or in the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

[149. Any notice or document delivered or sent by post to, or left at the registered address of, any member, in pursuance of those presents, shall, notwithstanding such member be then deceased, and whether or not the coy have notice of his decease, be deemed to have been duly served in respect of any registered shares, whether held solely or jointly with other persons by such member, until some other person be registered in his stead as the holder or joint holder thereof, and such service shall for all purposes of those presents be deemed a sufficient service of such notice or document on his or her heirs, exors, or admors, and all persons, if any, jointly interested with him or her in any such share.] Notice valid, though member deceased.

Where the articles contained no provision as to notice to deceased members, it was held that a notice of a call by letter to the registered address of a deceased member was valid, the company not having notice of his death. New Zealand Gold Extraction Co., (1894) 1 Q. B. 622, C. A.

The above clause carries the matter further, and is very generally used; its validity was recognized in Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656.

[150. The signature to any notice to be given by the coy may be written or printed.] How notice to be signed.

The above is occasionally inserted.

A person may sign by stamping a fac-simile of his autograph. Bennett v. Bromfit, L. R. 3 C. P. 28.

150a Where a given number of days' notice, or notice extending over any other period, is required to be given, the day of service shall, unless it is otherwise provided, be counted in such number of days or other period. How time to be counted.

Where the regulations, as in clause 60, provide for so many clear days' notice, this clause does not apply, for it is otherwise provided. See Railway Sleepers Supply Co., 29 C. D. 204; Parilion Newcastle-upon-Tyne, W. N. (1911) 235.

150b. In the event of a winding-up of the coy in England, every member of the coy who is not for the time being in England shall be Service of process.

Form 361. bound, within fourteen days after the passing of an effective resolution to wind up the coy voluntarily, or the making of an order for the winding-up of the coy, to serve notice in writing on the coy appointing some householder in London upon whom all summonses, notices, process orders and judgments in relation to or under the winding-up of the coy may be served, and in default of such nomination the liqr of the coy shall be at liberty on behalf of such member to appoint some such person, and service upon any such appointee, whether appointed by the member or the liqr, shall be deemed to be good personal service on such member for all purposes, and, where the liqr makes any such appointment, he shall with all convenient speed give notice thof to such member by advertisement in the Times newspaper, or by a registered letter sent through the post and addressed to such member at his address as mentioned in the register of members of the coy, and such notice shall be deemed to be served on the day following that on which the advertisement appears or the letter is posted.

In an action, service out of the jurisdiction may in certain cases be ordered under R. S. C. Ord. XI., supra, p. 85; but the Court has a discretion, and it has been laid down that the power is only given by statute so as to be binding on British subjects, and not on others. Per Lindley, L. J., Anglo-African Co., 32 C. D. 350. Accordingly, it is desirable to make provision for the matter in the articles. Such a provision does not provide for service out of the jurisdiction, but for service within, upon an agent of the shareholders. This is valid. Copin v. Adamson, 1 Ex. Div. 17; Tharvis Sulphur Co. v. Société des Métaux, 58 L. J. Q. B. 435; Montgomery v. Liebenthal, (1898) 1 Q. B. 487. To provide for service out of the jurisdiction, in cases not covered by Ord. XI., would be ineffective and ultra vires. British Wagon Co. v. Gray, (1896) 1 Q. B. 35; see supra, p. 363.

SECRECY CLAUSES.

Secrecy clause.

[151. Every director, manager, auditor, tree, member of a committee, officer, servant, agent, accountant, or other person employed in the business of the coy, shall, before entering upon his duties, sign a declaration pledging himself to observe a strict secrecy respecting all transactions of the coy with the customers and the state of accounts with individuals, and in matters relating thereto, and shall by such declaration pledge himself not to reveal any of the matters which may come to his knowledge in the discharge of his duties, except when required so to do by the directors or by any meeting, or by a court of law, or by the person to whom such matters relate, and except so far as may be necessary in order to comply with any of the provisions in these presents contained.

As to the effect of a winding-up on such a clause, see Birmingham Banking Co., 36 L. J. Ch. 150.

[151a. No member shall be entitled to require discovery of or any information respecting any detail of the company's trading, or any matter which is or may be in the nature of a trade secret, mystery of trade, or secret process which may relate to the conduct of the business of the company, and which, in the opinion of the directors, it will be inexpedient in the interest of the members of the company to communicate to the public.] Form 251. Member not entitled to information.

The above clause is sometimes inserted in the case of a manufacturing company, but an individual member has not in fact any right to information, or to inspect. The directors are the servants of the body corporate, not of the shareholders, and if, as guardians of the company's interests, in their discretion they think fit to refuse to give to an individual member information as to the company's business, he has no cause for complaint. He cannot interfere with the discretion delegated to the directors by the company in general meeting.

WINDING-UP

If desired that losses shall be borne and surplus assets taken by the members in proportion to paid-up capital, insert the following:— Distribution of assets.

152. If the company shall be wound up, and the assets available for distribution among the members as such shall be insufficient to repay the whole of the paid-up capital, such assets shall be distributed so that, as nearly as may be, the losses shall be borne by the members in proportion to the capital paid up, or which ought to have been paid up, at the commencement of the winding-up, on the shares held by them respectively. And if in a winding-up the assets available for distribution among the members shall be more than sufficient to repay the whole of the capital paid up at the commencement of the winding-up, the excess shall be distributed amongst the members in proportion to the capital at the commencement of the winding-up paid up or which ought to have been paid up on the shares held by them respectively. But this clause is to be without prejudice to the rights of the holders of shares issued upon special terms and conditions.]

In the absence of special provision, the assets available for distribution among the members, including capital uncalled at the commencement of the winding-up (Birch v. Cropper, 14 App. Cas. 525; Welton v. Saffery, (1897) A. C. 299; Es parte Lowenthal, 70 L. T. 3), are distributable so as to throw any loss of capital on the members in proportion to the nominal amount of the capital held by them. Thus, suppose 10,000*l.* of paid-up 10*l.* shares are issued in consideration of a patent, and 10,000*l.* of shares are taken by the public and paid up to the extent of 5*l.* per share equal 5,000*l.*, and that this sum is lost in experiments, and that the company is wound up and the patent sold for 100*l.*, and that, after paying off the debts, nothing remains but the 5,000*l.* uncalled capital. Of that sum of 5,000*l.*, 2,500*l.*, being 2*l.* 10*s.* per share, must be called up and handed over to the holders of the vendors' shares, so that the loss (equal to 7*l.* 10*s.* per share) may be borne in the proper proportions. Maude's case, 6 Ch. 51; Wakefield Rolling Stock Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 165; Exchange Drapery Co., 38 C. D. 171. This, however, is not always considered expedient, especially Form 251. when the profits are made distributable in proportion to the capital paid up. See pp. 763, 764, supra. Accordingly, it is not unusual to qualify, as in clause 152, the rule laid down in Mander's case. The effect of that clause is that capital called up in the winding-up will be paid off before capital previously paid up.

Preference shares.

Where the initial capital is divided into preference and ordinary shares, it is not unusual in the memorandum or articles to assign a preferential right in winding-up to the preference shares. See Forms 210, 213, 214, 215, 218 et seq., p. 578 et seq. In the absence of some such provision, preference shares do not confer a preferential right to return of capital in a winding-up. London India Rubber Co., 5 Eq. 519.

Gains.

In some cases it is deemed expedient to provide not only how losses shall be borne, but how a surplus shall be dealt with, inasmuch as companies go into liquidation occasionally when they are not only solvent but prosperous. In these cases there is often a contest as to how the profit is to be divided. In Mutoscop and Biograph Syndicate, (1899) 1 Ch. 896, the capital was divided into shares of 1*l.* each, some of which were fully paid at the commencement of the winding-up, while on others only 10*s.* per share had been paid. The articles of the company provided that if upon the winding-up the surplus assets should be more than sufficient to repay the whole paid-up capital, the excess should be distributed among the members in proportion to the capital paid, on which ought to have been paid, on the shares held by them respectively at the commencement of the winding-up. There was an excess in the winding-up after paying debts and expenses and repaying all the paid-up capital, and Wright, J. held that the excess was distributable in proportion to the capital actually paid up, distinguishing Anglo-Continental Corporation of Western Australia, (1898) 1 Ch. 327, where there was insufficient to repay the paid-up capital, but some shares were fully and others partly paid, and on an article somewhat like the first part of the above clause, it was held that there must be a call on the latter shares sufficient to pay enough to the former to make the amount paid up uniform, and that the other assets in hand must then be distributed pro rata.

If in a winding-up the surplus is sufficient to pay off all the paid-up capital it must, in the absence of express or implied provision to the contrary, be applied first in paying off the paid-up capital, and the residue, if any, namely, the profit, must be distributed among the members in proportion to the nominal amount of the capital held by them respectively. Birch v. Cropper (The Bridgewater Navigation Co.'s case), 14 App. Cas. 525, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, which was commented on in the fourth edition of this book. For in the absence of special agreement, the members of a company, having a nominal capital divided into shares, are interested in the company in proportion to their shares. Wilkinson v. Cuninghame, 11 H.L. 201; Guinness v. Land Corp., 22 C. D. 349; Oakbank Co. v. Burns, 4 App. Cas. 411; Maude's case, ubi supra; Bridgewater Navigation Co., ubi supra.

Undivided profits in a winding-up are prima facie part of the distributable as such (Crickton's Oil Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 86), but if the special provisions in the memorandum or articles they may have been differently dealt with. Thus, in Bridgewater Co., (1899) 2 Ch. 411, the ordinary shareholders were held entitled to undivided profits standing in credit of reserve; but there the articles stated that the surplus for the year "shall belong" to the holders of the ordinary shares, and Bishop v. Smyrna Rail. Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 265, undivided profits were held applicable to the payment of arrears of dividend on preference shares by the memorandum to a preferential dividend, but there again the memorandum was in special terms; but in Crickton's Oil Co., (1901) 2 Ch.

Old Waterworks Co. (in note to case last cited), preferred shares were held not so entitled, their right to division depending on declaration. These cases were followed by Byrne, J., in South African Supply and Cold Storage Co., 17 Feb. 1904; and see Spanish Properties Co., Ltd., p. 868.

The clause for distribution, instead of using the expression "assets available for distribution among the members," sometimes uses the expression "surplus assets." This expression is not a technical one, and may mean the surplus after paying off debts and liabilities and the costs of winding up, or surplus after paying off those items and repaying the paid-up capital. Prima facie the latter is the meaning of the expression. See Van der Merwe v. Transvaal Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 750; Paddy Mining Co., W. N., (1897) 170; Gold Syndicate, (1911) 1 Ch. 749.

In the last case Neville, J., held that the term "surplus assets" meant prima facie assets remaining after recouping capital as well as discharging debts and costs of liquidation.

Contributors to a bankrupt holder, in respect of the uncalled liability, if any has proved and received a dividend, are not entitled to rank as preferred shares on distribution of surplus. See Roué's Trustees v. Roué & Co., (1905) 1 Ch. 597; and, in C. A., (1906) 1 Ch. 1.

In a case of interest on such shares, see Wakefield v. Wakefield, (1903) 3 Ch. 165.

153. (1) The co-owners of the property shall be wound up, whether voluntarily or otherwise, the liquidators may, with the sanction of an extraordinary resolution, divide among the contributors, in specie or kind, any part of the assets of the co-owners, and may, with the like sanction, vest any part of the assets of the co-owners in trustees for the benefit of the contributors, or any of them, as the liquidators, with the like sanction, may think fit.

It might be expedient any such division may be otherwise than in accordance with the legal rights of the contributors (except where otherwise fixed by the memorandum of association), and in particular any part may be given preferential or special rights, or may be excluded wholly or in part; but in case any division otherwise than in accordance with the legal rights of the contributors shall be made, any contributor who would be prejudiced thereby shall have a right to dissent and ancillary rights as if such determination were a special resolution passed pursuant to sect. 192 of the Companies Act, 1908.

(3.) In case any shares to be divided as aforesaid involve a liability to calls or otherwise, any person entitled under such division to any of the said shares may, within ten days after the passing of the extraordinary resolution, by notice in writing, direct the liquidators to sell his proportion and pay him the net proceeds, and the liquidators shall, if practicable, act accordingly.

As to para. (1) of the above clauses, the power to distribute in specie or kind is in many cases found extremely convenient, for where the assets or the greater part of them consist of shares or other interests in or securities of another company, it may be impracticable to sell except to the serious detriment of the contributories. The Court has power to direct division in specie or kind (English and Foreign Credit Co., 1 T. L. R. 1), but it is generally considered that the liquidator in a voluntary winding-up has no such power in the absence of some clause as above; and although this view, long acted on, may be unsound (see sect. 186 (1) of the Act of 1908, replacing sect. 133 (1) of the Act of 1862, which does not in terms require a sale), it is desirable to provide for the contingency, and in numerous cases the power has been exercised with satisfactory results. See, for example, South African Supply and Cold Storage Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 268.

As to para. (2) of the clause, this is inserted to meet a practical difficulty which often arises. Under sect. 186 (1) of the Act of 1908, replacing sect. 133 (1) of the Act of 1862, the property of the company which is being wound up voluntarily is to be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities pari passu, and "subject thereto shall, unless the articles otherwise provide, be distributed amongst the members according to their rights and interests in the company." Hence, in the absence of special provision in the articles, there is no power to distribute otherwise than in strict accordance with the rights and interests of the members. Now where there are several classes of shares this want of power may be very inconvenient, especially where the undertaking has been sold with a view to reconstruction or amalgamation, whether under a power of sale in the memorandum (supra, p. 510) or under sect. 192 of the Act of 1908, replacing sect. 161 of the Act of 1862. Thus, if there are preference and ordinary shares in the selling company (both ranking pari passu in a winding-up), and it is desired to give to the former preference shares and to the latter ordinary shares in the purchasing company, this cannot be done in the absence of some such clause or of an arrangement under sect. 120 of the Act, sanctioned by the Court. Even sect. 192 of the Companies Act, 1908, does not allow of such a thing. Griffith v. Paget, 5 C. D. 894; 6 C. D. 514. But under para. (2) of the above clause, such a scheme and many other advantageous schemes are allowable.

As to para. (3), it seems well to preclude the suggestion that a man may, under this clause, be compelled to take partly paid shares.

Formerly it was customary to insert here a clause depriving dissentients, under sect. 161 of the Act of 1862, now sect. 192 of the Act of 1908, of the right to be paid out in cash. The clause first came under consideration in Fox's case, 6 Ch. 183, where it was inserted just before liquidation; but it seems to be conceded that, even if inserted in the original articles, it is ineffective. Peveril Gold Mines, (1898) 1 Ch. 122 (C. A.); Baring-Gould v. Sharpington, (1899) 2 Ch. 80; Payne v. Cork Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 308; Bisgood v. Henderson's Transvaal Estates Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 743.

First, Peveril Gold Mines, (1898) 1 Ch. 122 (C. A.), to say the least, throw grave doubt on the validity of the clause.

And in Baring-Gould v. Sharpington, &o. Syndicate, (1899) 2 Ch. 80—where the articles contained a provision that "If at any time a sale or arrangement shall be made or proposed in pursuance of sect. 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, the purchase-money to be paid for the interest of any dissentient member shall be such sum of money as the liquidator can obtain by selling the shares, stock, or other property to which such dissentient member would have been entitled upon the completion of the sale or arrangement had he not expressed his dissent"—the Court of Appeal held that it was ineffective.

And Stirling, J., in Payne v. Cork Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 308, held that articles of association were ultra vires and inoperative so far as they purported to deprive dissentient shareholders of the rights conferred upon them by sect. 161 of the Act of 1862 (s. 192 of Act of 1908). Form 251.

Notwithstanding these cases, it may be doubted whether sufficient force has been given to the words of sect. 133 (1) of 1862 (sect. 186 of Act of 1908), for sect. 161 of 1862 and sect. 192 of 1908 are undoubtedly to be read as regards distribution in conjunction with sect. 133 (1) of 1862 or sect. 186 of 1908 (Guthrie v. Paget, 5 C. D. 894, 899), and those sections provide for distribution among the members according to their rights and interests, "unless the articles otherwise provide." These words clearly subordinate to the statutory right any special agreement in the articles. Further, it may be urged with some force that the principle embodied in the maxim "Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto," is applicable. No doubt an individual cannot waive a matter in which the public have an interest, but surely the right of dissent is peculiarly a matter for the individual, not for the public.

INDEMNITY.

154. Every director, manager, [auditor,] secretary, and other officer or servant of the coy shall be indemnified by the coy against, and it shall be the duty of the directors out of the funds of the coy to pay all costs, losses, and expenses which any such officer or servant may incur or become liable to by reason of any contract entered into, or act or thing done by him as such officer or servant, or in any way in the discharge of his duties, including travelling expenses: and the amount for which such indemnity is provided shall immediately attach as a lien on the ppty of the coy, and have priority as between the members over all other claims]. Indemnity.

The above clause is occasionally inserted. See, as to the right to indemnity of directors and other agents, German Mining Co., 4 De G. M. & G. 19; Norwich Yarn Co., 22 Beav. 143; James v. May, L. R. 6 H. L. 328; Benett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 259; Walters v. Woodbridge, 7 C. D. 504; Hunt's Claim, W. N. (1872) 53; Financial Corporation, 28 W. R. 760; W. N. (1880) 88; Wilson v. Lord Bury, 5 Q. B. D. 518; Smith v. Duke of Manchester, 24 C. D. 611; 32 W. R. 83; Pyle Works (No. 2), (1901) 1 Ch. 173; Young v. Naval, &c. Society, (1905) 1 K. B. 687; Hardoon v. Belilos, (1901) A. C. 118.

There can be no right to indemnity in respect of an ultra vires or fraudulent transaction. Smith v. Duke of Manchester, 24 Ch. D. 611; Re Branksea Island Co. (No. 1), 1 Mog. C. R. 12.

Directors who pay a dividend representing that it is paid out of profits cannot claim indemnity; but where directors pay a dividend to members who know that it is paid out of capital, they may have a right to indemnity as against such members. Mozham v. Grant, (1900) 1 Q. B. 88; but the directors will be primarily ordered to make good the amount to the company. Alexandra Palace Co., 21 Ch. D. 149; National Funds, 10 Ch. D. 118. It is not, however, competent to shareholders who have received a dividend with knowledge that it has been paid out of capital to maintain an action to have the money replaced by the directors. Towers v. African Tug Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 558.

As to indemnity where the name of a person is improperly inserted as director, see Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 84 (3), replacing the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, s. 3 (4).

Form 251.

In the absence of clear provision, directors who are paid for their services are not entitled to indemnity in respect of travelling expenses of attending board meetings. Young v. Naval, &c. Society, supra; Marmor, Ltd. v. Alexander, S. C. 78 Ct. of Sess. If it be desired to give such indemnity, insert after the words "travelling expenses" the words "of and incident to attending at and returning from board meetings."

The words in brackets are sometimes objected to by the London Stock Exchange where a quotation is wanted.

As to giving security to the directors, see Pyle Works (No. 2), (1891) 1 Ch. 184.

Individual responsibility of directors

155. No director [auditor] or other officer of the coy shall be liable for the acts, receipts, neglects, or defaults of any other director or officer, or for joining in any receipt or other act for conformity, or for any loss or expense happening to the coy through the insufficiency or deficiency of title to any ppty acquired by order of the directors for or on behalf of the coy, or for the insufficiency or deficiency of any security in or upon which any of the moneys of the coy shall be invested, or for any loss or damage arising from the bankruptcy, insolvency, or tortious act of any person with whom any moneys, securities, or effects shall be deposited, or for any loss occasioned by any error of judgment, omission, default, or oversight on his part, or for any other loss, damage, or misfortune whatever which shall happen in relation to the execution of the duties of his office or in relation thereto, unless the same happen through his own dishonesty.

The above clause is sometimes inserted. As to liability of directors for acts of each other, Cargill v. Bower, 10 C. D. 502; Land Credit Co. of Ireland v. Lord Fermoy, L. R. 5 Ch. 772; Re Charles Denham & Co., 25 Ch. D. 752. See also Weir v. Hill, 3 Ex. Div. 238; Cullerns v. London and Suburban Society, 25 Q. B. D. 485. As to the right to contribution, see Lindley on Companies, 6th ed. 532 et seq.; and Ashurst v. Mason, 20 Eq. 225, explained in Jackson v. Dickinson, (1903) 1 Ch. 947, where two trustees in breach of trust invested trust funds in partly paid shares of a company, and some years after the death of one trustee the survivor, who had made every reasonable effort to dispose of the shares, but without success, paid a call of 800*l.* as a contributory in the liquidation of the company, and Swinfen Eady, J., held that the deceased trustee's representatives, though not liable to the company for the call, were liable to the surviving trustee for contribution.

In Ashurst v. Mason, shares of a company had (pursuant to an ultra vires resolution of the board) been purchased and transferred into the name of A., a director, in trust for the company. It was held that A. was entitled to contribution from the directors who concurred in the transaction for calls he had paid. See also Power v. Hoey, 19 W. R. 916; Power v. O'Connor, ibid. 923; and Ramskill v. Edwards, 31 C. D. 100; Re Englefield Colliery Co., 8 Ch. D. 388; Re Anglo-French Society, 21 Ch. D. 501; Palmer v. Wick, &c. Co., (1891) A. C. 313; Robinson v. Harkin, (1896) 2 Ch. 415. And see Rules of Supreme Court, Ord. XVI. r. 55, and Annual Practice, 1912.

In Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Lim., (1911) 1 Ch. 425, a clause in the articles ran thus: "No director shall be liable for any loss, damage or misfortune whatever which shall happen in the execution of the duties of his office, or in relation thereto, unless the same happens through his own dishonesty," and it was held that the clause was an answer to an action for negligence by the company not alleging any dishonesty. Form 251.

Directors charged with negligence or other misfeasance may rely on such a clause.

As to omitting to sue, see Forest of Dean, 10 C. D. 452; Wedgwood Co., 47 L. T. 612; Liverpool Household Stores, 62 L. T. 873; Faure Accumulator Co., 40 C. D. 150; Sheffield, &c. Society v. Aizlewood, 44 C. D. 412. Directors have a discretion as to whether they shall sue the customers or debtors of the company, which trustees have not, ibid. As to general position as fiduciary agents, see Pickering v. Stephenson, 14 Eq. 322; Marzetti's case, 28 W. R. 541; Wilson v. Lord Bury, 5 Q. B. Div. 519; Ferguson v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. 77; Joint Stock Discount Co. v. Brown, 8 Eq. 381.

Sect. 11 of the Companies Act, 1908 (replacing sect. 15 of the Act of 1862), provides as follows:—

"11. In the case of a company limited by shares and registered after the commencement of this Act, if articles are not registered, or, if articles are registered, in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations in Table A. in the First Schedule to this Act, those regulations shall, so far as applicable, be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were contained in duly registered articles."

And by sect. 10 (2), where articles of association are registered "they may adopt all or any of the regulations contained in the Table A." in the First Schedule to this Act.

Therefore, in the case of a company limited by shares, it is not absolutely necessary to register articles along with the memorandum of association: and

Articles partly

if articles are not registered, Table A., so far as it is not modified by the Act of 1908, will apply and constitute the articles of the company; and many companies have been thus registered without articles. But to adopt Table A. simpliciter generally leads to difficulties, and accordingly in many cases, when with a view to saving expense the adoption of Table A. is in contemplation, the parties avail themselves of the powers given by sects. 10 and 11 of the Act of registering special articles, as in the Form below, modifying Table A. in a few particulars, and in the result Table A. as so modified will apply. This plan has its advantages; but if the modifications are extensive the saving of expense is trifling, whilst the inconvenience of being obliged to refer to two documents (the one modifying the other) as containing the articles of the company is considerable. Unless, therefore, the preliminary expenses have to be kept at a very low point, the possession of a simple code of articles is well worth the expenditure of a few pounds.

The following afford a specimen of articles adopting Table A. with variations:—

1. Subject as hmftr provided the regulations in Table A. shall apply to this coy.

Table A
to apply

Table A. will be found infra, after sect. 296 of the Act. As to the importance of excluding provisions of Table A. in clear and unambiguous language, see Fisher v. Black and White Publishing Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 174.

Agreement.

2. The coy shall forthwith enter into an agreemt. &c. [As in clause 3 of Form 251, p. 643, supra. If needs be add any supplemental provisions as at p. 645, supra.]

Limit of
number of members and no public issues.

[2a. For a private coy as defined by sect. 121 of the Act, insert clause 307a. p. 959. infra, as to limit of number of members and no public issues.]

of shares.

3. The shares shall be under the control of the directors, &c. [Clause 5, p. 646, supra.]

Instalments.

4. If, by the terms of allotment of any share, &c. [Clause 10, p. 649, supra.]

Commissions.

5. The coy may at any time pay a commission, &c. [Clause 8 p. 648, supra.]

By sect. 89 of the Act commission may be paid by any company, and this includes a private company. See p. 279, supra.

Modification
of clause 3

6. In clause 3 of Table A. the words "extraordinary resolution shall be substituted for the words "special resolution."

To pass a special resolution takes about three weeks, whereas to pass an extraordinary resolution takes about ten days.

Modification
of clause 4

7 In clause 4 of Table A. the words "of the nominal amount" shall be inserted immediately after the expression "three-fourths," and the words "two-thirds of the nominal amount" shall be substituted for the expression "one-third." Form 252.

[In the case of a private company insert the following clause:—
"7a. Clause 5 of Table A. shall not apply."]

8. Save as herein otherwise provided the coy shall be entld to treat the registered holder, &c. [Clause 12, supra, p. 650.] Trusts not recognized.

This is in addition to sect. 27 of the Act as to no notices of trusts being entered on the register. Table A. has no similar clause.

9. The clause following shall be substituted for clause 9 of Lien. Table A.: The coy shall have a first and paramount lien, &c. [Clause 29b, p. 662, supra.]

10. The proceeds of sale of such shares (instead of being applied as in clause 11 of Table A. provided) shall be applied in payment of such debts, liabilities, and engagements as and when the period for the payment, fulfilment, or discharge thof resply arrives, and any surplus shall be pd to such member, his exors, admors, or assigns. Proceeds of sale.

11. In clause 12 of Table A. the words "and not by the terms of issue made payable at fixed times and " shall be inserted immediately after the words "their shares," and the words "time when the last preceding call was made payable" shall be substituted for the words "last call," and the following words shall be added at the end of the same clause, namely, "A call shall be deemed to have been made at the time when the resolution of the directors authorizing such call was passed." Successive calls.

[In the case of a private company insert clauses restricting transfer of shares, infra, p. 962 et seq.; or, at any rate, insert a clause as follows: "In clause 20 of Table A. the words 'not being fully pd-up shares' shall be omitted."]

12. In clause 23 of Table A. the words "where he becomes entld thereto by reason of such bankruptcy" shall be inserted immediately after the words "except that." Modification of clause 23.

13. At the end of clause 24 of Table A. the following words shall be inserted, namely, "and all expenses that may have been incurred by the coy by reason of such non-payment." Modification of clause 24.

14. In clause 25 of Table A. the words "and the place at which" shall be inserted immediately after the words "on or before which," and the words "and at the place" shall be inserted immediately after the words "before the time." Modification of clause 25.

15. At the end of clause 26 of Table A. the following words shall be inserted, namely, "Such forfeiture shall include all dividends declared in respect of the forfeited shares and not actually paid before the forfeiture." Modification of clause 26.

- Form 252. 16. In clause 28 of Table A. the word "presently" and the words "but his liability" and all subsequent words shall be struck out and the following words shall be substituted for the latter words so struck out, namely, "together with interest thereon from the time of forfeiture until payment at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a., and the directors may enforce the payment thereof if they think fit."
- Liability after forfeiture.
- No share warrants. 16A. Clauses 35 to 40, inclusive, of Table A. shall not apply.
- This is, of course, only imperative in the case of a private company.

Companies limited by Guarantee.

The special provisions of the Act of 1908 as to the formation of companies limited by guarantee are set forth in sects. 2, 4, 10 and 21, and provide as follows:—

2. Any seven or more persons (or, where the company to be formed will be a private company within the meaning of this Act, any two or more persons) associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the requirements of this Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company, with or without limited liability (that is to say), either:—

forming incorporated
company.

- (ii) A company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to such amount as the members may respectively thereby undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up (in this Act termed a company limited by guarantee):

4. In the case of a company limited by guarantee—

(1) The memorandum must state—

- (i) The name of the company, with "Limited" as the last word in its name;
- (ii) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is to be situate;
- (iii) The objects of the company;
- (iv) That the liability of the members is limited;
- (v) That each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up while he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before he ceases to be a member, and of the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up, and for adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specified amount.

(2) If the company has a share capital—

(i) The memorandum must also state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount;

(ii) No subscriber of the memorandum may take less than one share;

(iii) Each subscriber must write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes.

Registration of articles.

10.—(1) There may, in the case of a company limited by shares, and there shall in the case of a company limited by guarantee or unlimited, be registered with the memorandum articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum and prescribing regulations for the company.

(2) Articles of association may adopt all or any of the regulations contained in Table A. in the First Schedule to this Act.

(3) In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee the articles, if the company has a share capital, must state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered.

(4) In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, if the company has not a share capital, the articles must state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered, for the purpose of enabling the registrar to determine the fees payable on registration.

Provision as to companies limited by guarantee.

21.—(1) In the case of a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital, and registered on or after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and one, every provision in the memorandum or articles, or in any resolution of the company purporting to give any person a right to participate in the divisible profits of the company otherwise than as a member shall be void.

(2) For the purpose of the provisions of this Act relating to the memorandum of a company limited by guarantee and of this section, every provision in the memorandum or articles, or in any resolution, of any company limited by guarantee and registered on or after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and one, purporting to divide the undertaking of the company into shares or interests shall be treated as a provision for a share capital, notwithstanding that the nominal amount or number of the shares or interests is not specified thereby.

Where there is a share capital it can be increased or reduced under sect. 56 of the Act of 1908, which is as follows:—

Increase and reduction of share capital in case of a company limited by guarantee having a share capital.

56. A company limited by guarantee and registered on or after the first day of January nineteen hundred and one, may, if it has a share capital, and is so authorized by its articles, increase or reduce its share capital in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in and subject to which a company limited by shares may increase or reduce its share capital under the provisions of this Act.

As to the liability of members, see sect. 123 of the Act, sub-sections (i) and (v).

See also sect. 118, which provides that the forms set forth in the Third Schedule to the Act, or forms as near thereto as circumstances admit, shall be used. As to the liability of persons whose agents become members, see British Marine, &c. Co. v. Jenkins, (1900) 1 Q. B. 299.

In the case of a company limited by shares there must be a capital of nominal amount, and that capital must be divided into shares of fixed amount, and the holding shares is an essential feature of membership; for a person cannot be a member unless he is a shareholder, and every shareholder is a member. But there are many cases in which persons desire to form an association with limited liability on lines which cannot be brought within those traced out by the Act for a company limited by shares. It is to meet these cases that the Act of 1862, now replaced by the above sections of the Act of 1908, provided the alternative scheme of incorporation under which it is allowable to form a company limited by guarantee.

In such a company there is much greater elasticity, the utmost freedom. It may have a capital of nominal amount divided into shares like a company limited by shares, but there is no obligation to have any such capital or any capital at all, and therefore the holding of shares is in no sense an essential feature of membership. On the contrary, the terms on which membership may be constituted may be of the most various character, e.g., it may be provided that membership shall be constituted by insuring with the company or by subscribing to it, whether annually or otherwise, or by proposal and election.

A large proportion of the companies limited by guarantee from time to time formed are registered under a licence from the Board of Trade, pursuant to sect. 20 of the Companies Act, 1908, replacing sect. 23 of the Companies Act, 1867, exempting them from the use of the word "limited" as part of their name, and are associations formed for promoting commerce, art, science, religion, charity or other useful object; but many other concerns adopt this mode of incorporation as being better suited to their circumstances than the mode of incorporation adopted in the case of a company limited by shares, and, in particular, companies for insuring against various marine risks, companies for insuring against accidents, companies for indemnifying the members against liability to pay compensation in respect of accidents to employes, companies for trade protection purposes and for mutual information, companies for exploring, testing and realising mines, patents and concessions, companies for the pooling of shares and debentures in other concerns, companies for pooling and realising produce of various kinds.

In the case of companies registered without the word "limited" (supra, p. 495), the executive generally consists, not of directors, but of a committee, or of a council, or of a board of management, or of governors, and membership is very commonly constituted by election or by admission on subscription, or by bringing into the pool certain produce, and in some cases there is a president, a vice-president, a patron or patrons, besides subscribers, associates, &c.

Form 255 shows the form of articles which has sometimes been adopted in the case of a syndicate formed for the purpose of gain. It is in the nature of a skeleton form framed with a view to obtaining registration and capable of being subsequently modified by special resolution so as to meet the circumstances of the case. Form 257 shows the modifications which may be adopted by special resolution where the members are to be interested in different proportions.

Form 253 is an example of the regulations adopted by a company formed on the footing that membership is to be constituted by subscription or donation.

Articles of Association of a Company limited by Guarantee, with a Capital divided into Shares.

Prior to the Companies Act, 1900, companies limited by guarantee but with a share capital were occasionally registered, for they were exempt from some of the fetters imposed by the Act of 1862 on companies limited by shares, and in particular they could reduce their capital without the sanction of the Court, and thus it was possible to provide for realising and distributing the capital assets, or for redeeming the shares by drawings or otherwise, or for paying off capital not required; and all this could be done by special resolution, whereas in the case of a company limited by shares there must be a special resolution, and the sanction of the Court must be obtained and the consent of the creditors. But it seems unlikely that this mode of incorporation will hereafter be adopted, for by sub-sect. 1 of sect. 27 of the Companies Act, 1900 (reproduced in sect. 4 (2) of the Companies Act, 1908 (see supra)), the law was altered, and it was required that the capital should be specified in the memorandum of association. Thus the capital becomes a condition of the company's incorporation, and can only be altered if and so far as the Acts allow. Sub-sect. 1 of sect. 27 was curiously expressed, but it seemed that the words "subject to increase or reduction in accordance with the Companies Acts" indicated an intention that the provisions of the Acts of 1862, 1867, and 1877 as to increase and reduction should apply, although those provisions were in terms only applicable to companies limited by shares. It was to be noted that none of the other powers which by the Acts were expressly given to companies limited by shares were by sect. 27 made applicable to companies limited by guarantee and having a share capital, so that such last-mentioned companies, even if their capital had been duly stated in the memorandum of association, would not have power to consolidate their shares, to convert their shares into stock, to subdivide shares, or to issue share warrants. Nor are any of such "other powers" conferred on such companies by the Act of 1908. Sect. 56 of that Act (supra, p. 796) only refers to increase and reduction of capital. Accordingly, it can only be in very special circumstances that a company limited by guarantee with a share capital will be required. If in any case it is required to register such a company, the points to be borne in mind are:

- (1.) That the memorandum of association must specify not only the matters required by sect. 4 of the Companies Act, 1908, but also the capital of the company and the number of shares into which it is divided, and the amount of each share.
- (2.) That the capital should also be specified in like manner in the articles of association of the company.

Accordingly, Form 251 or 252 can be adopted, save that the clause in each case (6 or 6) referring to sect. 88 of the Companies Act, 1908, should be omitted, for that section applies only to a company limited by shares; and further, the clause referring to the statutory meeting should be omitted, for sect. 65 of the Companies Act, 1908, only applies to a company limited by shares.

Form 253.THE — ASSOCIATION.

Articles of Association of a Company limited by Guarantee without Share Capital; Council.

Interpretation.

1. In these regulations, unless there be something in the subject or context inconsistent therewith—

"The Association" means the above-named asson.

"The Council" means the members for the time being of the council hereby constituted.

"In writing" means written or printed, or partly written or partly printed.

Words importing the singular number only include the plural number and vice versa.

Words importing persons include corporations.

2. The subscribers to the memorandum of association of the association and such other persons as shall be admitted to membership in accordance with these regulations, and none others, shall be members of the association, and shall be entered in the register of members accordingly. Form 253. Members

3. There shall be three classes of members, namely, (1) permanent members, (2) life members, and (3) subscribing members.

4. The qualification of a permanent member shall be the payment at one time to the association of the sum of 100*l.* The qualification of a life member shall be the payment at one time to the association of 20*l.* The qualification of a subscribing member shall be the annual payment to the association of the sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* But the qualification of life members and subscribing members respectively shall be liable to increase or reduction as may from time to time be determined by vote of an extraordinary general meeting of the association. Qualification

For the purposes of registration, the number of members of the association is to be taken to be unlimited [or is to be taken to be limited to ...] but the council may from time to time register an increase or decrease of the number. Number for registration.

6. No person shall be admitted a member of the association in any class unless he is first approved by the council, and the council shall have full discretion as to the admission of any person to membership in any class. Approval by council.

7. Where any person desires to be admitted to membership of the association, he must sign and deliver to the association an application for admission framed in such terms as the council shall require, and such application must be accompanied by the sum of 100*l.*, or 20*l.*, or 2*l.* 2*s.*, according to the class in respect of which he desires to become a member. Application.

8. The privileges of a permanent member may be transferred by writing under his hand to any person approved by the council, and on the death of the permanent member his legal personal representative, or one of his legal personal representatives if more than one shall be entitled, subject to the approval of the council, to succeed to his rights of membership, or may transfer the same to some other person approved by the council, and the person so succeeding or taking by transfer shall become a permanent member, with the same rights as the permanent member through whom he claims. Transfer.

9. The privileges of a life member shall not be transferable during his life, and shall cease at his death. Where no transfer.

10. The privileges of a subscribing member shall not be transferable, and shall cease on his death, or on his failure in any year to pay his annual subscription on or before the 31st day of December in that year.

11. No infant, idiot, lunatic, or married woman shall be registered as a member of the association, nor shall two or more persons be registered as members of the association in respect of any one payment or annual subscription. If by any means the rights of membership become Infants, &c.

Duties of members.

12. Every member, whether a permanent, life, or subscribing member, shall be bound to further to the best of his ability the objects, interests, and influence of the assn, and shall observe all bye-laws of the assn made pursuant to the powers in that behalf hnftr contained.

Exclusion.

12a. Any member who shall fail in observance of any of the regulations or bye-laws of the assn may be excluded from the assn by resolution of a majority of at least three-fourths of the members of the council present, and voting at a special council meeting at which not less than twelve members shall be present. Such member shall have seven clear days' notice sent to him of the council meeting, and he may attend the meeting, but shall not be present at the voting or take part in the proceedings otherwise than as the council allows. A member excluded from the assn by such meeting may, within seven days next after notice of his exclusion, appeal from the decision of the council to a special meeting of the assn which shall thereupon be convened by the council.

Annulling exclusion.

13. A majority of not less than three-fourths of the members present at such last-mentd special meeting shall have power to annul the exclusion, or to annul it subject to the performance of any conditions which the meeting may think fit to impose.

Forfeiture.

14. A member so excluded shall forfeit all claim to a return of the money pd by him to the assn on his admission as a member thof, or by way of annual subscription, as the case may be, and shall cease to be a member of the assn.

Privileges.

15. The following shall be the privileges of the several classes of members, that is to say:—

- (1.) A permanent member shall be entld, &c.
- (2.) A life member shall be entld, &c.
- (3.) A subscribing member shall be entld, &c.

Meetings.

16. The following provisions as to general meetings shall have effect:—

Council.

17. There shall be a council for the management of the affairs of the assn, and the number of members of the council shall not be less than — or more than —, and the first members of the council shall be the following:—

Division of undertaking into fixed number of shares or interests

1. [Interpretation clause.]

2. For the purpose of registration the number of members of the coy was and is declared to be twenty, but the directors may register an increase in the number of members whenever they think fit

3. In order to determine the proportions in which the members for the time being of the coy are interested in the coy, the undertaking of the coy shall be deemed to be divided into a specified number of shares or interests, and the members shall be deemed to be interested in the coy in proportion to the number of such shares or interests for the time being registered in their respective names as here provided and until otherwise determined by special resolution the undertaking of the coy shall be deemed to be divided into 1,400 shares or interests numbered 1 to 1,400 inclusive. The members of the coy, at the time when these regulations come into operation, shall be deemed to be entitled to the said 1,400 shares or interests in equal proportions.

1. The number of shares or interests into which the coy is to be deemed to be divided may at any time by special resolution be increased to such extent as may seem expedient, and any additional shares or interests resulting from such increase may be appropriated and dealt with in such manner as the directors think expedient. Any preferential, qualified, or special rights, privileges, or conditions may be attached to any such additional shares or interests. The additional shares shall be numbered 1,401 and onwards.

2. Persons may become members of the coy by original subscription, or by admission or transfer, or by succession. The subscribers to the coy's memorandum of association are members by original subscription. Any person who hereafter desires to become a member by admission, increase his holding in the coy, must apply in writing to the directors for admission to membership or for an increased holding, and state in such application the number of shares or interests, or additional shares or interests, in respect of which he desires to become a member, and if there are any appropriated shares or interests, if any, the directors to accept or reject such application, and in the event of acceptance to determine the number of shares or interests in respect of which the applicant shall be admitted to membership or permitted to increase his holding, and the applicant shall become a member of the coy or additionally interested in accordance with such determination.

3. The register of members of the coy to be kept pursuant to section 25 of the Cos Act, 1908, shall, in addition to stating the names, addresses, and occupations (if any) of the members of the coy, state the number of shares or interests in the coy constituting the interests of such members respectively and the distinguishing numbers of such shares or interests respectively.

4. Any member may be admitted to membership or be permitted to increase his holding on the footing that he is to pay to the coy in respect of the shares or interests constituting his interest, or any of them, a specified sum per share or interest either by instalments when called for by the directors or otherwise, and the registered holder for the time being of any shares or interests in respect of which any money is so made payable shall pay the same as and when the same shall become due; but save as aforesaid, and save as provided by the memorandum of association, membership shall not impose on the member any liability to pay any calls or contributions.

5. If any member fails to pay any instalment call or other sum of money due from him, the directors may serve him with a peremptory notice to pay referring to this clause, and if he fails for fourteen

- Certificates. 9. Every member shall be entid to a certificate of membership in respect of his shares or interests in the coy, and such certificate shall be under the common seal of the coy.
- Lien of company. 10. The coy shall have a lien on the shares or interests of each member for the debts and liabilities of such member to the coy, whether alone or jointly with others, and in default of payment or satisfaction thof may sell such shares or interests, and apply the proceeds in or towards such payment or satisfaction.
- Transfers. 11. The shares or interests of any member in the undertaking of the coy, or any pt thof, may be transferred by instrument in writing in a form approved by the directors and signed by both the transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain the holder of the shares or interests transferred until the name of the transferee is entered in the register in respect thof. The directors may decline to register any transfer of any shares or interests in the coy upon which the coy has a lien or to a transferee of whom they do not approve.
- Closing of books. 12. The transfer books and register of members may be closed during such time as the directors think fit, not exceeding in the whole thirty days in each year.
- Transmission. 13. The exors or admors of a deceased member (not being one of several joint holders) shall be the only persons recognized by the coy as having any title to the shares or interests registered in the name of such member.
- Relinquishment. 14. A member of the coy may at any time, by notice in writing to the coy, relinquish his shares in the coy, and thereupon his name shall be removed from the register of members, and the shares thus relinquished shall be deemed to be the ppty of the coy, and may be disposed of as the coy thinks fit, and any shareholder may purchase any such shares if sold. The coy shall not be bound to recognize the relinquishment of a fractional part of a share.
- A power to relinquish is one of the characteristic features of a cost-book mining company.
- Validity 15. A statutory declaration in writing by the directors, or any two or more of them, that a share has been relinquished shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated as against all persons interested in the share; and that declaration and the receipt of the directors to the purchaser of the share for the price thereof, if sold, shall constitute a good title thereto, and the purchaser shall be entered in the register of members as the holder of the share sold, and thereupon Form 256 he shall be deemed the holder thereof, discharged as against the company from all unpaid calls, interest and expenses, due to the company in respect thereof accrued before his purchase, and he shall not be bound to see to the affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale.

16. The company in general meeting may from time to time determine Meetings.
 the times and places at which ordinary general meetings (hereafter called "ordinary meetings") shall be held, and such determination shall have continuing effect until otherwise determined, and notice of every such determination shall be given to the members, and thereafter whilst such determination remains in force no further or other notice of any ordinary meeting need be given; but in any other case at least seven days' notice of an ordinary meeting shall be given to the members, and such notice shall state the time and place at which the meeting is to be held, and in the case of a resolution proposed to be passed as an extraordinary or special resolution the terms thereof.

17. In the case of an extraordinary general meeting (hereafter called Notice an "extraordinary meeting") at least seven days' notice shall be given to the members, and such notice shall state the time and place at which the meeting is to be held and the general nature of the business to be transacted thereat.

Any of the assets for the time being of the coy shall be distributable as aforesaid by way of dividend. No larger dividend shall be declared than the directors recommend. The directors may declare such interim dividends as in their opinion the position of the coy justifies.

Rights of members in winding-up. 50. In the event of a winding-up of the coy, the assets distributable amongst the members shall belong to them in proportion to their shares or interests in the undertaking, but this provision shall be without prejudice to any preferential, qualified or special rights affecting the shares or interests of any of the members.

Unlimited Companies.

Comparatively few companies—as might naturally be expected—have been formed under the Act of 1862 (now replaced by the Companies Act, 1908), as unlimited companies. The principal requirements of the Act of 1908 in regard to the registration thereof are set forth in sects. 2 and 5 of the Act. By sect. 5 the memorandum merely has to give particulars as to name, office, and objects; but it must be accompanied, as required by sect. 10, by articles of association.

Memorandum of unlimited company.

8. In the case of an unlimited company—

(1) The memorandum must state—

- (i) The name of the company;
- (ii) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is to be situate;
- (iii) The objects of the company.

(2) If the company has a share capital—

- (i) No subscriber of the memorandum may take less than one share;
- (ii) Each subscriber must write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes.

Form 256.

And these articles may adopt all or any of the provisions in Table A.; and if the company has a capital divided into shares, the articles must state the amount of capital with which the company proposes to be registered, and if it has not a capital divided into shares, then the articles must state the number of members with which the company is to be registered. But there is no obligation to have a capital divided into shares, and, if desired, the company, instead of having a capital divided into shares, can have a common stock of some nominal amount, or the articles may provide that the undertaking shall be deemed to be divided into a specified number of shares of no nominal amount, and that the members shall be entitled to participate in profits in proportion to the shares held by them respectively.

Not long since the last-mentioned form of constitution was adopted by a concern which had been for many years carrying on business upon the cost-book mining system prevalent in Devon and Cornwall, although it was not in fact a mining company. The reason for registration was that the concern desired to obtain the advantages of incorporation and to escape from the inconveniences of the partnership system, and, further, was desirous of being in a position to increase the number of its members to more than twenty without becoming an illegal association (see supra, p. 109), and this form of constitution was adopted as approaching most nearly to that of the cost-book mining company.

Where an unlimited company is to have a capital of nominal amount divided into shares, the articles may follow pretty closely those set forth in Form 251, p. 642, but the capital must be specified in the articles of association as required by sect. 10 (3) of the Act of 1908, and clauses 6 and 56 of Form 251 could be omitted, for sects. 88 (Return of Allotments) and 65 (Statutory Meeting) of the Companies Act, 1908, do not apply to an unlimited company.

Where an unlimited company has a capital divided into shares, each subscriber must, as provided by sect. 5 (2) (i) of the Act of 1908, take one share at the least and must write opposite to his name in the memorandum of association the number of shares he takes. Looking to the scheme of the Act, these words "memorandum of association" are probably a mistake for articles of association; and it is to be noted that in Form D. in the Third Schedule to the Companies Act, 1908, no shares are set opposite the signatories' names in the memorandum, whereas in the accompanying articles the number is set opposite each name. However, it seems desirable in the circumstances to set the number of shares opposite the name in both the memorandum and articles, and in the articles, just before the signatures, the words following must be inserted: "We, the several persons whose names and addresses are subscribed, agree to take the number of shares in the capital of the company set opposite our respective names." See Form D. above referred to.

It must be borne in mind that where an association is registered as an unlimited company, it is always open to the members to re-register it as a limited company under the provisions of sect. 57 of the Companies Act, 1908. The fees on registering a company as an unlimited concern are very trifling, and it is only when it comes to be registered or re-registered as a limited concern that the ultra vires capital duty becomes payable. This being so, it is in some cases convenient in the first instance to register a concern (e.g., a private company) as an unlimited company, so that its name may for a while remain unchanged, and afterwards, when some death or event occurs rendering it practicable or expedient to obtain limited liability, the concern can, without any dislocation or disturbance, be re-registered as a limited company.

shares.

The coy is to be at liberty at any time to give notice in writing to any holder of shares in the coy of its desire to redeem the same at par; that is to say, at a price equal to the capital paid up thereon, and upon payment of the redemption price the holder's name shall be removed from the register of members.

An unlimited company can redeem shares in its capital if its regulations authorize the same. Borough Commercial, &c. Soc., (1893) 2 Ch. 242

MISCELLANEOUS CLAUSES.

For Use in Articles of Association.

The directors may purchase or acquire, upon such terms and under such stipulations as to guarantee or otherwise as may be agreed upon, the business and goodwill of the sd Messrs. . . as the same now stands.

Form 259.

Power to acquire business.

The above was the authority given to the directors of Overend, Gurney & Co., limited. "There is the largest possible power given to these gentlemen to buy this, which was in itself a speculative business, and they are to do it entirely in such manner as they may think expedient." Per Lord Hatherley, Overend, &c. v. Gurney, 4 Ch. 715.

It was held that the above power authorized the directors to purchase the business and to undertake the liabilities thereof. "I have no doubt whatever," said Lord Chelmsford, "that the words 'as the same now stands' must mean that the business is to be taken over with its credits and liabilities, that is, as the business appeared in the books of the company." S. C., L. R. 3 H. L. 505. It is usual, however, in empowering directors to acquire a business, expressly to refer to the liabilities.

The directors may purchase, or otherwise acquire, and undertake, upon such terms and conditions as they think fit, the business of a . . . now carried on by Messrs. . . & Co., at . . . and all or any part of the ppty and liabilities of the sd firm in connection with the sd business.

Another power to acquire business.

In nine cases out of ten, where the acquisition of a specified business or property is in contemplation, the articles refer to a particular agreement instead of containing a general power as above. See p. 643.

Classes of Shares.

At times the rights attached to the different classes of shares are set out in the memorandum of association (see Forms 210 et seq.); this renders them inalterable (Ashbury v. Watson, 30 C. Div. 376), unless the memorandum, whether by reference to the articles or otherwise, gives power to modify. Walsby & Co. v. Gas Light Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87, supra, p. 376; Underwood v. Union Marine Hall, Ltd., (1891) 2 Ch. 309, infra, p. 818. The decisions, however, in Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 361, and the above cases, show that rights attached by the articles only may be altered by special resolutions (supra, p. 376), and accordingly it is generally thought better to take power by the memorandum to divide the shares into different classes (supra, p. 490), and then by proper clauses in the articles to declare the rights of each class.

These clauses, which come into Form 251 at (about) clause 13, are usually intitled "Preference and Ordinary Shares," or "Preferred and Deferred Shares," or as the case may be, and generally commence with a statement as to the capital, e.g., "Of the capital mentioned in the memorandum of association, 10,000 shares shall be called preference shares and 10,000 shall be called deferred shares," and then the clauses proceed to define the rights of the holders. But where the division is effected by the memorandum of association, the clauses defining the rights of the shareholders can be intitled "Appropriation of Profits" and inserted near the beginning of the articles or just before the dividend clauses.

As to the form of the dividend clause where there are preference shares, &c., see supra, p. 763, note to clause 116.

In defining the rights of the holders of preference shares in regard to dividends, one of the first questions to be settled is whether the dividend payable to them is to be non-cumulative, i.e., contingent on the profits of each year being sufficient to pay the preference dividend, or cumulative, i.e., so that any deficiency of one year is to be made up out of the profits of subsequent years.

Preference Shareholders.

In determining this question and the rights generally of the holders of preference shares it is necessary to consider what priorities and privileges must be attached to the shares, and at the same time how these priorities and privileges will affect the other classes of the company's shareholders and its interests generally. The following are some of the principal points:—

- (1) Whether the dividend to be attached thereto is to be cumulative or non-cumulative.

The term "cumulative preferential dividend" means a dividend payable out of the profits generally in priority to the subordinate class or classes of shares, so that if the profits of one year are not sufficient to pay the dividend for that year, the deficiency accumulates as against subsequent profits, and has to be cleared off before any dividend can be paid on the subordinate class or classes. On the other hand, a non-cumulative preferential dividend means a dividend payable as regards each year out of the profits of that particular year only in priority to the subordinate class, so that if the profits of the year are insufficient, the deficiency is extinguished instead of being carried forward as against subsequent profits. There is or may be a great difference in point of security between preference shares with a cumulative dividend and preference shares with a non-cumulative dividend: for in regard to the former, if the dividend for any year be passed, there is at any rate the certainty that it will have to be paid before the subordinate shares get any dividend in the future, whereas with a non-cumulative dividend, if any year should happen to be unfortunate, the preferential dividend for that year may be entirely lost, each year being treated as a separate venture.

But the added security of the cumulative preferential dividend carries a corresponding disadvantage, for cases sometimes arise in which, there being a cumulative dividend and a series of bad years, an overwhelming arrear of preference dividend accumulates, and thus postpones for a lengthened period any possibility of dividend on the subordinate shares, the holders of which may see no chance of benefit otherwise than by liquidation, and thus the two classes of shares are brought into conflict.

It is not essential, in defining preferential rights, to use the word "cumulative," for prima facie, where one class of shares is to carry dividend at a fixed rate in preference to another class, the dividend is cumulative, that is, not limited to the particular year, and therefore payable out of the profits whenever accruing. See Henry v. Great Northern Rail. Co., 1 De G. & J. 606; Matthews v. Great Northern Rail. Co., 28 L. J. Ch. 375; Foster v. Cole, 22 T. L. R. 555; Webb v. Earle, 20 Eq. 557. In the case last mentioned preference shares had been created with a preferential dividend of 10 per cent. per annum payable half-yearly; and it was held that, although the word "cumulative" was not used, the dividend was in point of law cumulative. Of course, when the word "cumulative" is used, the question whether the dividend is or is not cumulative is concluded; and although formerly it was customary not to use the word in the clause or resolution defining the rights of preference shareholders, the word is now generally used, and in some cases regarded as a specially attractive feature. Occasionally, where a dividend is intended to be cumulative, the form adopted is to say that the holders of the shares shall have a right to resort to the profits of subsequent years to make up any deficiency in the dividend of preceding years. But this is only the word "cumulative" "writ large," and whilst it provides for making good the deficiency, it unnecessarily points to the possibility of a deficiency, which is not generally considered politic.

Where the dividend is to be non-cumulative, the clause must either be so framed that there is no room to contend that it is cumulative, e.g., by providing that as regards each year the dividend for that year shall be payable out of the profits of that year only, or it may be expressly provided that there shall be no right in case of deficiency to resort to subsequent profits. See Form 262. It is not usual to frame the clause so as to attach to the shares the right to "a non-cumulative preferential dividend" at the rate of so much per cent., for the words "non-cumulative" do not point to any specific time. They do not indicate whether, if the profits of a month or of six months or a year are insufficient, the deficiency is not to be carried forward. Sometimes the terms in which the rights attached to preference shares are stated are very imperfectly expressed. See Staples v. Eastman's, & Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 303, in which case a dividend was held to be non-cumulative, although the wording of the clause was ambiguous. It is not easy to reconcile this case with Matthews v. Great Northern Rail. Co., supra. See also Miln v. Arizona Copper Co., 36 S. L. R. 711.

- (2) Whether the dividend is to be PERMANENTLY attached or is only to be preferential for a term of years or until a particular period shall have arrived.

Prima facie a preferential dividend is permanent, that is to say, will remain preferential as long as the shares exist; but occasionally it is considered expedient to provide that in certain events the dividend shall cease to be preferential, e.g., when a dividend at a specified rate has for a specified term of years been paid on some subordinate class of shares. See Form 266. See also Forms 271 and 273 as to the conversion of preference shares into ordinary shares.

- (3) Whether the dividend is to be paid out of the PROFITS made before carrying anything to reserve, or only out of the profits available after carrying to reserve what may be thought expedient.

This is a very material matter, more especially if the dividend is non-cumulative. Where the dividend is cumulative and profits are carried to reserve, the right to the dividend is only postponed; but where the dividend is non-cumulative and the directors are to be at liberty to carry as much as they think fit to reserve, they are in a position to carry the whole of the profits of any particular year to reserve, and thus to extinguish once for all the preference dividend for that year. However, as a general rule, it is desirable to leave the directors with a free hand to carry what they think fit to reserve. Any derogation from that power must be detrimental to the company. See Henry v. Great Northern Rail. Co., 1 De G. & J. 606; Burland v. Earle, (1802) A. C. 83, and Wemyss Collieries Trust v. Melville, 8 F. 143, Ct. of Sess. No doubt, in the result, where the dividend is non-cumulative, the position will be more or less precarious; but it is generally assumed that the directors will act fairly in the matter, and if in any particular case special precautions are desired, there is no difficulty in providing that where profits applicable to the payment of the dividend are carried to reserve there shall be a right to resort to subsequent profits to a corresponding extent. As to the mode in which provision should be made for carrying to reserve, this is sometimes done by providing, as in Form 264, that the profits which it shall be from time to time determined to distribute shall be applied in paying preferential dividend, &c., for these words obviously leave the company at liberty to carry to reserve as much as it chooses. Sometimes, too, the provision as to the application of the profits expressly provides that the profits of each year shall be applied first in paying to reserve so much as the directors consider expedient, secondly in the payment of the preferential dividend, and so on. In all cases the question whether the company can carry to reserve in priority to the dividend depends on the construction of the documents. As a general rule, where the provision for reserve empowers the directors, "before recommending any dividend," to set aside out of the profits such sums as they think fit as a reserve fund, those words enable the directors to set aside in priority to a preferential dividend. Bond v. Barron Hematite Steel Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353. So, too, where there is a provision for reserve, and the articles in some subsequent clause provide that, "subject as aforesaid, the profits of the company shall be divisible" in a certain way—e.g., see supra, pp. 763, 764—and there may be other provisions which indicate or emphasize the intention that the reserve fund shall rank before the preference dividend. In a recent case, where the regulations provided that the profits from time to time available for dividend should be dealt with in a particular way, and there was a reserve fund clause providing for the setting aside "before recommending any dividend," it was held that the words "available for dividend" meant the net profits after deducting all sums properly deducted by the directors before arriving at the amount payable to dividend—including, therefore, provision for reserve fund. Fisher v. Black and White Publishing Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 174.

- (4) Whether the preferential rights in regard to dividend are to be fixed and limited to so much per cent. per annum, or whether there is also to be a right to participate in SURPLUS PROFITS, e.g., after paying a dividend at a specified rate on the ordinary shares.

Generally the preferential rights are limited to so much per cent. without any further right to participate, but it is not altogether uncommon to attach to preference shares the right to participate to some extent in surplus profits. In such case the shares are sometimes called "participating preference shares." Whether there is or is not to be such a right depends on the terms of the articles. It is generally assumed that where the preference shares are given a fixed preferential dividend at a specified rate, that impliedly negatives any right to take any further dividend, and probably this assumption is well founded; but where preference shares are given a preference as regards capital, that does not impliedly exclude them from sharing in the surplus assets in winding-up after clearing off the whole of the paid-up capital. Esparto Lend, & Co., (1909) 2 Ch. 187. It is therefore open to contention that the attachment of a preferential dividend does not impliedly exclude the right to participate in surplus profits after paying a like dividend on the subordinate shares. In order, however, to preclude any question on this point, it has for some time past been customary to insert express words negating the right of preference shareholders to participate in further profits. See Form 261.

If preference shares are to get a share of surplus profits, the question arises whether they shall rank pari passu with the subordinate shares after those shares have received a specified dividend, or whether they shall receive an aliquot portion of the surplus profits, e.g., 10 per cent., or whether the dividend on the preference shares shall rise automatically in proportion as the dividend on the ordinary shares rises beyond the specified figure. In a successful company, preference shares which give a right to participate pari passu with ordinary shares in surplus profits may be of great value—perhaps of greater value than the ordinary shares—but preference shares which take even an extra one or two per cent. may be largely augmented in value.

- 5) Whether the preferential dividend is to be paid at a rate per cent. calculated on the CAPITAL PAID UP on the preference shares or calculated on the nominal amount thereof.

As a general rule, it is provided or intended that the dividend on preference shares shall be paid at the specified rate on the capital for the time being paid up thereon; but not uncommonly this intention is very imperfectly expressed, and where it is provided merely that the shares shall carry a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of so much per cent. per annum without saying "on the capital for the time being paid up thereon," grave questions arise as to whether such last-mentioned words can be implied. Certainly the words "dividend on the shares" are perfectly sensible if they are treated as referring to the nominal amount of the shares, and the difficulty is to justify the addition by implication of the words "capital paid up" on the shares. Sometimes the addition may be justified by reference to some other provision in the articles, e.g., one providing that all dividends shall be paid or calculated on the amount of the capital paid up; but where the context affords no such indication it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the preference dividend ought to be calculated on the shares, not on the amount paid up. In Crum v. Tankbank Co., 8 App. Cas. 65, it was contended that dividend must always be payable in proportion to the capital paid up; but the House of Lords rejected the argument and decided to the contrary, holding that a provision for payment of dividend to the members "in proportion to their shares" meant in proportion to the nominal amount of their shares, and one of the grounds for arriving at this conclusion was that otherwise a shareholder who had paid up nothing on his shares would get no dividend although the company had had the benefit of his liability. See p. 764, supra.

- (6) Whether there is to be attached to the preference shares any special right of VOTING, or whether the rights of voting attached thereto are to be restricted or only to be available in certain cases or for certain purposes.

Formerly it was not usual to distinguish between the preference shares and the ordinary shares as regards voting. They were all treated as interested alike in the company and given the same right of voting, but for many years past it has been customary to give only qualified voting rights to preference shares. See supra, p. 703. Sometimes preference shareholders are given no right of voting whatsoever at general meetings; but the London Stock Exchange does not generally approve of this. Sometimes the holders are not given any right of voting at general meetings unless on questions specially affecting them—as, for instance, winding-up or sale of the undertaking or reduction of capital. Sometimes preference shares are given rights of voting on a modified scale—for example, one vote for every two preference shares against one vote for every ordinary share. In any case the matter is one of great importance, for if the preference shares have full voting rights they may be able to direct the proceedings of the company in a manner opposed to the interests of the ordinary shareholders; they may be in a position, for instance, to elect directors and to control their proceedings, and to restrict the development of the business; and they may [unduly] exercise their powers in their own favour and in a selfish spirit, for the interests of the two classes are very commonly more or less in conflict, the interest of the preference shareholders being to preserve the business on a safe basis sufficient to produce their preference dividend, whereas the interest of the ordinary shareholders is to increase it, and for that purpose to incur some risks, if necessary.

- (7) Whether the preference shares are to have any preference as regards RETURN OF CAPITAL in a winding-up or in relation to a reduction of capital.

Unless otherwise provided by the articles, or by the resolution creating the preference shares, preference shares do not confer any capital priority in winding-up. London India Rubber Co., 5 Eq. 519. Thus, if there be both preference shares and ordinary shares, the assets in a winding-up available for distribution amongst the members are prima facie applicable to the paying off of the whole of the paid-up capital, and the surplus is to be distributed amongst the members in proportion to the shares held by them of either class. Birch v. Cropper, 14 App. Cas. 525. But in many cases it is thought expedient, with a view to placing the preference shares or for other reasons, to give to the preference shares a preference as regards capital, so that in a winding-up the assets available may be applicable first to the payment of the capital paid up on the preference shares. See Forms 261 and 265; and see Re Bangor Co., 20 Eq. 59. Such a preference is expected nowadays, and is regarded as very necessary; for if the profits are insufficient to pay a dividend on the ordinary shares, and the preference shares have no preference in winding-up, the holders of the ordinary shares may be strongly disposed to wind up and reconstruct, so as to extinguish the preferential rights and bring the preference shares down to the level of the ordinary. The preference shareholders having a priority as to capital operates as a deterrent to such a proceeding by the ordinary shareholders. The giving, too, of such a preference is some compensation for cutting down the voting rights and depriving the preference shareholder of the right to participate in surplus assets.

Where preference shares are not given a preference in winding-up, and their right to participate in the surplus is not negatived or restricted, it is settled that the surplus remaining after paying off the preference shares and the capital paid up on the ordinary shares is distributable amongst both classes in proportion to the shares held by them respectively. Birch v. Cropper, supra. But very commonly it is desired to negative the right of the preference shareholders to participate in such a surplus, and accordingly words are inserted to the effect that the holders shall not be entitled to participate any further in the profits or assets (see Form 261), or that the assets in winding-up are to be applied first in paying off the capital paid up on the preference shares and that the balance shall belong and be distributable amongst the ordinary shareholders. See Form 302. Occasionally preference shareholders are given a limited right to participate in surplus assets: e.g., a right to have the surplus assets applied first in paying off the preference capital; secondly, in paying off the ordinary capital; and then, as to not exceeding (say) one-tenth of the surplus, in paying to preference shareholders a bonus of 10 per cent., and the balance to the ordinary shareholders. Sometimes preference shares are given the right, in a winding-up with a view to reconstruction or amalgamation, to a bonus or premium. See Form 264. To give to preference shareholders a right to participate in surplus assets may, if they have large voting rights, constitute a serious danger to the ordinary shareholders.

- (8) Whether arrears of dividend on the preference shares are in a winding-up to have any priority.

Cases sometimes arise in which it is desired to give to the preference shareholders priority in a winding-up not only as to capital, but also "as to arrears of dividend [whether declared or not] up to the commencement of the winding-up." The words in brackets are inserted because a right in winding-up to priority as regards dividend, means declared dividend. South African Supply and Cold Storage, Byrne, J., 17 Feb. 1904.

Prima facie a preference dividend is payable only out of the profits made whilst the company is a going concern, and it wants special provision to give the holders a right to have the arrears paid out of assets in winding-up. Crichton's Oil Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 86.

Where preference shares are given a preference as to arrears of dividend and the words "whether declared or undeclared" are not used, it is sometimes contended that arrears means only dividends declared but not paid. In most cases, however, this contention cannot avail, for a dividend once declared becomes a debt [supra, p. 765] and is entitled as such (subject to sect. 123 (1) (vii) of the Act) to payment out of the assets before anything is divisible among the members as such.

Hence, to construe the provisions for payment of arrears of preference dividend as dealing with payment of such a debt would render the provision superfluous.

Then it is said that arrears as applied to a dividend accrued but not declared is a misnomer, but this is not so; the word is commonly used in that sense, see Buenos Ayres and Ensenada Act, 1884, Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Act, 1885, Cordoba Central Railway Company Act, 1897, infra, "Private Acts"; and see Crichton's Oil Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 93, in which Collins, M. R., used the expression "arrears of dividend in former years in which no dividend was declared." However, to preclude controversy it is not uncommon to insert the words "whether declared or undeclared." See supra, p. 765.

Where preference shares are given a preference in winding-up as regards dividends, it has been held that in the winding-up the arrears are only payable out of profits. W. J. Hall & Co., (1909) 1 Ch. 521; and Espuela Land, &c. Co., (1909) 2 Ch. 187.

Sometimes when the dividend on preference shares gets into arrear for several years the question arises whether there is any priority as between the several years' arrears. Prima facie there is not any right to priority; the arrears are all payable out of a common fund; there is no charge and nothing to give priority. See Molver's case, 5 Ch. 424. It rests therefore with the company in declaring or paying a dividend in respect of the arrears to indicate, if it chooses, the particular year or other period in respect of which the payment is made. But, of course, the words used may be sufficient to give priority. e.g., "each year's dividend to rank for payment in priority to subsequently accruing dividends on such shares."

- (9) Whether the rights attached to the preference shares are to be alterable by any means.

In some cases it is desired to render the rights attached to the preference shares unalterable. This can be done on the formation of the company by setting out those rights in the memorandum of association, and providing there in clear terms how the profits shall be applied, and how the assets in winding-up shall be dealt with. See Ashbury v. Watson, 30 C. D. 376, in which case the memorandum of association expressly provided how the profits should be dealt with, and the Court of Appeal held that this specification was a "condition" within sect. 12 of the Companies Act, 1862 (Companies Act, 1908, s. 41), and accordingly came within the words of that section that "save as aforesaid no alteration shall be made by any company in the conditions contained in the memorandum of association." See supra, p. 430. But very commonly it is not desired to render the rights so attached unalterable, and accordingly a clause is inserted in the memorandum giving power to alter, as in Form 214, and this is effective. Welsbach Incandescent Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87; and see Underwood v. London Music Hall, Limtd., (1901) 2 Ch. 309. Another plan is to attach the preferential rights by the articles, and insert in the articles a clause (see supra, p. 683, clause 50) allowing of the alteration of the rights of classes, subject to consent of separate meetings of the classes. Whether in the absence of any such clause the rights can be altered by special resolution has not yet been settled; but Andrews v. The Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 361, appears to point to the conclusion that they can be so altered (see supra, p. 481), or at any rate that by introducing a modification clause, as at p. 685, and afterwards exercising the powers conferred by that clause, it is possible to modify the rights. And see Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co., 34 Ch. D. 287; and British Equitable Assurance Co. v. Baily, (1906) A. C. 35. If anything unfair or oppressive to the preference shareholders were being done by a majority of the other shareholders, no doubt a Court of equity would interfere by injunction. Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Co., L. R. 9 Ch. 350; Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656. Not uncommonly the memorandum of association contains an express provision that "the rights attached to any preference shares are not to be altered otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of clause — of the accompanying articles of association," that is to say, of the modification clause. Supra, p. 685. The object of this provision is to fortify the status of the preference shares and to prevent an alteration of their rights by special resolution, unless with the sanction of a class meeting. Sect. 45 of the Companies Act, 1908, now provides for the reorganization of a company's capital with the sanction of the Court.

- (10) Whether the company is to be at liberty to issue preference shares ranking in PRIORITY to or pari passu with the original preference shares.

It has generally been assumed that where a company issues a series of preference shares, it cannot issue any preference shares or any shares ranking in priority to or pari passu with them unless on the issue express power so to do has been reserved, as in Form 468. The question whether the company has such a power turns generally on the memorandum and articles of association of the company. Where the memorandum provides unconditionally that the profits of the company of each year shall be applied first in paying the dividend on the preference shares in the original capital, there is, of course, no question that further shares cannot be issued in prejudice to the rights thus given (Ashbury v. Watson, 30 C. D. 376); and it may be that if the memorandum creates preference shares and confers on them a right to a fixed preferential dividend, it would be held that this means a preferential dividend in priority to all other shares. But very commonly the memorandum of association, even where it contains such words, contains other words providing for the creation of further shares with preferential rights attached thereto, and these words may be and often are sufficient to show that the preferential rights attached to the original preference shares are not to be incapable of postponement. Underwood v. London Music Hall, (1891) 2 Ch. 309; Welsbach Incandescent Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87. Sometimes, however, the additional words so referred to expressly provide that none of the preferential rights attached to the original capital are to be affected. Where, however, the preferential rights are defined only in the articles of association or by resolution, it is not so easy to be sure in any particular case that the company cannot create pre-preference shares or shares ranking pari passu with original preference shares. No doubt, in Harper v. Paquet (infra, Form 741), Jessel, M. R., granted an injunction restraining the issue of pari passu preference shares; but that was only an interlocutory injunction, and Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. had not been then overruled by Indraes v. The Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 361. Certainly the last-mentioned case points to the conclusion that preferential rights may in some cases be altered by special resolution. See, however, some dicta of Romer, J., in Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1900) 1 Ch. 656.

Second Preference and Preferred Ordinary Shares.

Sometimes a class of shares called "second preference" or "preferred ordinary" or "B" shares is created. These shares usually rank as regards dividend and the preference shares and before the ordinary shares. In all be the rights attached thereto, many of the questions regard to preference shares have to be taken into account, and in the questions whether the dividend is to be cumulative, or non-cumulative, whether there is to be any special right of voting, and whether the shares as regards capital are to rank before the ordinary shares or pari passu with them.

Ordinary Shares.

Usually very little has to be said in regard to the rights of the ordinary shareholders. They take whatever is left, regard being had to the rights of the prior classes of shares; and accordingly, if there are not any founders' shares or other shares to interfere with their rights, the position is clear enough. Nevertheless the question whether they are to participate in profits in proportion to the capital paid up thereon, or in proportion to the nominal amount of the shares, is one which has to be considered, for, unless otherwise provided, they rank for dividend in proportion to the shares held. Again, it is sometimes material to consider whether it is desirable to depart from the ordinary rule as to the distribution of assets in winding-up. According to that rule, as appears above, where different amounts are paid up on the shares the excess is in the first place to be paid off, and the balance of assets is distributed pari passu; but this is not always considered just. See clause 152, p. 783. As regards the right of voting, it is usual to provide for this in express terms. Unless otherwise provided, every member of the company has one vote. See sect. 67 (iv) of the Act of 1908.

Founders' Shares and Deferred Shares.

At times the capital of the company consists in part of founders' shares or deferred shares. They usually give to the holders a right to a share of the surplus profits of each year which remain after paying the preference dividend and a fixed dividend on the ordinary shares, and also the right to share in the surplus assets in winding-up. Sometimes the share of profits thus given is 10 per cent., sometimes 20 per cent., sometimes 50 per cent., and sometimes the whole of the surplus profits is given. Where the rights are large it is generally thought expedient to attach them by provisions in the memorandum of association, so as to fortify to the utmost the position of the holders; at other times it is thought expedient to embody them in the articles of association, so as to facilitate alterations in the rights attached if it becomes desirable to make such alterations, and in order to secure the position it is easy to insert a clause in the memorandum providing that alterations shall not be made without the sanction of a meeting of the holders of shares of the class. Various questions of importance arise in regard to defining what shall be the rights attached to founders' and deferred shares, and in particular whether the share of profits to be assigned to them shall be a share of the surplus remaining after paying the fixed dividends, e.g., 10 per cent. of such surplus, or whether it shall be a share of the profits of the year payable out of the surplus profits after paying the fixed dividends for the year. Again, the important question as to whether the founders are to get a share of the surplus after carrying to reserve or before carrying to reserve has to be considered, and whether, if funds are carried to reserve which might otherwise be applied in payment of dividend, the founders are still to retain an interest in the reserve.

Sometimes founders' shares are given a right to participate in profits pari passu with the ordinary shares. This is more especially adopted where the founders' shares are given to vendors. In such case it may be provided that the founders shall take a certain proportion of the profits of each year, the ordinary shares to take the balance (see Form 219), or that each 1/100 founders' share shall rank for dividend as if it were a 10/100 ordinary share fully paid up. And see pp. 581, 587 et seq., supra.

The number of founders' or management or deferred shares, if any, and the nature and extent of the interest of the holders in the property and profits of the company must be stated in any prospectus issued by the company. Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 81 (1) (a).

Form 261.

Capital divided into cumulative preference shares and ordinary shares. (Simple form.)

The initial capital shall be divided into — preference shares of £— each and — ordinary shares of £— each, and the said preference shares shall confer the right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of — p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being paid up thereon, and the right in a winding-up to payment off of capital [and arrears of dividend, whether declared or undeclared, up to the commencement of the winding-up] in priority to all other shares [or to the ordinary shares], but shall not confer any further right to participate in profits or assets.

In the above case the dividend is cumulative, and there are words sufficient to exclude the holder's right to participate in surplus profits and in any surplus assets, which in a winding-up may remain after paying off the whole of the paid-up capital. See supra, p. 814. As to giving a further right in a winding-up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, see supra, p. 816.

For resolutions creating preference shares of various kinds, see infra, p. 821 et seq.

Non-cumulative dividend with no right to participate in surplus.

The initial capital of the company shall be divided into — preference shares of £— each and — ordinary shares of £— each, and the said preference shares shall confer the right to a fixed preferential dividend at the rate of £— p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being paid up thereon, payable as regards each year out of the profits of such year available for dividend, and the right in a winding-up to repayment of capital [with a bonus of £— p.c. thereon] in priority to all other shares [or to the ordinary shares], but shall not confer any further right to participate in profits or assets. Form 262.

(Occasionally a dividend is cumulative but to a limited extent. Thus the clause may provide that "such dividend shall as regards each year be payable out of the profits of that year, and if they shall be insufficient the deficiency shall be payable out of the surplus profits of the next following year which shall remain after paying the preferential dividend for that year, but the deficiency shall not be payable out of any subsequent profits.")

1. Of the shares mentd in the memdum of asson of the coy, 10,000 shall be called preference shares and 10,000 shall be called ordinary shares.

2. The holders of the preference shares shall be entld to receive out of the profits of each year available for dividend a preferential dividend for such year at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being pd up on the preference shares held by them resply.

3. The surplus profits of each year available for dividend shall be applicable to the payment of dividends to the holders of the ordinary shares in proportion to the capital pd up thon.

4. The coy reserves power to pay off the capital pd up on the preference shares out of profits or otherwise and to cancel same subject to the sanction of the Court.

See Didco Pier Co., (1891) 1 C. 354.

Sometimes, where preference shares are to carry a non-cumulative dividend, it is thought better to frame the clause as above rather than expressly to provide that there shall be no claim for arrears in case of deficiency in the profits of any one year.

As to the words "available for dividend," see supra, p. 814.

The sd preferred ordinary shares shall, subject as hnfr provided, confer on the holders the rights and privileges following, that is to say:—

- (1) The right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 7 p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being pd up thon.
- (2) The right, whenever in respect of any year a dividend at the rate of 10 p.c. is pd on the capital pd up on the ordinary shares, to a further dividend for such year out of surplus profits at the rate of 3 p.c. on the capital pd up on the sd preferred ordinary shares.
- (3) The right in a winding-up to have the capital pd up on such preferred ordinary shares, and all arrears of dividend, whether declared or not up to the commencement of the winding-up, pd off in priority to any payment off of capital on the ordinary shares, but without any further right to participate in profits or assets, save that if the winding-up is with a view to reconstruction or amalgamation the preferred ordinary shares shall also confer on the holders the right to be paid a premium on the then preferred ordinary shares at the rate of 5s. per share, with the like priority as regards such premium.

Of the 50,000 shares of 5l. each in the initial capital of the coy. 20,000 shall be preference shares and 30,000 shall be ordinary shares. The said preference shares shall confer the right to a fixed cumulative preference dividend at the rate of 7 p.c.p.a. on the capital paid up thereon and the right, whenever the surplus profits of any year (available for dividend) remaining after payment of such dividend to the close of that year shall be more than sufficient to pay a dividend for that year at the rate of — p.c. on the capital paid up on the ordinary shares, to participate in the surplus profits of the year available for dividend rateably with the holders of the ordinary shares in proportion to the capital paid up on such shares, whether preference or ordinary, and [the right, in a winding-up, to payment off of capital and any arrears of dividend, whether declared or not, up to the commencement of the winding-up, in priority to the ordinary shares, and to participate in any surplus assets which may remain after paying off the remainder of the capital pari passu with the ordinary shares, in proportion to the amount held].

The capital, &c. The said preference shares shall confer on the holders the right to a fixed dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being paid up thereon, and the right to one-fourth of the surplus profits of each year available for dividend; but until the whole of the said preference shares shall have been issued, the said one-fourth shall be reduced to a sum bearing the same ratio to the full amount as the amount of the issued preference shares bears to the full amount of the said preference shares.

1. The holders of the guaranteed preference shares shall be entitled to a cumulative preferential dividend of 8 p.c.p.a. on the nominal amount of the preference shares held by them respectively.

2. Subject to the rights of the holders of the guaranteed preference shares, the holders of the ordinary shares shall be entitled to be paid out of the surplus profits of each year available for dividend a dividend at the rate of 10 p.c.p.a. for that year on the amount credited as paid up on the ordinary shares held by them respectively.

3. The residue of the surplus profits of each year available for dividend shall belong to and be divided among the members in proportion to the shares held by them respectively.

4. If at any time before the — day of —, 19—, the dividend paid to the holders of the guaranteed preference shares in respect thereof shall amount in the aggregate to 80 p.c. on the nominal amount, then and in such case the preference hereby given to such shares shall cease to exist, and thenceforth the guaranteed preference and ordinary shares shall rank pari passu in dividend.

Guaranteed

shares.

It is by no means unusual to insert such a clause as above.

As already mentioned (supra, p. 764), the provisions as to payment of preferential dividends are sometimes inserted in a clause introduced in that part of the articles which relates to the payment of dividends. Such provisions are also desirable where the memorandum sets out the rights attached to one or more classes, but the provisions must, of course, accord with the memorandum.

Contingent termination of preference.

1. The profits of the company made during the financial year, or other period comprised in the accounts submitted to the ordinary general meeting in each year and available for dividend, with any profits carried forward from past years, shall be applicable in order of priority and manner following:—

First. To the payment of a cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital paid up on the A. shares to the close of such period.

Secondly. To the payment of a dividend for such period at the like rate on the capital paid up on the B. shares.

Thirdly. The residue shall be applicable to the payment of a further dividend on the paid-up capital, or may be carried to reserve, or otherwise dealt with as the company in general meeting determines.

See Peruvian Co., (1894) 3 Ch. 690, where directors were held entitled to their percentage on the profits which had been reasonably and bona fide ascertained, although the assets representing the same had subsequently become depreciated.

2. Of the residue, three-fourths shall be divided among such of the members holding not less than five shares each as shall have contributed to the coy's business during such year or other period rateably in proportion to the amount of the freight contributed by them resply.

3. What remains shall be divided among the members in proportion to the nominal amount of the shares held by them resply.

Occasionally profits are divided so as to give members an inducement to deal with the company. This plan has sometimes been adopted with great success.

Form 273. Any registered holder of preference shares afsd may, subject to the approval of the directors, elect to have his preference shares, or any of them, converted into ordinary shares ranking in all respects pari passu with the 10,000 original ordinary shares afsd. Such election shall be declared by notice in writing to the coy, signed by such holder and accompanied by the certificate relating to the shares to be converted; and if the directors approve of such conversion they shall resolve that such conversion be approved and have effect, and the same shall have effect accordingly, and thereupon the certificate aforesaid shall be cancelled, and the requisite alterations shall be made in the company's register of members. Form 273.

In the above case the directors are given a discretion, but sometimes the shareholder is empowered to convert, and it is provided that upon service of the notice the share shall ipso facto be converted.

If the holders of two-thirds of the shares numbered 2,001 to 3,000, inclusive, in the original capital (hereafter referred to as "the irredeemable shares") at any time within five years from the date of incorporation of the company notify in writing to the company their desire that the shares numbered 1 to 2,000, inclusive, in the company's capital (hereafter referred to as "the redeemable shares") shall be converted into preference shares, then and in that case such shares shall thereupon ipso facto be converted into preference shares with the following special rights attached thereto, that is to say, the said preference shares shall carry a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being paid up thereon respectively, but no further dividend, and shall rank, both as regards capital and dividend, in priority to the irredeemable shares; and notice of such conversion shall be given to the holders thereof, and they shall be bound to give up their certificates for indorsement or in exchange for fresh certificates, and until this has been done shall not be entitled to receive any of the rights of membership incident to such shares. The said shares after conversion shall continue to bear the same numbers as before. Form 273a.

Power to holders of certain shares to convert others into preference shares.

(1) Any holder of preference shares for the time being in the initial capital may convert his preference shares, or any of them, into ordinary shares, and any holder of ordinary shares in the initial capital may convert his ordinary shares, or any of them, into preference shares, and the following provisions shall apply to such conversion, that is to say:— Form 274.

Conversion of preference and ordinary shares.

- (a) The holder who desires so to convert must give to the company notice in writing of his desire, and such notice must specify by number the shares he desires to convert, and must be accompanied by the certificate relating thereto.
- (b) Upon the receipt of such notice and certificate, the company shall record the conversion in its register of members, and thereupon the conversion shall take effect, and a fresh certificate or certificates shall be issued in respect of such of the shares so converted.

(1) Preference shares resulting from such conversion shall rank in all respects as preference shares in the initial capital.

(2) The holders for the time being of two-thirds of the preference shares for the time being in the capital of the coy may at any time notify in writing to the coy their desire that all the preference shares in the coy's capital shall be converted into ordinary shares, and upon the receipt of such notice the coy shall record the same in its register of members, and thereupon all the preference shares shall ipso facto become ordinary shares, and the holders of certificates relating to the preference shares so converted shall forthwith surrender to the coy the certificates relating thereto, and in place thereof the coy shall issue fresh certificates; and after a general conversion under this clause the provisions of the last preceding clause shall cease to operate, and thenceforth all the shares in the initial capital shall be ordinary shares.

Where there is a government subsidy or guarantee, provisions for securing British control are sometimes required, e.g., as follows:—

Form 274a.

Provision for securing British control.

1.—(1.) It is to be regarded as a cardinal principle of the coy that it is to be and remain under British control, and accordingly.

(a) No foreigner shall be qualified to hold office as a director of the coy or to be employed as one of the ppal officers of the coy.

(b) No share in the coy shall be held by, or in trust for, or be in any way under the control of any foreigner or foreign corporation or any corporation under foreign control.

(2.) In this clause the expression "foreigner" means any person who is not a British subject, and the expression "foreign corporation" means any corporation other than a corporation established under and subject to the laws of some part of his Majesty's dominions, and having its ppal place of business in those dominions.

The expression "corporation under foreign control" includes

(a) A corporation of which the majority of the directors or persons occupying the position of directors by whatever name called, are foreigners;

(b) A corporation, shareholders in which holding shares or stock conferring a majority of the votes are foreigners or foreign corporations, or persons who hold directly or indirectly for foreigners or foreign corporations;

(c) A corporation which is by any other means, whether of a like or of a different character, in fact under the control of foreigners or foreign corporations;

(d) A corporation, the executive whereof is a corporation within (a), (b), or (c).

And the expression "ppal officers" of the coy shall be deemed to mean and include persons holding the following or any analogous positions: Form 274a.

- (i) General manager;
- (ii) Assistant general manager;
- (iii) Secretary;
- (iv) Assistant secretary;
- (v) General superintendent;
- (vi) Assistant general superintendent;
- (vii) Marine superintendent;
- (viii) Assistant marine superintendent;
- (ix) Superintendent engineer;
- (x) Assistant superintendent engineer;
- (xi) Masters and officers and engineers in charge of a watch on board any of the coy's ocean steamships.

(3.) Whenever a majority of the directors certify in writing that there is, in their opinion, reason to believe that any share in the company is, in violation of sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph (1) of this clause, held by or in trust for, or in any case under the control of, a foreigner or foreign corporation or any corporation under foreign control, the directors shall call on the holder of such share to prove to their satisfaction that the share in question is not so held, and unless within three weeks thereafter such proof is given, the directors shall serve such holder with a requisition in writing to transfer such share to some properly qualified person approved by them, and unless such transfer is duly made and delivered to the coy within three days after the service of such requisition the directors shall sell the share at the market price to any properly qualified person approved by them, and may authorize any officer of the coy to execute on behalf of the holder a transfer of such share to the purchaser, and a transfer executed under such authority shall be valid and effective, and the purchase-money shall be paid to the coy, whose receipt shall be a good discharge, and shall be paid over by the coy to the late holder on his application.

(4.) As from the time when any such certificate as aforesaid is signed up to the time when such proof of aforesaid is given, or such transfer is registered, the share referred to in such certificate shall not confer on the holder or owner any right to vote.

(5.) The prohibition in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph (1) of this clause shall not apply where the holding by, or in trust for, or under the control of, a foreigner or foreign corporation, or a corporation under foreign control, existed at the time when this clause came into operation, and so long as such holding exists, and paragraph (2) of this clause shall be qualified accordingly.

Form 274a. 2. Every transfer of any share must contain a declaration as follows, namely:—

- (a) Where the transfer is not to a corporation a declaration by the transferee (1) that he is a natural-born British subject, and has never taken the oath of allegiance to any foreign sovereign or state, or has otherwise become a citizen or subject of any foreign state; or (2) that he is a person naturalized by or in pursuance of an Act or ordinance of the proper legislative authority in a British possession, and has taken the oath of allegiance to his Majesty, and is a British subject, and, in either case, that there is not any arrangement under which he will hold the said shares or any of them in trust for, or in any way under the control of, any foreigner or foreign corporation, or any corporation under foreign control, in contravention of the provisions of clause 1 of; or
- (b) Where the transfer is to a corporation a declaration by some official officer of such corporation, duly authorized by such corporation to make the same, that such corporation is not a foreign corporation, or a corporation under foreign control, within the meaning of clause 1 of, and that to the best of his knowledge there is no arrangement under which the transferee is to hold such shares or any of them in trust for, or in any way under the control of, any foreigner or foreign corporation, or any corporation under foreign control, within the meaning of clause 1 of.

And where the directors think fit they may, before passing any such transfer, require such further evidence in support of any such declaration, whether by statutory declaration or otherwise, as they think fit.

3. Before registering any person as a member under either of the last preceding clauses of the directors shall require the person proposed to be registered to provide a declaration as follows:—

- (a) Where the person to be registered is not a corporation, a declaration by such person to the effect set forth in paragraph (a) of clause 2 of;
- (b) Where such a person is a corporation, a declaration in writing by some official officer of such corporation, duly authorized by such corporation to make the same, to the effect set forth in paragraph (b) of clause 2 of.

And where the directors think fit they may, before registering, require such further evidence in support of any such declaration, whether by statutory declaration or otherwise, as they think fit.

Form 274b. The rights of a member as such shall be personal, and accordingly shall not, without the consent in writing of all the members, be transferable except as hereinafter provided, and accordingly, if any member shall die or become bankrupt or be found lunatic, his shares shall be transferred to such person or persons, whether a member of the company or not, as shall by writing served on the company be nominated by the other members for the time being of the company, and upon receiving such nomination the directors shall by resolution appoint some person to transfer the shares to such nominee or nominees, and a transfer by such person shall be effective, and the transferee or transferees shall be registered as the holder or holders of the shares and as against the former registered holder, and all persons claiming through him shall be absolutely entitled to the same, and after such registration the regularity of the proceedings shall not be questioned. Form 274b.

In this case it is supposed that the company is a benevolent or quasi-charitable company.

Management of one Company by another Company.

Clauses to this effect are sometimes substituted for the director clauses. See an alternative in Form 276.

A limited company may be a director or the sole director of another company if it has the requisite power. Bulawayo Market Co., (1907) 2 Ch. 458.

1. The A. Coy. Limtd (hereafter called the A. Coy), shall be the first managers of the coy.

2. When the A. Coy cease to be managers, this coy in general meeting may appoint any other persons or coy to be managers, and a general meeting shall forthwith be convened for the purpose by the A. Coy, or if that coy does not convene the same within seven days after they cease to be managers, then the meeting shall be convened by the holders of more than half of the issued capital for the time being of this coy.

3. The managers shall be entld to charge and retain out of the assets of the coy the sum of £— p.a. as remuneration, and shall, in addition, out of the assets of the coy pay all outgoings for clerks, agents, offices, travelling and other expenses in relation to the business of the coy.

4. The managers may regulate and conduct their proceedings as such in such manner as they may from time to time determine, and may delegate all or any of their powers, authorities, and discretions as managers to such persons, and on such terms and conditions, as they think fit, and may revoke or vary any such delegation, and until otherwise determined by the managers they shall be deemed to have delegated all the powers, authorities, and discretions vested in them by the regulations of the time being of this coy to the directors for the time being of the A. Coy, who shall accordingly be deemed deputy managers of this coy.

5. Inasmuch as this coy may have dealings with the A. Coy, it is expressly declared that this coy may make any contract with that coy

Form 275a. 1. Until otherwise determined by the coy in general meeting in accordance with clause — hof, the directors for the time being and from time to time of the A. B. Syndicate, Limtd, shall be the directors of this coy, and such determination is huftr referred to as the termination of the interim management.

Another.

2. The coy, by resolution passed at an ordinary general meeting held in the year 1912, or in any subsequent year, may determine that the management provided for in clause — shall cease, but such determination shall not come into operation until a board of at least three directors shall have been duly elected, and with a view to such election the meeting at which such resolution is passed shall stand adjourned for three weeks, to be held at the same time and place, and notice of the resolution shall be given to the members, and at the adjourned meeting it shall be allowable to elect directors. A resolution for such determination as afsd shall be valid whether the notice convening the meeting at which it was passed did or did not specify the intention to propose such resolution.

3. After the termination of the interim management, the number of the directors shall, unless the coy in general meeting otherwise determine, be not less than three nor more than seven.

4. After the termination of the interim management, the directors shall have power, &c.

In the clause providing as to notice of general meeting, it was mentioned that amongst the ordinary business was the determination of the interim management.

Form 276. The sd A., B., C. and D. [i.e., four of the directors named in the articles] shall be deemed to have been appointed by the trees of the trust deed constituting the first debenture stock of the coy, and they, and their successors in office appointed under this clause shall be called the "debenture directors." The debenture directors shall be entld to hold office until requested to retire by the trees or tree for the time being of the sd trust deed, and accordingly they shall not be bound to retire by rotation or be subject to clauses — — and hof. As and whenever a debenture director vacates office, whether upon request as afsd or by death or otherwise, the trees or tree afsd may appoint another director in his place. A debenture director shall not require any qualification. A debenture director may at any time, by notice in writing to the coy, resign his office.

Debenture
directors.

The holders of the debentures of the coy known as "prior lien bonds" shall be entld to have one nominee on the directorate of the coy, and the holders of the debenture stock of the coy shall be entld to have two nominees on the directorate of the coy. The nominee or nominees of each class so entld shall be appointed by a meeting of such class, convened and constituted as hnfr provided, and may be removed at any time by a like meeting of the same class. A meeting of each class afsd may be convened by the coy whenever any nominee for the time being of such class vacates office, and a meeting of either class shall be convened by the coy whenever it is served with a requisition in writing specifying the purpose for which the meeting is required, and signed, where the meeting is for the removal of a nominee, by the holders of at least one-half in value of the class, or in any other case by the holders of at least one-tenth in value of the class; and if the coy fails for seven days after being so served to convene the meeting to be held within twenty-one days of such service, the requisitionists, or the majority in value of them, may themselves convene the meeting. Not less than ten days' notice must be given of every such meeting; but where it is convened by requisitionists, the notice may be given by advertising the same twice in the "Times" newspaper. At any such meeting the holders of one-fifth in value of the class shall constitute a quorum, and the meeting may appoint a chairman. But, subject as afsd, all the provisions hof as to extraordinary general meetings of the coy, including votes, adjournment notices, minutes, and otherwise, shall apply as nearly as may be to such meeting. Notice in writing of any such appointment or removal shall forthwith be given to the coy by such person as the meeting making the same shall authorize in that behalf.

Another.

The trees or tree for the time being of the will of A. B., deceased, may at any time appoint the sd N. B. to be a permanent director of the coy, and in that case he shall be entld to hold office as a permanent director until the determination of the trusts of the will of the sd A. B., or until the sd N. B. resigns or dies, whichever event first happens; and if the sd N. B., or any successor appointed under this clause, resigns or dies before the determination of such trusts, the sd trees or tree may appoint any person to be a director in the place of the sd N. A director who is abroad or about to go abroad may, with the approval of the directors, appoint any person to be an alternate or substitute director during his absence abroad, and such appointment shall have effect, and such appointee whilst he holds office as an alternate director shall be entld to notice of meetings of the directors, and to attend and vote thereat accordingly; but he shall not require any qualification, and he shall ipso facto vacate office if and when the appointor returns to the United Kingdom, or vacates office as a director, or removes the appointee from office, and any appointment and removal under this clause shall be effected by notice in writing under the hand of the director making the same.

Such a provision is occasionally used, but the London Stock Exchange generally objects to it.

Form 281.

Assistant
directors.

The directors from time to time and at any time may appoint any other persons to be assistant directors of the coy, and may define, limit and restrict their powers, authorities, and discretions, and may fix and determine their remuneration, duties, immunities, and qualifications, and may remove any director so appointed. Unless otherwise determined by the directors, the qualification of an assistant director shall be the holding of shares or stock of the nominal value of 1,000l. An assistant director may act before acquiring his qualification.

Appointment of ships' husbands.

The firm of A. and B. (which now consists of the sd A., B., C., D. and E.), and their successors, shall be appointed to, and shall hold, the office of ships' husbands of the coy so long as they are able and willing to act as such, or until they shall be removed by extraordinary resolution; and any firm which, by death or retirement of any partner, or by the admission of any new partner or otherwise, shall from time to time, and at any time hereafter, succeed to the business now carried on by the sd existing firm, shall, for the purposes of this clause, be deemed the successors of the sd existing firm, provided that some member of the sd existing firm is a member of such succeeding firm.

The qualification of the firm for the office aforesaid shall be the holding by members of the firm, or some or one of them, of capital of the coy of the nominal value of £—. The firm may act before acquiring their qualification, but shall vacate office if they do not acquire the same within three months after becoming ships' husbands.

The firm may regulate their proceedings in such manner as they from time to time think fit, and, unless otherwise arranged among themselves, any two members of the firm which shall for the time being hold the office aforesaid may exercise all the powers, authorities and discretions hereby vested in or assigned to the firm. Form 289.

The appointment of the firm to the office aforesaid shall be made by a contract in the terms of the agreement secondly referred to in clause hof, and the provisions of such agreement, as regards the powers, authorities, discretions, remunerations, and proceedings and otherwise, shall have effect.

If the firm for the time being entitled under clause — hof to hold the office aforesaid shall become disqualified or shall decline to act, the directors may appoint any persons or firm to the office aforesaid upon such terms as may seem expedient.

Inasmuch as the firm, from the nature of their office, will always be under current liability to the company, the shares held by them or any of them in excess of those necessary under clause — hof, may be transferred from any lien on the part of the company, and clause — hof shall be controlled accordingly.

Managers and Consultative Committee.

1. There shall be managers of the company who shall (save as regards the first managers) be from time to time appointed by extraordinary resolution of the company. The first managers shall be A. and B., of —. The managers need not be members of the company. The remuneration of the managers shall from time to time be settled and arranged between them and the company in general meeting. The managers may regulate their proceedings in such manner as they from time to time think fit, and they shall be under no obligation to hold board meetings; and, unless otherwise arranged among themselves, each of the managers may exercise all the powers and discretions hereby vested in the managers collectively. The managers shall not both absent themselves from the United Kingdom at the same time without the sanction of the consultative committee. Form 290.

Provisions for

2. The management of the business and the control of the company shall be vested in the managers, who, in addition to the powers, authorities, and discretions by these presents expressly conferred upon them, may exercise all such powers and do all such acts and things as may be exercised or done by the company, and are not hereby or by statute expressly directed or required to be exercised or done by the company in general meeting.

3. The managers may appoint, and at their discretion remove or suspend, such sub-managers, secretaries, officers, clerks, agents, and servants for permanent, temporary, or special services as they may from time to time think fit, and may invest them with such powers, authorities, and discretions as they may think expedient, and may fix their salaries or emoluments.

Form 290.

4. The managers may from time to time provide for the management of the affairs of the coy abroad in such manner, &c.

5. There shall be a consultative committee, consisting of not less than three or more than seven members of the coy. It shall be for the coy in general meeting to determine who shall be the members for the time being of the consultative committee. The consultative committee may act notwithstanding any vacancy in their body.

6. A member of the consultative committee shall vacate office, &c., &c.

7. No manager shall be disqualified by his office from contracting with the coy, either as vendor or otherwise, or participating in any benefits placed at the disposal of the members.

8. The functions of the consultative committee shall be to advise the managers as to the conduct of the coy's business, and such other functions as may be assigned to them by the coy in general meeting. Where the committee gives any advice to the managers, the managers shall act in accordance with such advice, unless otherwise directed by a general meeting. In this clause, managers shall be deemed to include the persons who shall be appointed to conduct the business of the coy in the absence abroad of the managers.

Sometimes it is provided that various things shall only be done with the approval of the committee, and the committee may be given power to give directions, general or special.

9. The consultative committee may meet together for the transaction of business, adjourn and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit. The managers, or any member of the committee, may at any time convene a meeting of the committee. Until otherwise determined, two members of the committee shall be a quorum. Questions arising at any meeting of the committee shall be decided by a majority of votes, and in case of equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote. A meeting of the committee may elect a chairman. A resolution in writing, signed by the majority of the members of the committee, shall be deemed equivalent to a resolution passed at a meeting of the committee duly convened and held.

Form 291.

Executive committee.

The directors may from time to time appoint an executive committee, consisting of not less than two and not more than five of the directors, and the following provisions shall apply thto, that is to say:—

(a) The directors may from time to time determine which of their body shall be members of the executive committee, and the directors may at any time modify, dissolve, or reconstitute the executive committee, and may make such regulation in regard thereto as the directors may think expedient.

Form 291.

- (b) The executive committee shall, subject to any regulations the directors may from time to time make, be competent to exercise all or any of the powers, authorities, and discretions vested in or exercisable by the directors.
- (c) The meetings and proceedings of the executive committee shall be governed by the provisions herein contained for regulating the meetings and proceedings of the directors so far as the same are applicable thereto, and are not superseded by any regulations made by the company as aforesaid.
- (d) The directors may from time to time fix and determine the remuneration to be paid to the executive committee, and such remuneration may be by way of salary, commission on, or participation in, profits or otherwise, or by all or any of those modes, and shall be in addition to any remuneration payable to the members of the committee, as directors or otherwise, under the provisions hereof.

Any debentures issued by the company, and any trust deed for securing the same, may be in such form and contain such provisions as the directors think fit; and in particular any such debentures or trust deed may provide that during such period as any of the debentures remain outstanding, no transfer of shares in the company's capital, other than fully paid-up shares, shall be made, and that the company and its directors shall not perform any specified acts without the sanction of the trustees or trustee for the time being acting on behalf of the holders of such debentures; and that during such period any such trustees or trustee shall have a right to attend all meetings of the directors or of any committee of the directors, and to have previous notice of all such meetings, and to examine all or any of the books and documents of the company; and that during such period the debenture holders, or any of them, shall be entitled to attend and vote at general meetings of the company or general meetings for specified purposes, and shall have such number of votes at such meetings as may be specified; and that the debenture holders, or trustees or trustee of any such deed, shall have power to appoint any one or more director or directors of the company, and to remove any director so appointed; and all such provisions shall have effect and be binding on the company, and its directors and members, for the time being accordingly.

Form 294.

Whenever any shareholder in the company while a shareholder shall either obtain any patent for any mechanical or other invention or discovery connected with or likely to be useful in any part of the company's works or business, or shall make or become possessed of any such invention or discovery, he shall in the first instance make to the directors a written offer to sell the same to the company at the fair value, and upon the footing that any difference in regard thereto shall be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party in difference, and if the directors shall either decline such offer, or shall for the space of six calendar months next after such offer shall have been made, neglect to accept the same in writing, then and in such case the shareholder making such offer shall be at liberty forthwith to sell or otherwise deal with his said patent, invention, or discovery as he shall think most expedient for his own benefit, and in estimating the value or the price to be paid for the same by the company, the directors and the arbitrators, or any umpire respectively, may take into consideration how far the person making such invention or discovery has derived assistance therein from his being connected with or employed by the company, or from experiments made by or at the expense of the company with reference to such invention or discovery, and may make due allowance for such assistance.

Ascertainment of Profits.

Profits shall be ascertained by means of a balance-sheet specifying on the one side all the debts and liabilities of the company (paid-up capital and reserves being treated for this purpose as liabilities), and on the other side all the assets of the company (except uncalled capital) according to their respective values as determined by the directors with the assistance, when necessary, of expert advice, and the credit balance shall be considered profit, and any debit balance shall be placed to the debit of an subsequent balance-sheet until the same shall have been made good or cancelled.

Single account.

Form 296.

The above form was inserted where the parties desired the single account system to be adopted, and to preclude any suggestion that the double account system should apply.

The single account system is specially applicable to the case of companies which from time to time sell off part of their land, and to financial companies.

Form 297.

Separate capital and revenue accounts to be kept and dividends payable out of latter.

1. Separate accounts shall be kept as to the capital and revenue of the coy, that is to say, there shall be kept—

(1) A capital account specifying the nature and amount of all investments and securities, and all other assets in the nature of capital for the time being belonging to the coy, and such capital account shall be from time to time debited with all capital expenditure of the coy.

(2) A revenue account stating the resptive amounts of all dividends and income, and other returns in the nature of income, from time to time arising from the investments and securities afsd, and specifying the sources from which such dividends and income resply have been derived, and also stating under convenient heads the resptive amounts and sources of all other returns in the nature of income or revenue, and such revenue account shall be debited with all outgoings and expenditure not being capital expenditure.

2. Upon selling or purcha-ing any investment, or other transaction, the trees shall as nearly as possible adjust the rights as between the capital and revenue, and if, as regards any expenditure or otherwise, any question shall arise as to what pt thof is properly chargeable to capital account and what to revenue account, it shall rest with the trees to determine such question, and their determination shall be conclusive.

3. Without prejudice to clause 100 hof, the net revenue of the coy of each year shall be applicable as follows, that is to say:—

(a) To the payment of a dividend on the capital pd up on the issued shares at such rate as the coy in general meeting, on the recommendation of the directors, shall determine; and

(b) The surplus may be carried forward, or may be placed to reserve, or pt thof may be carried forward and pt may be carried to reserve as the coy, on the recommendation of the directors, shall determine.

The above form is a sample of the form of clauses adopted in one case on the assumption that the dicta in Lee v. Neuchâtel Co., infra, p. 890, might be relied on, but, having regard to subsequent cases, it is more than doubtful whether it can safely be adopted, for it provides for distribution of the income of the year notwithstanding past losses. See further, infra, p. 895 et seq. Form 298 goes further. Looking to Bond v. Barrow Haematite, (1902) 1 Ch. 353, it appears at any rate necessary to add to paragraph (2) of clause 1 the words "and with all losses of circulating capital."

Dividend shall only be payable out of the net revenue, and such net revenue for any year, or other specified period, shall be arrived at by an account showing on the one side all the income of the company during such year or other period actually received in respect of dividends, interest, commission, remuneration for services, or otherwise, whether received in cash, shares, debentures, or other assets, and on the other side all outgoings for such year or other period in respect of management expenses, rent, rates and taxes, interest on loans and advances, and commissions and other remuneration in respect of services rendered, and any other ordinary outgoings paid or payable, and also loss of circulating capital, and in so far as such income exceeds such outgoings the surplus shall be deemed to be net revenue of the company and shall be divisible accordingly, notwithstanding any loss or diminution in value of capital assets, and it shall be for the directors to determine what receipts are revenue within the meaning of this clause, and their determination shall be conclusive.

Form 298.

Another.

The above clause was used in the case of a company limited by guarantee, but having a capital divided into shares. Having regard to sects. 4 and 21 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, the clause as regards subsequently registered companies can only be relied on if it can be used in the case of a company limited by shares, and this is doubtful.

1. Save as otherwise from time to time determined by a general meeting, the business of the company shall be confined to that of acquiring, holding, and, as occasion may in the opinion of the directors require, disposing of investments and receiving the income thereof, and dealing with the same and such other matters incidental to the promises as are authorized by the memorandum and articles of association of the company.

Form 299.

How profits to be ascertained.

2. The expression "the profits of the company of each year," contained in clause 115, shall be deemed to mean the revenue of the company of each year from dividends and interest less all outgoings of the year for management expenses, interest on loans and advances, legal expenses, rent, rates, taxes, remuneration for services, and insurance, and accordingly, in ascertaining the profits aforesaid, it shall not be necessary to make good any losses or depreciation or diminution in value of any of the assets (except circulating capital). Nevertheless, the directors may, if they think fit, carry any of the profits ascertained as aforesaid to reserve as provided by clause 109 aforesaid. It shall be for the directors to determine any questions that may arise under or in relation to this clause, and their determination shall be conclusive.

The above clauses were adopted by a trust company which desired, as far as possible, to bring itself within the decision in Verner v. General & Commercial Trust Co., supra p. 833. See also, however, note to Form 297.

Arbitration.

Form 300.
Differences to be referred.

Whenever any difference arises between the coy, on the one hand, and any of the members, their exors, admors, or assigns, on the other hand, touching the true intent or construction, or the incidents or consequences of these presents, or of the statutes, or touching anything then or thereafter done, executed, omitted, or suffered in pursuance of these presents, or of the statutes, or touching any breach, or alleged breach, of these presents, or any claim on account of any such breach or alleged breach, or otherwise relating to the premises, or to these presents, or to any statute affecting the coy, or to any of the affairs of the coy, every such difference shall be referred to the decision of an arbitrator, to be appointed by the parties in difference, or if they cannot agree upon a single arbitrator to the decision of two arbitrators, of whom one shall be appointed by each of the parties in difference.

An arbitration clause is sometimes inserted, but, as a general rule, it may be omitted with advantage. See, further, the Arbitration Act, 1889.

That Act applies to submissions as well before as after the Act. Williams v Stepney, (1891) 2 Q. B. 257.

Balance-sheet to be kept Private.

Form 300a.
Balance-sheet not to be laid before
meeting

1. Once at least in every year the directors shall prepare, or cause to be prepared, a balance-sheet made up to a date not more than three months before the annual general meeting, showing the company's financial position. Such balance-sheets shall be signed on behalf of the board by two directors of the company, and the directors shall report to the annual general meeting as to the company's affairs and the amount (if any) which they recommend to be paid by way of dividend, and the amount (if any) which they propose to carry to the reserve fund. The report of the auditors on the accounts examined by them shall be read to the shareholders at the annual general meeting, and such report shall be open to the inspection of any shareholder.

2. The annual balance-sheet aforesaid shall not be laid before the company in general meeting, but it shall, on the three days preceding the annual meeting, be open to inspection at the company's office by any shareholder of the company desiring to see the same. No shareholder shall be entitled to make or obtain a copy of such balance-sheet, nor shall it be issued, circulated, or published.

Winding-up.

The assets of the coy in winding-up available for distribution among the members shall be applied, first, in repaying to the holders of the sd preference shares the amount pd up thereon; then in repaying to the holders of the deferred and other shares the amount pd up on such shares; and the residue (if any) shall be divided among the members in proportion to the nominal amount of the capital held by them resply.

Form 301.

How surplus assets to be distributed.

In the absence of special provision, the holders of preference shares stand in a winding-up on a level with the holders of the ordinary shares, that is to say, their preferential dividend ceases at the commencement of the winding-up, and they can claim no preference on the return of capital. London India Rubber Co., 5 Eq. 519; Griffith v. Paget, 6 C. D. 511; Re Barrow Haematite Steel Co., 38 Ch. D. 582; Birch v. Cropper, 14 App. Cas. 525. See p. 577, supra.

Where the company has proved in the bankruptcy of a shareholder for the uncalled liability on his shares, and has received a dividend of less than 20s. in the £, that does not entitle the trustee in bankruptcy to rank as a fully-paid shareholder in a subsequent winding-up. West Coast Goldfields, Rowe's Trustee's Claim, (1905) 1 Ch. 597; affd. (1906) 1 Ch. 1.

If the coy shall be wound up, the assets available for distribution among the members shall be applied, in the first place, in repaying to the holders of the A. shares the amount pd up thereon, and the residue shall belong to the holders of the B. shares.

In the event of the coy being wound up the assets then available for distribution among the members shall be applied, first, in repaying to the holders of the shares, other than those to be issued pursuant to the sd agreement of the — day of —, the full amount pd up on the shares held by them resply; secondly, in paying to the holders of the shares, to be issued pursuant to the sd agreement, the amount credited as pd up thereon; and the residue (if any) of such assets shall belong to and be divided among the members in proportion to the nominal amount of capital held by them

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.Procedure at General Meetings.

Procedure at general
meetings.
The chairman.

The articles generally provide that the chairman (if any) of the board of directors is to take the chair at every general meeting, whether ordinary or extraordinary. See p. 698. But there are certain events in which the articles commonly leave the selection of the chairman to the shareholders present at the meeting.

At the time appointed for the meeting, the person (if any) who is entitled according to the articles to preside should at once take the chair. If there is no such person present, the members, after the lapse of a proper interval, usually fixed by the articles, should elect a chairman. This will be effected by passing a resolution, duly proposed and seconded, "That Mr. — be appointed chairman of this meeting." Some leading shareholder will propose this.

On the chairman taking the chair, the secretary should lay before him an agenda paper.

Quorum.

The chairman, having taken the chair, will ascertain that a proper quorum of members is present. This depends on the articles. Sometimes a specified number forms a quorum, and sometimes a specified number holding a certain amount of the capital. Very commonly the quorum for an ordinary meeting is different from that of an extraordinary meeting. See p. 693, supra. In order to ascertain that a quorum is present, it may be necessary to refer to the register of members and share ledger, and accordingly they should be brought to the meeting.

If there is not a quorum present within the time fixed by the articles, the meeting must be dissolved or adjourned, according to the provisions of the articles. See p. 699, supra.

Reading of notice and minutes.

If, however, it appears that a proper quorum is present, the chairman should announce the fact, and should then call on the secretary to read the notice convening the meeting. This having been done, the secretary, according to the practice of some companies, will be required to read the minutes of the last general meeting; and the chairman will then say, "Gentlemen, with your approval, I propose to sign these minutes as correctly entered." Upon this debate may arise, but the only question should be whether they are a correct record of what passed, and the chairman should keep the discussion to the point. The minutes, if found correct, or when corrected, will be signed by the chairman. The object of signing is to obtain the benefits conferred by sect. 71 of the Act of 1908. See p. 745, supra.

There is no legal necessity thus to read and confirm the minutes. In some companies the chairman of the meeting to which the minutes relate signs them as soon as they are entered up.

After these preliminaries, the meeting will proceed to transact the business for which it was convened.

At an ordinary meeting the first step will be for the chairman to refer to the directors' report, which will probably be taken as read, and make a speech in relation thereto, concluding with a motion, "That the report and accounts be received and adopted." This having been seconded, the chairman will put the question to the meeting as follows:

Ordinary business, report, &c

"The question is, That the report and accounts be received and adopted." This is the stage for discussion, and members will probably rise and speak in support of or opposition to the motion. The chairman should name those who rise to address the meeting.

It is not necessary apparently, that every one who wants to speak should be heard, or that any speaker should be heard at an inordinate length. "As to the closure," says Chitty, L. J., in Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corp., (1898) 2 Ch. 469, 483, "I think if we laid it down that the chairman, supported by a majority, could not put a termination to the speeches of those who were desirous of addressing the meeting, we should allow a small minority, or even a member or two, to tyrannize over the majority . . . we should put a weapon into the hands of the minority which might involve the company in all-night sittings. . . . I am not, of course, saying that the majority must not listen to reasonable arguments for a reasonable time."

When the discussion has been brought to a close, the chairman will rise and reply to any criticisms which have been made, and to any relevant questions that have been asked, and will in conclusion finally put the question thus: "The question is, That the report be adopted. Those who are in favour of the motion hold up one hand . . . 30, and the contrary . . . 10. I declare this motion carried" or "negatived".

question.

The articles very commonly provide that every question shall be decided in the first instance by a show of hands, and where this is the case a show of hands must be taken; but even if there is no such provision, a show of hands should be taken, for that is the common law mode of taking the sense of a meeting. See p. 699. Upon a show of hands the chairman will look to the number of hands only, and will not take into account the votes which the owner of each represents in person or as proxy. See p. 699. In other words, in the absence of a poll hands only count.

hands.

Though it is not uncommon to declare the number of hands in favour of or against a motion, the chairman is not bound to make such declaration.

Poll.

The chairman having declared the result, a poll may be demanded in accordance with the articles, or the Act. As to polls, see further, supra, pp. 699—702, and infra, p. 850.

A poll may, unless the articles otherwise provide, be taken either at once or at some future day. The articles generally vest in the chairman the right to determine this point—when the poll shall be taken.

Generally speaking, it is more convenient, if the articles allow, to take the poll at once, but there may be cases in which an adjournment is desirable, e.g., where it will require many hours to take the poll.

The poll having been taken, the chairman will state the result, and will declare the fate of the motion accordingly.

Adjournment

When a poll has been granted and the chairman has fixed some future period for taking it, e.g., "Monday next, the —th instant, between the hours of — and —, at the registered office of the company," or "here, so soon as the other business of the meeting shall have been transacted," there is no objection to the meeting transacting in the meantime any other business which it is competent to transact. If there be none such, the meeting will probably be adjourned till after the taking of the poll. If the poll is to be taken at a future day, the meeting will be adjourned to a subsequent day; if it is to be taken at once or after the transaction of the other business the meeting will be adjourned for a short time, but no adjournment is necessary, for the poll is part of the business of the meeting. Where the company is a small one, the taking of the poll may be effected in a very short space of time, and in such case no adjournment may be necessary.

If the meeting is adjourned to hear the result of the poll, the chairman will, at the adjourned meeting, state the result, and declare that the motion has been carried or negatived accordingly.

Where the articles give power to adjourn "with the consent of the meeting" the chairman cannot adjourn, even to take a poll, without that consent. On the other hand the meeting cannot, in such case, adjourn without his consent. See p. 702. But, if the chairman fixes a future day for the poll, the meeting, in contemplation of law, continues until the poll has been taken, whether it be adjourned by resolution or not. See supra, p. 702.

Proposing and seconding, whether necessary.

It may here be observed that, although it is usual for motions to be proposed and seconded, and then for the question to be formally put to the meeting, a less formal course of procedure may be perfectly valid unless it be contrary to the articles, e.g., if the chairman puts the question without its having been proposed or seconded by any one, and the meeting votes thereon, this may be valid.

After adopting or rejecting the directors' report, an ordinary meeting usually proceeds to the declaration of a dividend in accordance with the recommendation of the directors. See supra, p. 765. And afterwards it elects or re-elects directors and other officers, and transacts any other business which it is competent to transact.

ordinary
meeting.

A general meeting usually closes with a vote of thanks to the chairman, and, if the company has been prosperous, with similar votes in favour of divers other persons connected with it, e.g., the manager, the secretary, the agents, &c. For example—

thanks.

"That the best thanks of this meeting be presented to the directors for their very successful management of the company's business during the past year."

"That the thanks of this meeting be presented to Mr. —, the manager; to Mr. —, the secretary; and to the other officers and employés of the company, for their efficient services."

"That the cordial thanks of this meeting be presented to the chairman for his able and courteous conduct in the chair."

The procedure at an extraordinary or special general meeting is much the same as that at an ordinary meeting. After the chair has been taken, the notice read, and the minutes of the last meeting signed, the chairman usually explains the circumstances which have led the directors to convene the meeting, and concludes with a motion, e.g.:—

Extraordinary meeting.

"That the directors be authorized to borrow, on behalf of the company, the sum of 10,000*l.*; " or—

"That the capital of the company be increased to £—— by the creation of — new shares of £—— each; " or—

"That the contract, dated, &c., and read to this meeting, be approved, and that the directors be authorized to carry the same into effect."

It should be seen that the motion comes within the terms of the notice. See p. 695. The motion having been seconded, the chairman will put it to the meeting, and the subsequent proceedings will be similar to those above detailed.

Where a meeting has been called pursuant to a requisition of shareholders, one of the requisitionists usually moves the resolution.

If at a general meeting the chairman perceives that the time of the meeting is being wasted by a cantankerous shareholder, and that the meeting wants to vote, he may move or get someone else to move, "That the question be now put," and if this is decided in the affirmative, will act accordingly. A meeting is not bound to hear a member, nor is the chairman bound to get him a hearing.

Motion that question be now put.

A chairman should rule a meeting fairly and firmly. His duty is to keep order and see that the business is properly conducted. He should bear in mind that if a majority of the members of the company are with him, a minority will not be able to upset the proceedings merely because some slight irregularities have occurred at a meeting. See pp. 74, 75.

Amendments.

Amendments to motion.

The time for moving an amendment is after the motion has been moved, seconded, and put by the chairman of the meeting. No amendment can be moved which goes beyond the notice convening the meeting, or, in the case of an ordinary meeting, beyond the scope of the ordinary business which by the regulations may be transacted thereat without special notice; e.g., see clause 50 of Table A., infra Appx. And if any member puts forward any irregular amendment, the chairman should point out the irregularity, and should decline to submit the amendment to the meeting. For example, if the meeting is an ordinary one, and a motion is submitted that the reports and accounts be received and adopted, an amendment that all the directors be removed from office, or that the articles of association be altered, would be irregular. But an amendment to the effect that the accounts and balance-sheet be received but not adopted, and that a committee be appointed to look into them and to report, and that the meeting be adjourned, would be within the competency of the meeting. So, too, if the meeting be convened to pass a resolution increasing the capital, an amendment that the directors be authorized to borrow, or that a dividend be declared, would be irregular, for these are not within the notice. An amendment cannot be adopted if the adoption would in effect render the notice convening the meeting misleading. Thus, where a meeting was convened to consider resolutions for reconstruction of the company, and for winding-up in regard thereto, and at the meeting a naked resolution for winding-up was passed, it was held to be invalid as a departure from the notice, which only contemplated a winding-up for the purposes of reconstruction. Teede and Bishop, Limited, W. N. (1901) 52. "A shareholder," said Cozens-Hardy, J. [in deciding that case], "receiving the notice might very well say that he would not trouble to attend an ordinary reconstruction meeting, and at the same time might have the strongest objection to an ordinary voluntary winding-up which was something more than a winding-up for the limited purpose of reconstructing the company." This is in accord with what Page-Wood, V.-C., said in Clinch v. Financial Corporation, 5 Eq. 461: "How is it possible for the Court to know how many shareholders have abstained from attending the meeting, being satisfied that the arrangement as it was proposed was advantageous to them, and being quite content to exercise no voice about it?"

Where, however, by the articles or the Act, there is general power to deal with certain business at a general meeting without notice of such business, the fact that the notice convening the meeting specifies a particular resolution for dealing with such business does not limit the powers of the meeting, or preclude an amendment. Bethell v. Trench Tubeless Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 408. In that case it was held that at a meeting to confirm a special resolution for winding-up voluntarily, the company, having without notice a general power under the Act to appoint a liquidator, might appoint B., though the notice stated that A. would be proposed. So, if the notice convening an ordinary meeting states that A. and B. will be proposed as directors, this does not prevent an amendment for the appointment of C. and D., if by the regulations the appointment of directors is part of the business of the meeting, and requires no special notice. See further, Betts & Co., Ltd. v. Maonaghten, (1910) 1 Ch. 430, according to which, where a notice has to state the general nature of the special business, any amendment can be passed of a like nature, but it is doubtful whether this is good law. See supra, pp. 692—694. At a meeting held to confirm a resolution passed by the requisite majority at a former meeting, so as to make it a special resolution, it is irregular to propose an amendment to that resolution: "because the single purpose of the meeting was to say,—Aye or Nay,—is the original resolution to stand or fall?" Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation, (1898) 2 Ch. 469, 484, supra, p. 845.

Nevertheless, an amendment fairly relevant and within the notice or purpose may generally be moved. See further, p. 692. An amendment sometimes purports to modify the original motion; e.g., if the motion is to increase the capital to 10,000*l.*, A. B. may rise and move that the proposed resolution be amended by substituting 5,000*l.* for 10,000*l.*; but more commonly in company meetings an amendment is framed as an alternative motion; e.g., A. B. will say: "I move as an amendment that the capital be increased to 5,000*l.*" If at a meeting an amendment is duly moved and seconded, the debate on the original motion and the amendment will proceed concurrently, some members supporting one and some the other. The debate having concluded, the chairman will put the amendment or amendments to the meeting thus "The original motion was, That, &c. To this an amendment has been moved, That, &c. Those who are in favour of the amendment hold up one hand. . . . Those who are against the amendment hold up one hand. . . . The amendment is negatived [or carried, as the case may be]."

A poll can then be demanded subject to the regulations.

Where the amendment is negatived the original motion stands, and unless a further amendment be proposed will then be put (p. 845) by the chairman of the meeting. But if the amendment be affirmed, then the original motion duly amended should again be put to the meeting. The chairman should say: "The motion as amended is that the capital be increased to 3,000*l*. Those who are, &c." This is the regular course. But where an amendment is framed as an alternative motion as above mentioned and is affirmed, it is a very common practice to treat this as a final determination of the question without putting the amended resolution again to the meeting. This course, however, sometimes leads to inconvenience, and it cannot be adopted where there are several amendments. In such a case the amendments should be put by the chairman to the meeting in the order in which they affect the main question, and ultimately the main question in its original form or as finally amended should be put to the meeting. Sometimes a member moves an amendment of an amendment. The chairman should in such case put the sub-amendment, and if it is affirmed he should then put the original amendment as amended, and if that is affirmed he will put the original motion as amended. The chairman should put a regular amendment, but should not allow an amendment which in substance merely amounts to a negation of the original motion. Those who are in favour of such amendment can give effect to their views by voting against the motion. It is desirable for the mover of an amendment to put it in writing, and hand the writing to the chairman, or for the chairman to take down the terms in writing.

Polls.

Polls.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, a poll may be demanded on any question put to the meeting, but the chairman is not bound to grant a poll unless it is demanded in strict accordance with the articles. E.g., if the articles require the demand to be in writing, it must be made in writing; and so, if the persons demanding the poll are required to hold a certain number of shares, the chairman before granting the poll should see that they are duly qualified. In any case it is expedient to make the demand in writing, and it should be handed in as soon as the chairman has taken the sense of the meeting on a show of hands. The demand will be as follows:

The Company, Limited.

We, the undersigned members of the above-named company [holding upwards of — shares in the capital], do hereby demand a poll upon the question now before this meeting.

Dated this — day of —.

It having been ascertained that the persons demanding the poll are duly qualified, the chairman will read out the demand, and will state that he grants the same, and will fix the time when and the place where the poll will be taken, and if necessary the meeting will be adjourned. When a poll is duly demanded the show of hands goes for nothing, and the poll must be taken, unless indeed the articles give power to withdraw.

The question sometimes arises whether the poll can be taken at once, i.e., without any adjournment. This depends on the articles: if they give express authority, as well-framed articles commonly do, to take the poll "either at once or after an adjournment," the poll can be taken accordingly; and even if there is no such authority, e.g., if the poll as in Table A. (infra, Appx.) is to be taken "in such manner as the chairman directs," it seems that where voting by proxy is allowed the poll may be taken at once. See p. 700, supra. The decision is convenient.

If the company has many shareholders it is not unusual to appoint a scrutineer or two to take the poll, and some articles of association expressly require such appointment. In a small company the poll is often taken by the chairman. In taking the poll it is usual to cause a list of members to be made out from the register, with six columns headed thus: (1) Names of Voters, (2) Number of Shares, (3) Number of Votes, (4) Observations, (5) Votes given: For—Against.

At the time appointed for taking the poll, the members who vote personally will come up to the voting table and write their names down on sheets of paper headed "For" or "Against" the motion, as the case may be. A member voting as proxy for another will write down his own name and also that of the person whose proxy he is, e.g., "John Smith, by W. Jones, his proxy."

However, sometimes it is arranged that a member signing his own name shall be deemed to vote for himself and for all those whose proxy he is.

The votes having been taken, the chairman or scrutineers will enter them in the list of votes, in the column "For" and "Against," as the case may be. If, on reference to the books or otherwise, a vote tendered is for any reason found to be invalid, e.g., because the voter is in arrear of calls, or because the instrument of proxy is not duly stamped, or was not deposited in time, the chairman or scrutineers will reject the same and put a note in the column of observations stating the reason for rejection.

The poll having been closed, the numbers will be added up and the result ascertained. Where scrutineers have been appointed, they will make a report in writing of the result to the chairman. Thus:—

Scrutineers' report.

The — Company, Limited.

We, the undersigned, being the scrutineers appointed at the general meeting of the above-named company, held at —, on the —th of —, on the motion, "That the report and accounts of the directors be adopted," and having taken a poll at the company's office on Monday, the -th inst., hereby report to you, as the chairman of the said meeting, that the result of such poll was as follows:—

	Number of Votes.
In favour of the motion	700
Against the motion	327

Dated this —th day of —.

Scrutineers

To --, Esquire,
Chairman of the above-mentioned meeting.

If desired, the report may show "the number of personal votes in favour of the motion" and against, and number of votes of members voting by proxy in favour of or against.

The chairman will then state the result to the meeting or adjourned meeting, as the case may be, and declare that the motion has been carried or negatived.

Chairman's declaration.

As to the effect of the chairman's declaration, see supra, p. 700.

Proxies.

A few words as to proxies:

Where a member proposes to vote on a poll as proxy for another, it should be ascertained—

1. That the shareholder appointing him is entitled to vote, e.g., the articles sometimes provide that a member in arrear of calls shall not vote, or that new members shall not vote for three months.

2. That the proxy is competent to act as proxy, e.g., the articles sometimes provide that a shareholder in arrear of calls shall not vote as proxy for another, or that only a shareholder shall be a proxy. But it may be sufficient if the proxy is a shareholder when the instrument is deposited and when he votes, although he was not such when appointed. See supra, pp. 705, 706.

3. That the instrument appointing the proxy has been deposited in due time. It would seem that under clause 66 of Table A, a proxy may vote at an adjourned meeting provided the instrument be deposited forty-eight hours before such adjourned meeting; but sometimes the regulations require the deposit to be made before the original meeting. See further, p. 706, supra.

4. That the instrument is in proper form, and is duly attested where the regulations require attestation.

5. That the instrument is duly stamped.

6. That notice of revocation has not been given.

As to 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6, there will be little difficulty, but questions of some nicety arise as to five. See supra, p. 707.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, a shareholder who is present at a meeting, but abstains from voting on a question put to the meeting, ought not, it would seem, to be counted as voting either way.

But he must be counted at meetings to pass a special or extraordinary resolution (Chap. XII.).

Votes and Proxies.

The number of votes which a member is entitled to depends on the articles of the company. In the absence of anything to the contrary, he is entitled only to one vote. But generally it is provided that a member shall have one vote for each share, or, at any rate, a number of votes varying with the number of his shares. Very commonly it is provided that no member shall have more than a certain number of votes, e.g. fifty. Where this is so, a member may distribute some of his shares (by transfers) among his friends as trustees for him, and thus increase his voting power.

Very commonly a member cannot vote unless he has been possessed (i.e., registered in respect) of the shares for three months before the meeting at which he proposes to vote. Unless otherwise provided, it would seem that this does not prevent voting at an adjourned meeting held after, though the original meeting was held within the three months. See p. 706, supra.

Unless the articles authorize voting by proxy, votes must be given personally. For usual form of instrument appointing a proxy, see infra, Table A., clause 67.

The Stamp Act, 1891, charges every instrument of proxy, "For the sole purpose of appointing or authorizing a proxy to vote at any one meeting at which votes may be given by proxy, whether the number of persons named in such instrument be one or more," with the duty of 1*d.* And see important sections set out at p. 707, supra.

Most proxy instruments appoint a proxy for one meeting only, and accordingly require a 1*d.* stamp.

In any other case, e.g., when the proxy is appointed for more than one meeting or for a year, a 10*s.* stamp must be impressed. As a proxy paper bearing a 1*d.* stamp is available for one meeting only, it follows that if there be two meetings held on the same day (see Form 438) there must be two instruments of proxy.

Where an adhesive stamp is used, the common postage and inland revenue stamp is of the right description. An impressed stamp is much to be preferred to an adhesive stamp; for if the former is used, the document has merely to be signed, but if an adhesive stamp is used, there is considerable danger that it will not be properly cancelled, and in such case the instrument is void, and any person attempting to vote under it is liable to a heavy penalty.

In order to cancel the adhesive stamp, the person signing the instrument should write his name or initials on or across the stamp, and put the true date of signature on the stamp. The stamp will not avail unless he does this, "or otherwise effectively cancels the stamp, and renders the same incapable of being used for any other instrument or for any postal purpose." It is safer, but not essential, to put the initials and date. See McMullen v. Sir Alfred Hickman Steamship, 71 L. J. Ch. 755. A mere cross or mark would not render the stamp incapable of being used, e.g., for a receipt.

In many cases the instrument concludes: "As witness my hand this day of —," and the stamp is fixed below and the signature written across it. The case lastly cited shows that this is an effective cancellation. See sect. 8 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Upon important occasions the directors or some of the members sometimes send out stamped proxy papers to the shareholders for signature. In such case the documents ought to be stamped with impressed stamps if possible, otherwise adhesive stamps should be affixed and precise directions as to the mode of signing the paper and cancelling the stamp should be printed in the margin, e.g., "Please sign your name at the foot of the proxy, and also put your initials and the date on the stamp."

The propriety of paying out of the company's funds for stamping and issuing such proxies was for a long time in question,* but in

* The following note appeared in the 9th edition of this work, published in 1906:

"See Studdert v. Grosvenor, 33 C. D. 528, in which Kay, J., held that it was ultra vires for the directors to apply the money of the company in paying the costs of sending out of duly stamped proxy papers with the names of the directors inserted as proxies, and the views expressed by the learned judge would point to the conclusion that it is ultra vires to pay out of the company's funds such expenses in any case, or the expense of sending out circulars explaining the position and urging members to vote in a particular manner. But it seems questionable whether this application of the doctrine of ultra vires can be supported. No doubt the Acts do not expressly authorize the payment of such expenses out of the funds of the company, but the doctrine of ultra vires is to be reasonably and not unreasonably understood and applied; and whatever may fairly be regarded as incidental or consequential upon those things which the Legislature has authorized ought not (unless expressly prohibited) to be held by judicial constructions to be ultra vires. Per Lord Selborne, L. C., Att.-Gen. v. G. E. Rail. Co., 5 App. Cas. 478. It seems to be fairly incidental to the business of a company to take steps to procure the presence at a general meeting of a quorum, and to induce absent shareholders to attend and vote by proxy, at any rate, when the directors acting in good faith consider that it is desirable in the interests of the company, e.g., when they know or have reason to anticipate that some motion adverse to the company's interests is to be brought forward; and shareholders are so supine that in many cases they will not vote if they have to pay the expense of stamping and returning a proxy. It is conceived, too, that it is within the powers of the company, acting by its directors, to present to the shareholders from time to time, by means of circular letters or otherwise, such information as the shareholders may reasonably require to enable them to form a judgment as to how they should vote upon the matters to be submitted either in person or by proxy. The directors are the trusted agents of the company, and it is their duty to conduct the business in the interests of the company, and inasmuch as the control is vested in general meetings, it seems to be an Peel v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., (1907) 1 Ch. 5, the Court of Appeal decided (overruling Studdert v. Grosvenor, infra) that directors acting in good faith in the interests of the company may do what they consider requisite to get the members to vote for or against a particular resolution, and for that purpose may send out stamped proxy forms, and pay for them out of the funds of the company.

A shareholder may appoint several persons alternatively as his proxy, e.g., "A., failing him B., and failing him C."

All proxy papers ought to be preserved by the directors by being pasted in a book with a proper index.

Unless otherwise provided, a shareholder may vote personally at a poll, though he was not present at the meeting at which the poll was demanded. If a shareholder votes personally on any question, any subsequent vote on that question by a proxy is void. A shareholder may revoke the appointment of a proxy at any time; but a vote given by the proxy before the revocation reaches the company or the proxy will be valid. In case of revocation, the shareholder ought before the meeting to write to the company giving notice that he has revoked the appointment. If he attends personally at a meeting, he can hand in notice of the revocation to the chairman. Sometimes the instrument is so framed that personal attendance by the appointor invalidates it, e.g., where it says "in my absence to attend and vote," &c. To appoint a second proxy would seem to be an implied revocation of the first.

Adjournment.

The regulations generally empower the chairman to adjourn a general meeting with the sanction thereof, and very commonly provide that no poll shall be demanded upon a question of adjournment, or that if a poll is demanded upon any question of adjournment, it shall be taken at the meeting and without adjournment. In the absence of any such provision it would seem that a poll may be demanded on the question, and should be taken then and there.

Chillington Iron Co., 29 C. D. 159. See p. 702. Unless the articles otherwise provide, no notice need be given of an adjourned meeting, for as regards notice an adjourned meeting is a continuation of the original meeting; but no business can be transacted at an adjourned important part of that duty to warn shareholders against objectionable schemes, and endeavour to secure, by the issue of proxy forms, that such schemes shall not be carried by a chance majority. Kay, J., appeared to think that the directors should do these things at their own expense, but there are not a few companies with 5,000 or 10,000 shareholders, and it seems unreasonable to impose such a burden on the directors."

The decision in Peel v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., supra, shows that these observations were well founded.

meeting other than the business for which the original meeting was convened. See p. 702. Where a meeting is adjourned, and at the adjourned meeting a poll is demanded, the question sometimes arises whether a clause requiring the deposit of the instrument of proxy before the meeting (see clause 66 of Table A.) is satisfied by the deposit being made before the adjourned meeting. It would seem that it is so satisfied unless the clause expressly provides to the contrary.

DIVIDENDS AND PROFITS.

The following are the principal cases illustrating (historically) the Leading cases. development of the principles governing profits and dividends:—

(1) Burnes v. Pennell, 2 H. L. C. 525 (1849).

Held by Lord Campbell, L. C., that dividends are supposed to be paid out of profits only, and that where directors order a dividend to any given amount, without expressly saying so, that impliedly declares to the world that the company has made profits which justify such a dividend. If no such profits have been made, and the dividend is to be paid out of the capital of the concern, a gross fraud has been practised, and the directors are not only civilly liable to those whom they have deceived and injured, but, in my opinion, they are guilty of a conspiracy for which they are liable to be prosecuted and punished.

(2) Regina v. Esdaile and others, 1 F. & F. 213 (1858).

In criminal proceedings against the directors of the Royal British Bank, for conspiracy to defraud by false representations of solvency, it was held, that the declaration of a dividend out of pretended profits was fraudulent, and that if the defendants knew that debts hopelessly bad were included in the balance-sheet as assets, without any corresponding reserve, this would be evidence that the balance-sheet was fraudulent: also, that evidence that the defendants knew the true state of affairs would suffice to show that the books, representing otherwise, were false to their knowledge; and that, in that case, though the balance-sheet truly represented the books, it would be fraudulent. All the defendants were found guilty, and sentenced.

(3) Macdougall v. Jersey Imperial Hotel Co., 2 H. & M. 528 (1864), in which Page-Wood, V.-C., said:—

"The Bill avers that there are no profits, and that interest has been paid, or is about to be paid, out of capital; that the shareholders have paid 4*l.* per share, and are discharged to that extent, and that they are now about to take back sums equal to 5*l.* per cent. of that very capital in the shape of interest. On grounds of public policy, and on every principle not only of honesty as regards the public generally, but of the interests of this company itself, I feel bound to prevent this proceeding. This is not in accordance with the contract entered into with the Legislature on behalf of the public, whereby it was determined that the shareholders should be liable to a certain defined amount, and no more, to the creditors of the company, and not in accordance with the contract between the parties whereby each shareholder was protected against creditors to the extent of the contributive liability of all the others."

(4) Stringer's case, 4 Ch. 475 (1869).

In this case the company was engaged in hazardous trade, namely for running the blockade during the civil war in America. A balance-sheet and profit and-loss account were made out and a dividend paid on the basis of the profits disclosed thereby. It was held that the balance-sheet was not to be regarded as delusive and fraudulent merely because an estimated value was put upon the assets, which were then in jeopardy and were subsequently lost, provided that the facts fairly appeared on the balance-sheet and that the balance-sheet fairly represented profits. "I quite agree," said Selwyn, L. J., in that case, "with the argument which has been addressed to us by the official liquidator to this extent, that the Act which confers on these companies the privilege of limited liability, imposes upon them at the same time certain conditions which they are bound to observe, and which may be considered as the price of that privilege, and if it is made to appear that for the purposes of fraud or for any other improper motive a company has declared and paid a wholly delusive and improper dividend, and has thereby, in effect, taken away from its creditors a portion of the capital which was available for the debts of those creditors, I entertain no doubt that the Court would have full jurisdiction and would exercise it by ordering the repayment of the money so improperly paid."

(5) Mills v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Company, 5 Ch. 621 (1870).

In this case it was held that a simple contract creditor of a company was not entitled to restrain the company from dealing with their assets as they pleased, on the ground that they were diminishing the funds for payment of his debt. And see Carson v. Grant, (1891) 2 Ch. 78.

(6) Rance's case, 6 Ch. 104 (1871).

In this case the directors of a marine insurance company declared a bonus of 10s. per share which was agreed to at a general meeting and paid. The directors in declaring this bonus prepared no profit-and-loss account, but only an account of receipts and payments of the company, which made no allowance for the risks to which the company was liable. A director who was party to this transaction was held liable to repay the bonus paid to him. James, L. J., in this case said: "Was there any attempt to make a balance-sheet or any profit-and-loss account in such a way as any mercantile body and certainly any insurance company ought to have done? To take the money which the company had received to answer risks and to treat it as money capable of being divided as profits without making any estimate of what the risks were in respect of which the money was paid seems to me to be the most extravagant proceeding that I ever heard of. The directors simply had before them the cash balance of the receipts and payments, and without making the slightest provision in that account for anything whatever, they proceed out of that balance to declare this bonus. I quite agree that it would have been different if there had been . . . there ought to have been in the ordinary course of business, a balance-sheet à fide made out with proper assistance, so as to ascertain the true state of the company. If the directors had followed the directions of the 112th article of their own deed, and if at the first ordinary general meeting they had laid before the company a report comprising a balance-sheet showing as accurately as circumstances would permit the financial position of the company up to that date; if that had been done, I am of opinion that it would not be right for this Court to sit as a Court of Appeal to decide upon such a state of facts so made out. If the directors, by placing unfounded reliance upon the representations of their servants or actuaries, had arrived at the conclusion that they had made a divisible profit, this Court ought not, I say, to sit as a Court of Appeal from that conclusion, although it might afterwards be satisfactorily proved that there were very great errors in the accounts which would not have occurred if they had been made out with greater strictness or with more scrutinising care. But no such account at all was made out. A mere cash account or balance-sheet in such a company as this, presented in order to determine whether there had been a profit made and for the purpose of declaring a bonus thereon, is to my mind, within the meaning of Stringer's case [4], a fraudulent and delusive balance-sheet. It purported to show something, as was said in that case, which any man who applied his mind to the subject would say, afforded no clue whatever to the profit which had been made."

(7) Re Ebbw Vale Co., 4 C. D. 827 (1877)

In this case the property of the company consisted of numerous iron and coal mines. The property had been largely depreciated through the great fall which had taken place in the value of iron and coal, and Fry, Q.C. (afterwards L. J.), having advised that the company could not pay any further dividends without writing off the loss, a special resolution was passed reducing the capital by writing down the shares from 32*l.* to 23*l.*, and thus cancelling 9*l.* per share paid-up capital. Jessel, M. R., held, that he had no power under the Companies Act, 1867, to sanction the reduction. Accordingly application was made to Parliament to confer the requisite power, and in due course the Companies Act, 1877, was passed, and shortly afterwards, the company having passed the requisite special resolution, the proposed reduction was again submitted to Jessel, M. R., who made an order, saying, "that this was a matter which was now very properly left in the discretion of the company which might desire to reduce its capital by writing off losses. The power was extremely beneficial, inasmuch as it enabled the company to declare dividends where, but for the power, no dividend would be possible." Times, 20th Jan. 1878. But the soundness of the decision of Jessel, M. R., in Ebbw Vale Co. has been doubted.

(8) Re National Funds Assurance Co., 10 C. D. 118 (1878)

The articles provided that the directors, with the sanction of a general meeting, might pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital of the company, but that no dividend should be paid except out of profits. The company issued share warrants purporting to confer on the holders the right to interest at 5 per cent. per annum. The company never made any profits, and the interest on the warrants was from time to time paid out of capital, with the sanction of general meetings. Held, that the directors were jointly and severally liable to make good the amount.

Jessel, M. R., said, that a limited company trades upon the representation of its being a limited company, with a paid-up capital to meet its liabilities. It is wholly inconsistent with that representation that the company, having its capital paid up, should pay it back to its shareholders and give its creditors nothing at all. See (18).

(9) Davison v. Gillies, 16 C. D. 347, n. (1880)

This was a case of a tramway company. The articles provided that no dividend should be paid except out of profits of the company. The company had allowed its lines to get out of repair, so that it would require 80,000*l.* to put them in repair. The company declared a dividend, but it was held by Jessel, M. R., that the dividend was ultra vires, inasmuch as there could be no profits until proper provision had been made for the repairs.

(10) Dent v. London Tramways Co., 16 C. D. 344 (1880).

This case related to the same company. The company had issued preference shares entitled to dividend out of the profits of each year. It was supposed that the last-mentioned decision precluded it from paying the dividend thereon until the depreciation was made good; but Jessel, M. R., held, that inasmuch as the holders were entitled to be paid their dividend out of the profits of each year, they were entitled to be paid without regard to past depreciation.

(11) Alexandra Palace Co., 21 C. D. 159 (1882).

In this case dividends on preference shares had been paid during construction: it was contended "that the dividends were not paid out of capital; and it is quite proper to debit to capital account the interest on capital expended on works, such as buildings, so long as they are unproductive during the period of construction." But Fry, J., referring to this contention, said that counsel "have very ingeniously argued that this was really a payment out of profits (so, at least, I understood his argument), because, he says, you are entitled to compute interest on the money you lay out before it becomes remunerative, and to treat that interest as profit, and divide it accordingly among the shareholders. I cannot yield to that argument." And accordingly the directors were held jointly and severally liable to make good the amount.

Fry, J., referring to the passage from the judgment of Page-Wood, above (3), said: "In my view, that lays down the law with perfect precision, and I think no subterfuge by which it is attempted to return capital to shareholders, and thereby to diminish their liability, ought to be countenanced for one moment by this Court. I confess it was with some surprise that I heard the argument addressed to me at the bar that the directors were at liberty to pay this money out of capital, because otherwise they could not carry on their undertaking." But see now as to payment of interest out of capital during construction, Companies Act, 1908, s. 91.

(12) Flitcroft's case, 21 C. D. 519 (July, 1882).

In this case the directors of the company for several years presented to general meetings of shareholders reports and balance-sheets, in which various debts known by the directors to be bad were entered as assets, so that an apparent profit was shown, though in fact there was none. The shareholders, relying on these documents, passed resolutions declaring dividends, which the directors accordingly paid.

Held, in the winding-up, that the directors who paid the dividends were jointly and severally liable for the amount.

Jessel, M. R.

"A limited company, by its memorandum of association, declares that its capital is to be applied for the purposes of the business. It cannot reduce its capital except in the manner and with the safeguards provided by statute, and, looking at the Act, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 26 [the Companies Act, 1877], it clearly is against the intention of the Legislature that any portion of the capital should be returned to the shareholders without the statutory conditions being complied with. A limited company cannot, in any other way, make a return of capital: the sanction of a general meeting can give no validity to such a proceeding, and even the sanction of every shareholder cannot bring within the powers of a company an act which is not within its powers. If, therefore, the shareholders had all been present at the meetings, and had known all the facts, and had all concurred in declaring the dividends, the payment of the dividends would not be effectually sanctioned."

(13) Guinness v. Land Corporation of Ireland, 22 C. D. 349
(November, 1882).

The articles of association provided that a portion of the capital should be applied in paying dividend on one class of shares. Held, that this was ultra vires.

Chitty, J., in that case said: "The conditions of the memorandum are not mere paper conditions. They are intended to be operative, and it would be a most remarkable thing if the Act of Parliament which allows members to limit their liability by paying a sum of money to form the capital, should allow those same persons the next day to receive back their capital in any shape. . . . It would be a strange construction of the Act of Parliament if by any of the internal regulations of the company it would be competent to the company to return any part of the capital to the shareholders; because the Act of 1867 contains elaborate and carefully-framed provisions under which the capital may be reduced, and it seems to me an extravagant proposition to say that that relates only to the nominal capital, and not to the actually subscribed capital."

The decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, Cotton, L. J., saying: Cotton, L. J.
"That which is described in the memorandum as the capital cannot be diverted from the objects of the society. It is, of course, liable to be spent or lost in carrying on the business of the company, but no part of it can be returned to a member, so as to take away from the fund to which the creditors have a right to look as that out of which they are to be paid."

(14) Re Oxford Building Society, 35 C. D. 582 (1886).

This concern advanced money to builders on mortgages, payable by instalments, and the directors treated as part of the profits available for dividend the value for the time being, upon estimate made by their surveyor, who was also their secretary, of the instalments of principal and interest, and upon this footing the directors paid dividend for several years. The articles provided that no dividend should be payable except out of realized profits. Held, that realized profits meant profits tangible for the purposes of division as contrasted with estimated profits, and the directors were jointly and severally liable to make good the amounts accordingly.

(15) Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409.

The articles contained express power for the company to purchase its own shares. Held, by the Court of Appeal to be a valid power free from all objections. Held, by the House of Lords to be ultra vires.

Persons dealing with the company have a right to rely, and were intended by the Legislature to have a right to rely, on the capital remaining undiminished by any expenditure outside these limits, or by the return of any part of it to the shareholders. Experience appears to have shown that circumstances might occur in which a reduction would be expedient. Accordingly, by the Act of 1867, provision was made enabling a company, under strictly defined conditions, to reduce its capital. Nothing can be stronger than these carefully-worded provisions to show how inconsistent with the very constitution of a joint-stock company, with limited liability, the right to reduce its capital was considered to be." Per Lord Herschell.

Lord Herschell, L. C.

"The Act of 1877, upon the preamble that doubts have been entertained Lord Watson.

whether the power of reduction given by the preceding Act extended to paid-up capital, enacts (sect. 3) that the word 'capital' as used in that Act shall include paid-up capital. That declaration clearly expresses the will of the Legislature, that neither the paid-up nor the nominal capital shall be reduced otherwise than in the manner permitted by the statutes. . . . Persons who deal with and give credit to a limited company naturally rely upon the fact that the company is trading with a certain amount of capital already paid, as well as upon the responsibility of its members for the capital remaining at call, and they are entitled to assume that no part of the capital which has been paid into the coffers of the company has been subsequently paid out except in the legitimate course of its business." Per Lord Watson.

Lord Macnaghten.

"Payment of capital to any one shareholder is just as much a reduction of capital, and just as detrimental to the interests of creditors, as the payment of the same amount among all the shareholders. It is none the less a payment off of capital within the meaning of the Act of 1867, as explained by the Act of 1877." Per Lord Macnaghten.

(16) Leeds Estate, &c. v. Shepherd, 36 C. D. 787 (1887).

The articles provided that no dividends should be payable, except out of profits arising from the business of the company.

No profits were ever made, but dividends were paid for many years at the rate of five per cent. The balance-sheets on which dividends were declared were prepared, not by the directors but by the manager. They were delusive, and over-estimated the assets, and were framed with a view of showing a profit available for dividend. The auditor never looked at the articles, but accepted the statement of the manager, and certified from time to time the accounts were true copies of those shown in the books. The directors did not know the true state of affairs, or that the balance-sheets were delusive; they never exercised any judgment with reference to the accounts, but relied on the manager and auditor. Held, that the directors were jointly and severally liable. Held also, that the duty of the auditor, after auditing the accounts, was not merely to verify the arithmetical accuracy of the balance-sheet, but to inquire into its substantial accuracy, and to ascertain that it contained the particulars specified in the articles and was properly drawn up, so as to contain a true and correct representation of the state of the company's affairs, and that he therefore had been guilty of misfeasance and was liable accordingly.

See infra, p. 890.

The company had a mining concession which was running out, but there was no evidence that its assets were of less value than they were when the company bought its undertaking. Held, that it was at liberty to divide the income, and under no obligation to make provision for depreciation.

(18) In re Bennett, Masonic and General Life Assurance Co.
v. Sharp, (1892) 1 Ch. 154.

In this case the articles provided that interest should be paid half-yearly on all the moneys paid on the shares until otherwise determined by the directors, but that no dividends or bonus should be payable except out of profits. No regular profit and loss account was ever made up, and the company never earned any profits. Interest, however, was continuously paid on the paid-up capital. Held, that the directors were jointly and severally liable; and that as the action commenced before the 1st of January, 1890, they could not plead the statute of Limitations. See (8).

19) Bolton v. Natal, &c. Co., (1892) 2 Ch. 124.

The principal objects of the company were to buy, let, and sell land, and to make advances.

Held, that having regard to Lee v. Newchattel, ubi supra, it was not bound to debit the profit and loss account with depreciation. But as the land depreciated was part of the circulating capital the decision can scarcely be supported.

20) Lubbock v. British Bank of South America, (1892) 2 Ch. 198.

A banking company, with a paid-up capital of 500,000*l.*, sold part of its undertaking for 875,000*l.* After deducting the paid-up capital and the debts and liabilities, there remained a net balance of 205,000*l.*

Held, that this was profit, and might be divided.

See further as to this case, infra, p. 879.

21) Lands Allotment Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 616.

In this case the directors had applied, but without fraud, moneys of the company to an ultra vires purpose. Held, that more than six years having elapsed, the claim against them was barred by sect. 3 of the Trustee Act, 1889.

22) Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 239. Infra, p. 893.

The articles of an investment trust company declared that there should be applied to dividends the receipts from the dividends, income, profits, bonuses, and advantages payable in respect of the company's investments. The value of the investments had greatly depreciated, to some extent permanently; but during the past financial year the income had substantially exceeded the management expenses. The Court of Appeal held that the excess was applicable as dividend, although "fixed capital" had been lost, and distinguished this case from one in which the income arises from the turning over of circulating capital.

23) London and General Bank, Ltd. (No. 2), (1895) 2 Ch. 673.

Directors and auditor held liable for paying dividends out of capital, it being found in fact that they had not acted bonâ fide.

77 L. T. 207

In this case the company's mine fell in, and, to restore it to working order, money had to be raised by the issue of debentures; and, there being no profits the interest thereon was paid out of capital. The mine having been restored to a profit-producing condition, it was held that it could pay dividends without making good to capital what had been so expended in interest. "The contention is that . . . the accounts ought to be kept so as to keep the claim in respect of interest alive, or, at any rate, that the profits ought to be dealt with on the footing that such liability existed. I see nothing, either in the articles of the company or in the general law, to require that, before dividends are paid, the profits must be applied in paying off a charge properly incurred in previous years. Having regard to recent authorities, I come to the conclusion that there is no reason why the proposed dividend should not be paid." This is in effect overruled by Dorey v. Cory, infra, pp. 865, 899.

(28) In re National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 629

In this case it was laid down that, though the paid-up capital of a limited company cannot be lawfully returned to the shareholders under the guise of dividends or otherwise, yet the law does not prohibit such a company—even if it be a banking company—from paying dividends unless its paid-up capital is intact.

The payment of dividends out of the excess of the receipts over the outgoings of a year, after making some allowance for bad debts, losses made in previous years being ignored and in effect thrown on the capital, does not amount to a payment of dividends out of capital. If paid-up capital has been lost, its subsequent application in the payment of dividends is impossible.

Excluding cases in which it would be obvious that a particular debt or outlay could not be reasonably charged to capital, the question what losses can be properly charged to capital and what to income is a matter for business men to determine, and on such a matter the opinions of honest and competent men may differ. There is no hard and fast legal rule on the subject.

But if expenses or payments are obviously improperly charged to capital simply to swell the apparent profits and to make it appear that dividends may properly be declared, dividends declared and paid under such circumstances can no more be justified than if they were paid out of capital.

On appeal, however, the House of Lords (Dorey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477), whilst affirming the decision on other grounds, pointedly and significantly abstained from approving of the above proposition. See further, infra pp. 865, 899.

(29) In re Barrow Hematite Steel Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 846.

In this case the Court was asked to sanction a reduction of capital alleged to have been lost or to be unrepresented by available assets. In ascertaining the assets for the purposes of the reduction, the reserve fund and the unappropriated profit and the value of goodwill were not taken into account. Cozens-Hardy, J., held that the loss or depreciation was not made out to the full extent, and he, therefore, refused to sanction the reduction. This decision was based partly on the ground that the reserve fund and the undivided profits ought to be treated as part of the assets, and, further, that the goodwill of the company was probably of considerable value, and ought to be brought into account; and, lastly, his Lordship said that even if the loss were made out, he would not have thought it right to confirm the reduction, for that, having regard to Lee v. Neuchâtel Asphalte Co., 41 C. D. 1, and Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 239, to the effect that a trading profit may be realized in payment of dividends notwithstanding depreciation in the fixed capital of the company, there was no necessity for reduction. See, however, as to this, what was said by the Lord Chancellor in Dovey v. Cory, infra, p. 899. Barrow Hematite Steel Co. was explained in the Court of Appeal in Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208, infra, pp. 867, 868.

In that case certain promissory notes forming part of the assets of the company had been considered of no value, but were paid off with arrears of interest, and the directors proposed to treat the whole sum as a windfall in the nature of an unexpected profit and distributable by way of dividend. It was held, however, that the amount ought not to be distributed without reference to the other business and assets of the company. Byrne, J., said: "I must not, however, be understood as determining that this sum or a portion of it may not properly be brought into profit and loss account or be taken into account in ascertaining the amount available for dividend. That appears to me to depend on the result of the whole accounts for the year. It is clear, I think, that an appreciation in total value of capital assets, if duly realized by sale or getting of such portion of such assets, may in a proper case be treated as available for the purposes of dividend"; and then, after referring to Lubbock v. British Bank of South Africa and Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, supra, the learned judge proceeded, "If I rightly appreciate the true effect of the decisions, the question of what is profit available for dividend depends on the result of the whole accounts fairly taken for the year, capital as well as profit and loss, and although dividends may be paid out of earned profits in proper cases, although there has been a depreciation of capital, I do not think that a realized accretion to the estimated value of one item of the capital assets can be deemed to be profit divisible amongst the shareholders without reference to the result of the whole accounts fairly taken."

This case was the appeal to the House of Lords in National Bank of Wales, (1894) 2 Ch. 629, supra, p. 897.

The House of Lords affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal exclusively on the ground that the respondent was not guilty of misfeasance or breach of trust merely because he had made false statements made by the company's officials. The House pointedly declined to express any opinion on the question principally discussed in the Court of Appeal, that is, whether the double account system of ascertaining profits sanctioned in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., supra, and Verner v. General and Commercial, &c. Trust, supra, was allowable. See pp. 880, 893, infra.

There is no principle which compels a company, while a going concern, to divide the whole of its profits among the shareholders, and the reserve fund may, subject to the control of a general meeting, be invested in such securities as the directors may select, the matter being one of internal management.

(34) Bond v. Barrow Hæmatite Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353.

The defendant company was a smelting company; for the purposes of its business it had bought iron ore mines, and in connection therewith erected blast furnaces and cottages. The mines were flooded and the company surrendered the leases and pulled down the blast furnaces, and in the result sustained a loss of 200,000*l.*; there was also a loss of 50,000*l.* on other accounts. In the circumstances, the directors did not recommend the payment of any dividend on the preference shares, although there was a large sum of undivided profit, and the holders in the action claimed a declaration that the undivided profits ought to be applied in paying the preferential dividend on the ground that the loss was of fixed capital, and, therefore, that the cases of Lee v. Neuchatel, 41 C. D. 1, and Verner v. General and Commercial Trust, (1904) 2 Ch. 239, applied and enabled the company to pay the dividends notwithstanding such a loss. It was held by Farwell, J., that the 200,000*l.* loss was not a loss of fixed but of circulating capital, and that the loss must be made good before dividends could be paid; and that as to the 50,000*l.* loss, the plaintiffs had not proved that it was a loss of fixed capital, and accordingly the action failed and his Lordship dismissed it with costs.

The learned judge referred to Professor Marshall's definition of profits (infra, p. 883), and said: "I am precluded from adopting this in its entirety by authorities which are binding on me, because in this definition 'stock and plant' obviously include both fixed and circulating capital. . . . All the authorities, however, agree, I think, that circulating capital must be kept up. Now, in the present case, the 200,000*l.* realised loss arises from the surrender of the leases of certain mines, by the pulling down of certain furnaces, and on the sale of certain cottages. The company is a smelting company on a very large scale, and for the convenience of its works and by way of economy they acquired the leases of the surrendered mines in order to supply themselves with their own ore instead of buying it as required. The ore was used exclusively for the purposes of the company. The mines were drowned out and the cost of pumping them out was prohibitive. The company therefore surrendered the leases, pulled down the blast furnaces, and sold the cottages connected therewith. Now the evidence before me is all on one side. The plaintiffs called none, and Sir David Dale and the defendants' other witnesses all agree that in a company of this nature these items ought to come into the account before any profit can be said to be earned; and my own opinion coincides with theirs, inasmuch as I think that the money invested in those items is properly regarded in this company as circulating capital. Suppose the company had bought enormous stocks of ore, sufficient to last for ten years; it could hardly be said that the true value of so much of this as remained from time to time ought not to be brought into the balance-sheet, and I can see no difference in principle for the purposes of this account between ore in situ and ore so bought in advance. . . . I cannot think that it would be right for the defendant company to purchase out of capital the last two or three years of a valuable patent and distribute the whole of the receipts in respect thereof as profits without replacing the capital expended on the purchase."

As to Lee v. Neuchatel, his Lordship said "it was relied on as an authority for the proposition as a universal negative, namely, 'that no company owning wasting property need ever create a depreciation fund.' In my opinion that is not the true result of the decision. It must be remembered that in that case there had been no loss of assets. The company's assets were larger than at its formation, and the Court decided nothing more than the particular proposition that some companies with wasting assets need have no depreciation fund."

(35) Hoare & Co., Ltd., (1904) 2 Ch. 208.

In this case the company had a paid-up capital of 1,950,000*l.* and a reserve fund of 231,487*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.*, which was composed principally of premiums on shares, and, to some extent, of premiums on leases, and as to the balance of ordinary profits. The reserve fund was employed in the business and not separately invested. The company, having lost about 592,000*l.*, proposed to deal with the amount as to 396,000*l.* by writing down the paid-up capital, and as to about 196,000*l.* by writing off a like amount, part of the reserve fund. Special resolutions were passed accordingly, but Buckley, J., refused to sanction the order, holding, on the authority of Barrow Hematite Steel Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 846, that reserves must be exhausted before capital can be cancelled. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision and sanctioned the reduction, holding that in such circumstances the loss should be treated as falling on reserves and capital in proportion to the amounts thereof respectively, and that as the company was writing off reserve rather more than its due proportion of the loss, there was no objection to the scheme, notwithstanding that it left the company with a reserve fund of substantial amount. Romer, L. J., who at the request of Vaughan Williams, L. J., delivered the first judgment, considered that the Court had jurisdiction, and said that the "reserve fund was a fund which, at the time it was created, arose from the fact that there were available assets (after deducting all liabilities of every kind, including the amount which is represented by the share capital) which might have been applied as the company thought fit without thereby doing any violence to the provision of the Companies Acts or to the articles of the company. In other words, the surplus which was carried to the reserve fund represented that which might have been properly applied at the time, if the company had so thought fit, in paying further dividends to the shareholders, and no person could have complained if they had done so. It was therefore a reserve fund properly created . . . they might have utilised it in equalising dividends, or, if they had chosen, they might have applied it in making good lost capital.

" . . . In my opinion, under the circumstances of this case, the loss ought to be treated as apportioned between the reserve fund and the capital account properly so called, that is, the share capital.

"In the present case the company propose to do more than that: they propose to attribute a larger proportion of the loss of assets to the reserve fund than they do to the capital account. In my opinion that is a thing which they were not absolutely bound to do, but which they certainly had a right to do . . . In the circumstances of this case I think that the Court ought to allow the small proportion of the reserve fund, which according to the scheme it is proposed to keep, to remain as a reserve fund."

Vaughan Williams and Cozens-Hardy, L. JJ., concurred.

This decision is of importance as emphasizing the principles that premiums on shares are, where the capital is intact, properly treated as profit (compare Lubbock v. British Bank of S. A., (1892) 2 Ch. 198, supra, pp. 863, and infra, 879); and a loss of capital does not automatically absorb reserves, and that where reserves are employed in the business and merged in the general assets they should bear their rateable proportion of loss.

The resolutions, &c. were settled by the writer, and the decision was in accordance with his advice to the company.

In this case an interim dividend was declared by the directors and paid, and at the end of the year it turned out that there had been a loss. The board which declared the dividend acted on the information supplied by the managing director. Lord Alverstone, C. J., held that such of the directors as had only been present at a subsequent meeting, at which the minutes of the previous meeting were confirmed, were not liable. He also said: "The declaration of interim dividends depends much more upon estimates and opinions than the declaration of a final dividend which is made upon the information contained in a formal balance-sheet."

(37) Towers v. African Tug Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 558.

In this case an interim dividend was paid, as it turned out, out of capital. One of the directors and the manager had received their share of the dividend, and not returned, or up to trial offered to return, it. They, however, brought an action on behalf of all the shareholders, except defendants, against the company and the other directors, asking that the defendant directors might be ordered to repay the amount of the dividend. Afterwards all the other shareholders were joined as defendants at their own request. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the plaintiffs, having received their dividends with full knowledge or notice of the facts, could not, suing either individually or on behalf, &c., maintain the action, although the payment of the dividend was ultra vires; that the action would not have lain even if plaintiffs had repaid their shares before trial, and there was some doubt whether payment even before action would have availed them.

(38) In re Spanish Prospecting Co., Ltd., (1911) 1 Ch. 92.

A. and B. agreed to serve a limited company at a fixed salary, which was only to be paid "out of profits (if any) arising from the business of the company, which may from time to time be available for such purpose, but such salary shall nevertheless be cumulative, and accordingly any arrears thereof shall be payable out of any succeeding profits as aforesaid." The business of the company included the purchase and sale of shares and debentures, and shares and debentures were accordingly purchased. The shares were sold for cash, and the proceeds brought into profits and loss account. The debentures were included in the yearly balance-sheets of the company as an unvalued asset. Then the company went into voluntary liquidation; the liquidator sold the whole of the assets, the debentures realizing 2,072*l.*: all the creditors, except A. and B. (to whom about 8,000*l.* in respect of arrears of salary were due), were paid in full, and all the subscribed capital was returned to the shareholders, leaving a surplus of 3,328*l.* in the hands of the liquidator. Was this surplus "profits arising from the business of the company"? The Court of Appeal held that it was undrawn profits, and that A. and B. were entitled to be paid their cumulative arrears of salary out of it. The case is instructive, more especially on account of certain passages in the judgment of Fletcher Moulton, L. J. His Lordship said, "The question for our decision in the present case is of some general interest, because it turns upon the legal meaning of the word 'profits' . . . The word 'profits' has in my opinion a well-defined legal meaning, and this meaning coincides with the fundamental conception of profits in general parlance, although in mercantile phraseology the word may at times bear meanings indicated by the special context which deviate in some respects from this fundamental signification. 'Profits' implies a comparison between the state of a business at two specific dates usually separated by an interval of a year. The fundamental meaning is the amount of gain made by the business during the year. This can only be ascertained by a comparison of the state of the business at the two dates."

For practical purposes these assets in calculating profits must be valued and not merely enumerated. An enumeration might be of little value. Even if the assets were identical at the two periods, it would by no means follow that there had been neither gain nor loss, because the market value, the value in exchange, of these assets might have altered greatly in the meanwhile. A stock of fashionable goods is worth much more than the same stock when the fashion has changed. And to a less degree, but no less certainly, the same considerations must apply to buildings, plant, and other fixed assets used in the business, because one form of business risk against which business gains must protect the trader is the varying value of the fixed assets used in the business. A depreciation in value, whether from physical or commercial causes, which affects their realizable value is in truth a business loss.

"We start, therefore, with this fundamental definition of profits, namely, if the total assets of the business at the two dates be compared, the increase which they show at the later date as compared with the earlier date (due allowance, of course, being made for any capital introduced into or taken out of the business in the meanwhile) represents in strictness the profits of the business during the period in question."

"But the periodical ascertainment of profits in a business is an operation of such practical importance as to be essential to the safe conduct of the business itself. To follow out the strict consequences of the legal conception in making out the accounts of the year would often be very difficult in practice. Hence, the strict meaning of the word 'profits' is rarely observed in drawing up the accounts of firms or companies. These are domestic documents designed for the practical guidance of those interested, and so long as the principle on which they are drawn up is clear their value is diminished little, if at all, by certain departures from this strict definition, which lessen greatly the difficulty of making them out. Hence, certain assumptions have become so customary in drawing up balance-sheets and profit and loss accounts that it may almost be said to require special circumstances to induce parties to depart from them. For instance, it is usual to exclude gains and losses arising from causes not directly connected with the business of the company—such, for instance, as a rise in the market value of land occupied by the company. The value assigned to trade buildings and plant is usually fixed according to an arbitrary rule by which they are originally taken at their actual cost and are assumed to have depreciated by a certain percentage each year, though it cannot be pretended that any such calculation necessarily gives their true value either in use or in exchange. These, however, are merely variations of practice by individuals. They rest on no settled principle. They mainly arise from the sound business view that it is better to underrate than to overrate your profits, since it is impossible for you to foresee all the risks to which a business may in future be exposed. For instance, there are many sound business men who would feel bound to take account of the depreciation in value of business premises (or in the value of plant specially designed for the production of a particular article) although they would not take account of appreciation in the same arising from like causes.

"To render the ascertainment of the profits of a business of practical use, it is evident that the assets, of whatever nature they may be, must be represented by their money value. But, as a rule, these assets exist in the shape of things or rights, and not in the shape of money. The debts owed to the company may be good, bad, or doubtful. The figure inserted to represent stock-in-trade, must be arrived at by a valuation of the actual articles. Property, of whatever nature it may be, acquired in the course of the business has a value varying with the condition of the market. It will be seen, therefore, that in almost every item of the account a question of valuation must come in. In the case of a company like that with which we have to deal in the present case this process of valuation is often exceedingly difficult because the property to be valued may be such that there are no market quotations and no contemporaneous sales or purchases to afford a guide to its value. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that in many cases companies that are managed in a conservative manner avoid the difficulty thus presented and content themselves by referring to assets of a speculative type without attempting to affix any specific value to them. But this does not in any way prevent the necessity of regarding them as forming a part of the assets of the company which must be included in the calculation by which de facto profits are arrived at. Profits may exist in kind as well as in cash. For instance, if a business is, so far as assets and liabilities are concerned, in the same position that it was in the year before with the exception that it has contrived during the year to acquire some property—say, mining rights—which it had not previously possessed, it follows that those mining rights represent the profits of the year, and this whether or not they are specifically valued in the annual accounts.

"But though there is a wide field for variation of practice in these estimations of profit in the domestic documents of a firm or a company, this liberty ceases at once when the rights of third persons intervene. For instance, the revenue has a right to a certain percentage of the profits of a company by way of income tax. The actual profit and loss accounts of the company do not in any way bind the Crown in arriving at the tax to be paid. A company may wisely write off liberally under the head of depreciation, but they will be only allowed to deduct the sum representing the actual depreciation for the purpose of calculating the profits for income tax. The same would be the case if a person had a right to receive a certain percentage of the profits made by the company.

"In the absence of special stipulations to the contrary, 'profits' in cases where the rights of third parties come in mean actual profits, and they must be calculated as closely as possible in accordance with the fundamental conception or definition to which I have referred."

The learned judge added to the above some observations to the effect that his remarks did not bear on the vexed question of the fund out of which dividends may legally be paid in limited companies. "Cases such as Ferner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, (1891) 2 Ch. 239, and Lee v.

Newchapel Asphalt Co. (1889), 41 C. D. 1, show that this fund may in some cases be larger than what can rightly be regarded as profits, and the decisions in these cases depend largely upon the fact that there is no statutory enactment which forbids it to be so.

Not even an express power in the memorandum can justify the payment of dividends out of capital, for such a payment would be a reduction of capital, requiring, under sect. 46 of the Companies Act, 1908 (reproducing the Acts of 1867 and 1877), the sanction of the Court, and the memorandum cannot dispense with the sanction, which, for the protection of the public, the Act requires. Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409; Flitcroft's case, 21 Ch. D. 519; Raine's case, 4 T. L. R. 303 (Kekewich, J.); Mersina and Adana Co., 5 T. L. R. 680 (Stirling, J.); Foster v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208; Fisher v. Black and White Publishing Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 174.

And, a fortiori, nothing in the articles can justify the payment of dividend or interest (except on capital paid in advance of calls: Lock v. Queenaland, &c. Co., (1896) A. C. 461) out of capital (Trevor v. Whitworth, ubi supra; Guinness v. Land Corporation of Ireland, 22 C. Div. 375; In re Bennett, (1892) 1 Ch. 154); but the articles may, of course, restrict the meaning of the word "profit," and declare that dividends shall only be payable out of profit in that restricted sense. See Oxford Building Society, 35 C. D. 502, where the term "realized profits" was regarded as meaning "profits tangible for the purposes of division," as distinguished from estimated profits. As to "net profits," see Bilney v. Ince Hall Coal Co., 35 L. J. Ch. 363; Glasier v. Rolls, 42 Ch. D. 453; as to "profits in hand," see Stringer's case, L. R. 4 Ch. 475.

Some persons, whilst admitting that dividends cannot be paid out of capital, have contended that where a company engages in the construction of works, interest may be paid on capital during construction. See Alexandra Palace Co., 21 C. Div. 149, above. But the principles laid down in Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409, are wholly inconsistent with the legality of paying dividends out of capital during construction or otherwise. And the Indian Railways Act 1894 (57 Vict. c. 12), was, in effect, a Parliamentary recognition that dividends may not, even during construction, be paid out of capital without statutory powers. So is sect. 91 of the Act of 1908 giving companies power with certain safeguards to pay interest out of capital during construction of works.

Where shares are offered to the public a commission may, under sect. 89 of the Companies Act, 1908 (replacing sect. 8 of the Companies Act, 1900), be paid to subscribers.

As a company may not pay dividends directly out of capital, neither may it do so indirectly, e.g., by entering into a contract with another company or person, one of the terms of which is that the latter shall pay interest on the capital of the former. James v. Eve, L. R. 6 H. L. 385. "There is no doubt that if it cannot be done directly, it cannot be done indirectly." Per Lord Chelmsford, L. C., and see per Fry, J., in In re Alexandra Palace Co., supra, p. 860.

Thus in Fisher v. Hull & Barnsley Rail. Co., 4 Mar. 1881 (25 S. J. 353), where the contractors had agreed to pay interest during construction, Jessel, M. R., granted an injunction restraining the payment, and the company in two subsequent sessions endeavoured, but without success, to obtain legislative authority. See also Wye Valley Rail. Co. v. Haices, 16 C. Div. 489. But see now sect. 91 of the Act.

The payment of dividends out of capital, being a misapplication of the company's funds, is treated as a breach of trust on the part of the directors, and accordingly they are jointly and severally liable to make good the amount with interest at 5 per cent. per annum. Flitcroft's case, 21 C. Div. 520; Re Alexandra Palace, ibid. 160; Oxford, &c. Society, 35 C. D. 502; Leeds, &c. Co., 36 C. D. 787; Carriage Co-operative Assoc., 27 Ch. D. 322; Municipal Freehold

Land Co. v. Pollington, 63 L. T. 238; London & General Bank (No. 2), (1895) 2 Ch. 673; Bond v. Barrow Hematite Steel Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353.

And the directors are liable not only for what they pay themselves but for the whole amount. "I do not see how to make any distinction between what the directors retained and what they paid to other shareholders." Per Cotton, L. J., Flitcroft's case, 21 C. Div. 536.

It is true that a member who receives a dividend knowing that it is paid out of capital, may be liable to make good the amount; for "the money of a company is a trust fund, because it is applicable only to the special purposes of the company in the hands of the agents [i.e., the directors] of the company, and it is in that sense a trust fund applicable by them to those special purposes; and a person taking it from them, with notice that it is being applied to other purposes, cannot, in this Court, say that he is not a constructive trustee." Per Jessel, M. R., Russell v. Wakefield Waterworks, 20 Eq. 479; Holmes v. Newcastle Co., 1 C. D. 682; Mozham v. Grant, (1900) 1 Q. B. 88; Towers v. African Tug Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 558. But even in such cases the directors will be primarily ordered to make good the amount, and will be left to recover from the other members if they can. Alexandra Palace Co., 21 C. D. 149; National Funds, 10 C. D. 118.

And a member who takes a dividend in good faith, not knowing that it is paid out of capital, is not liable to return the same. Flitcroft's case, 21 C. D. 519; Re Denham & Co., 25 C. D. 752; Wye Valley Rail. Co. v. Hawes, 16 C. Div. 489.

This is a common case; for where dividends are paid out of capital the members can in most cases show that they were deluded by fraudulent accounts. And where the directors represent that profit has been made, members are not bound to investigate.

"The directors made an express representation to the shareholders that profits had been made, and the effect of that representation cannot be taken away by showing that documents were laid before the shareholders, a thorough investigation of which would have shown that the representation was untrue, unless it is also shown that they did investigate them and discover the untruth." Per Jessel, M. R., Flitcroft's case, 21 C. Div. 532.

And even a director who in good faith concurs in the payment of a dividend out of capital is not liable to refund it. National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 629, 675.

Where directors openly and avowedly pay dividends out of capital, they may have a right of recovery against shareholders who take with notice that the dividend is paid out of capital. Mozham v. Grant, (1899) 1 Q. B. 88; but shareholders who have received dividends knowing them to be paid out of capital cannot keep such dividends, and at the same time compel the directors to make them good. Towers v. African Tug Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 558.

Limitation

In some cases a claim against the directors may be barred by sect. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59). Lands Allotment Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 617. Cf. In re Sharpe, (1892) 1 Ch. 154. And where they have acted "honestly and reasonably" and "ought fairly to be excused," the Court has now a discretion to grant them relief under the Companies Act, 1908, s. 279. See p. 715, supra.

Criminal.

Not only are directors who pay dividend out of capital civilly liable, but they may, at any rate in some cases, be prosecuted for conspiracy. Burnes v. Pennell, 2 H. L. Cas. 497; Regina v. Esdaile, 1 F. & F. 213. In the case last mentioned, the directors of the Royal British Bank were convicted of conspiracy to defraud. They had issued false balance-sheets, and, in particular, had included therein, among the assets of the company, debts which they knew to be bad. See supra, p. 857.

Moreover, a director or manager who makes, circulates or publishes, or concurs in making, circulating, or publishing, any written statement [e.g., a report] or account [e.g., a balance-sheet] which he knows to be false in any material particular, may be liable to punishment under sect. 84 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96). See Queen v. Gurney Finlayson, R. P. 254. As to the Court directing a prosecution in winding-up under sect. 217 of the Companies Act, 1908, see London and Globe Finance Corporation, (1903) 1 Ch. 728; Re Charles Denham & Co., 32 W. R. 921; Re Express Fuel Co., W. N. (1875) 10; and Northern Counties Bank, 31 W. R. 546.

The Court will, at the instance of a single shareholder, interfere by injunction to restrain the payment of dividend out of capital (Macdougall v. Jersey Imperial Hotel Co., 2 H. & M. 528; Gillies v. Land Corporation of Ireland, 22 C. Div. 349; Davison v. Gillies, 16 C. 347; and an interlocutory injunction may be granted; Foster v. New Trinidad Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208); but not at the suit of a mere simple contract creditor. Mills v. Northern Co., 5 Ch. 621; Coxon v. Grant, (1891) 2 Ch. 78. Nevertheless, it would seem that there may be cases in which a creditor would have a locus standi (Flitcroft's case, 21 C. Div. 533); and if he is not paid in due course he can have the company wound up and make the directors personally liable through the medium of the liquidator as representing creditors for the breach of trust. Re Sharpe (1882). 1 Ch. 154.

Injunction to restrain.

General Observations on the foregoing Decisions.

The Companies Act, 1862, did not make any express provision in regard to the payment of dividends. It did not require that the power to pay dividends should be specified in the memorandum or in the articles of association, nor did the specimen forms of memorandum of association scheduled to the Act mention the payment of dividend as one of the objects. But the Act distinctly contemplated the payment of dividends; for sect. 38 made special provision in regard to payment in a winding-up of any "sum due to a member of a company in his character of a member by way of dividend, profits or otherwise." Moreover, the regulations in Table A., which were made prima facie applicable to all companies limited by shares, expressly provided for the payment of dividends, thus showing that payment of dividends was regarded by the Legislature as a matter of course in the case of a company "formed for the acquisition of gain."

The Act silent.

Whilst the power to pay dividends is thus treated by the Legislature as implied, there is no express provision as to what assets may be applied to the payment thereof. It was, however, assumed from the first that the fundamental principles of sound commercial trading applied, and that dividends must be paid exclusively out of profits. This assumption was not an unreasonable one to make, looking to the scheme of the Act and to the opinion expressed by Lord Campbell, L. C., in Burnes v. Pennell (1849), 2 H. L. C. 497, 525, to the effect that dividends are supposed to be paid out of profits only (Case 1, supra), and to the prosecution and conviction, in 1856, of the directors of the Royal British Bank for conspiracy to defraud by false representations as to solvency, made, inter alia, by paying dividends otherwise than out of profits. It is a corollary from the primary prin-

The power to pay implied.

Out of profits, not capital.

Accordingly case after case is to be found in which the proposition is laid down that dividends can only be paid out of profits, and that dividends may not be paid out of the capital. Nevertheless, Lord Lindley, on more than one occasion, objected to the proposition that dividends can only be paid out of profit, and preferred as more correct the proposition that dividend must not be paid out of capital (and see the observations of Farwell, J., in Bond v. Barrow Hæmatite Co. (1902) 1 Ch. 353).

The objection raised by Lindley, M. R., to the proposition that dividends may only be paid out of profit is that this expression "leads to the inference that the capital must always be kept up and be represented by assets which if sold would produce it." Verner v. General and Commercial Co., (1894) 2 Ch. 239. On the other hand, in National Bank of Wales, Limited, (1899) 2 Ch. 629, the same learned judge held that even where the articles provide for payment of dividends out of profit, there is no such inference to be drawn. The objection therefore falls to the ground, and upon the whole it seems that the proposition that dividends are only to be paid out of profits may stand as the leading rule, subject, however, to one caution, namely, that the term "profit" is equivocal, and the operation of the rule therefore depends entirely on the meaning therein of the word "profits," and, as Farwell, J., said in the case cited: "There is no single definition of the word 'profits' which will fit all cases."

How Profits are to be Ascertained.

Three systems of account. In regard to this opinions differ, and there are several systems which are adopted or have been suggested. Of these, the following may be mentioned:—

- | | |
| Single account system. | (1) What is called the "single account" system, that is, the ordinary system adopted by business men, according to which profits are to be ascertained by a balance-sheet, including by reference a profit and loss account. |
| Double account system. | (2) The double account system for many years advocated by an eminent legal writer, according to which all companies under the Act are to be assumed (contrary to the fact) to keep a capital account and a revenue account, and those accounts are to be regarded as distinct accounts, and for the purpose of determining profits, accretions to or diminutions of capital are to be disregarded, but loss on revenue account is to be made good out of subsequent revenue. See infra p. 889. |
| Lee v. Neuchatel. | (3) The system propounded by the Court of Appeal in Lee v. Neuchatel Co. , 41 C. D. 1; according to which, whenever the | ordinary revenue of the company for any specified period exceeds the ordinary outgoings of the company for such period, the excess is to be regarded as profit available for dividend, even though the revenue be derived from a wasting property, which, in the course of a few years, will be exhausted, and even though the company has lost capital during the same period. See infra, p. 890.

- (4) The system propounded by the Court of Appeal in Verner v. General and Commercial Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 239: according to which the net revenue of any specified period is to be regarded as profit available for dividend, subject to the important qualification that, whilst loss or depreciation of "fixed" capital (infra, p. 894) need not be taken into account, loss or depreciation of "circulating" capital must be taken into account, and debited to profit and loss account in ascertaining profits. See infra, p. 893 et seq.

*Verner v.
General and Commercial Trust.*

1.—The Single Account System.

According to this system, the profits for any particular period are to be ascertained by a profit and loss account and a balance-sheet showing the true financial position of the company and the result, whether in the shape of profit or loss, of its transactions during such period. The balance, whether to the debit or the credit of profit and loss account, appears as an item in the balance-sheet; and the balance-sheet is not a capital account showing, as a matter of history, how the capital contributed has been applied in the past, but a living account showing the true financial position of the company at its date, and the difference in amount between the assets on the one hand and the debts, liabilities and paid-up capital on the other hand.

1. As to single
system.

Everything depends, as in an ordinary partnership, on how the balance-sheet works out. The mere fact that the profit and loss account (disregarding losses and depreciation) shows a credit balance is not treated as establishing the fact that the company has made a profit during the period, since that balance may, in the balance-sheet, be counterbalanced by an equivalent or greater loss of capital sustained during the year [or previously, unless, indeed, the previous loss shall have been written off].*

In this system paid-up capital is treated as a liability; not that the company is really a debtor to its shareholders in respect of capital, any more than a firm is to its members, but because "if you want to find out how you stand, whether you have lost your money or not.

* The same result is very commonly arrived at by debiting the profit and loss account with loss and depreciation, and crediting it with gains and receipts, whether extraordinary or ordinary.

you must bring your capital into account somehow or other." Per Lindley, L. J., Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., 41 C. D. p. 23.

According to this system, if a leasehold colliery, or a patent or other wasting property is acquired, it appears as an asset in the balance-sheet at cost price, and as and when any depreciation takes place it is written down, or, what comes to the same thing, a depreciation fund is established and the amount thereof is placed on the other side of the balance-sheet.

And if the company sustains a loss in any other way, e.g., by the loss of one of several vessels representing a part of its assets, the item "by value of vessels" in the balance-sheet will be written down accordingly, or the amount can be written off reserve.

On the other hand, if the value of the company's property goes up, and the company is satisfied that the increase in value is to be regarded as a permanent increase, the property may appear on the balance-sheet as an asset valued at the increased figure.

Nevertheless, it would be entirely contrary to practice to write up or down the value of a permanent instrument of profit, e.g., a tramway, or factory, or building, merely because the value of labour and materials has gone up, or because the business has been more or less successful, or to write up or down any assets in sympathy with what are or may be mere temporary fluctuations in market prices or values.

So, also, if the company by its expenditure creates a new asset, e.g., a patent or a concession, that asset may be brought into the balance-sheet at some figure not exceeding its estimated value.

And even goodwill, whether bought or created, may be an asset to be reckoned in order to determine the true financial position of the company. Thus, in Murray v. Bush, L. R. 6 H. L. 37, the deed of settlement of an insurance company provided that the company should be dissolved if the losses absorbed the reserve fund and 80 p.c. of the paid-up capital, and the question arose whether the contingency had happened. Lord Cairns considered that the goodwill which had been created by the company ought to be brought into account; "and whether that goodwill should be estimated, as it is stated to have been estimated by a valuator, as of the value of three years of their annual premiums, or at a smaller, or at a larger sum, I need not stop to inquire. It is abundantly evident that the goodwill of the concern as a growing concern was worth some substantial sum." See Barrow Hematite Steel Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 846, as explained in Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208.

This is the system adopted, with more or less modification, by all the banks and all the insurance companies, and also, in fact or ostensibly, by almost all the companies under the Act of 1908.

There is a considerable body of legal authority in favour of the single account system.

It seems to be the system which, in Stringer's case, 4 Ch. p. 475, was treated as the proper system of ascertaining profits. In that case Lord Justice Selwyn considered that the company—

"would have been justified in declaring a dividend, provided they had put a fair, and no more than a fair, value upon the ships and other assets which they actually had. Taking it one step further, and assuming the case that several of the ships had been lost, that the company was bound to put down, as they did put down, their proportion of that loss as being a loss upon this balance-sheet, the other two-thirds of the loss were to be covered by the responsibility and guarantee of the Confederate government, and, according to the view of the learned Vice-Chancellor, inasmuch as until the end of the war the value of that guarantee could not be ascertained, no dividend could be declared. I confess I am unable to agree with that view. I think that under those circumstances the company was fully justified in putting a value on the ships and on the Confederate debt. . . . I think the company was justified in doing that which in truth is done in almost every business, namely, taking the facts as they actually stood, and forming an estimate of their assets as they actually existed, and then drawing a balance so as to ascertain the result in the shape of profit or of loss."

If, as suggested by the advocates of the other systems, profits are to be ascertained without regard to loss or depreciation of capital or fixed capital, what could the learned judge have meant by these words? He was dealing with a case in which there was evidently a balance-sheet of assets and liabilities, and he considered that this was a proper mode of ascertaining "the result in the shape of profit or loss," and he incidentally recognized the fact that in thus ascertaining profits the company was doing "that which in truth is done in almost every business."

So, in Rance's case, 6 Ch. 104, James, L. J., said that the company had only been in existence for eight months when a bonus was declared —

"a bonus which, of course, could only be lawfully made out of moneys which had been earned or believed to have been earned in the way of profit. . . . How was this done? Was there any attempt to make a balance-sheet or profit and loss account in such a way as any mercantile body, and certainly any insurance company, ought to have done? . . . The directors simply had before them the cash balance of the receipts and payments, and, without making the slightest provision on that account for anything whatever, they proceed out of the balance to declare this bonus. I quite agree that it would have been different if there had been, as there ought to have been, in the ordinary course of business, a balance-sheet bonâ fide made out with proper assistance, so as to ascertain the true state of the company."

Here, again, we have an eminent judge, well versed in business matters, declaring that "there ought to have been a balance-sheet bonâ fide made out with proper assistance so as to ascertain the true state of the company." If for the purpose of ascertaining profits the loss of fixed capital may be disregarded, what could the learned judge have meant by requiring a balance-sheet in order to ascertain profit. Can it be that both these learned judges were under a misapprehension as to the law?

So also in Helby's case, 2 Eq. 175, Kindersley, V.-C., said

"A balance-sheet or summary of accounts would show, on the one hand, all the assets, and, on the other hand, all the liabilities of the company, and it was only on this sort of statement that any safe conclusion could be drawn as to the question whether there had been any profit for the half-year or not, and whether any and what dividend should be declared."

(Chitty, J., in The Midland Land and Investment Corp., 8 Nov. 1886, said—

"In declaring a dividend, in my opinion, in trading concerns, the directors are entitled to put an estimate on the value of their assets from time to time, in order to ascertain whether there is or is not a surplus remaining after providing for liabilities [including, of course, paid-up capital]; and where they make those valuations from time to time on a just and fair basis, and take the precautions which ordinary prudent men of business engaged in a similar business would do, they are entitled to treat the surplus thus ascertained profit."

See further extract, infra, pp. 904—906.

So, also, in Robinson v. Ashton, 20 Eq. 28, Jessel, M. R., said: "in the absence of special agreement, the rise and fall in the value of fixed plant or real estate belonging to a partnership was as much profit or loss of the partnership as anything else."

And the same judge, in another case, said: "No balance-sheet can be made out for any useful purpose without distinguishing good bad, and doubtful debts." Frank Mills 23 C. D. 57.

There is good reason to believe that Jessel, M. R., considered that the single account system was the proper system, and acted on that in ascertaining profits a company was bound to take into account and make good loss or depreciation of capital.

Thus in Ebbw Vale Co., 4 C. D. 827, that learned judge observed: "I considered it necessary to cancel lost capital in order to enable the company to apply current income to the payment of dividend after the passing of the Companies Act, 1877, and in making that requisite order sanctioning the reduction of capital, the court was guided by the Act, as appears above, p. 859, that 'the power conferred by the Act was extremely beneficial, inasmuch as it enabled the company to declare dividends where but for the Act no dividends would have been possible'—thus indicating clearly his view of the object and purpose of the Act. And see observations of B. in English and French Exploration Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 845, 851.

So also in Davison v. Guller, 16 C. D. 347, the same learned judge (Jessel, M. R.) held that there could be no profit until proper provision had been made for depreciation. That was the case of a tramway, and his Lordship considered that in every year provision should be made for depreciation, and so it was in the case of a warehouse: supposing a warehouse-keeper should find, at the end of the first year, that he had no provision to expend money in repairs, but that, by reason of the usual wear and tear of the warehouse, it was 1,000*l.* worse than it was at the beginning of the year, he would set aside 1,000*l.* for a repair, or renewal, or depreciation fund before he estimated any profits; because, although that is not required to be paid that year, still it is a sum which is lost, so to say, out of capital and must be replaced."

and although it is not easy to reconcile with this decision Dent v. London Tramways, 16 C. D. 344, it is generally acknowledged that the M. R. considered the single account system to be the proper mode of ascertaining profit. Per Stirling, J., Verner v. General Commercial & Trust, (1890) 2 Ch. 239, and infra, p. 89. Per Lindley, M. R., in National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch.

in Direct Spanish Telegraph Co., 34 C. Div. 307, the company, having lost a considerable portion of its capital by the loss of one of its cables, was advised by counsel of the company (Sir Morrice afterwards Lord-Davey) that they could not sell or lend in any of the shares until they had ascertained the cable was in a proper state of repair and working, and that the company had made adequate provision for that purpose, or reduced the capital under the Comp. Act, 1877. See infra, p. 901. Accordingly, special resolutions were passed for cancelling the lost capital, and these resolutions were confirmed by the Court, although the cancellation undoubtedly involved a hardship to the holders of the preference shares; and yet no one ventured to contend that the company could be placed in a dividend-paying condition otherwise than by cancelling the lost capital.

In Lubbock v. British Bank of South America, (1892) 2 Ch. 19, the question arose whether certain assets of a company were profit and Chitty, J., said—

"This is a trading company, and I have before me a balance-sheet of 1891, to which I refer by way of illustration to show how the accounts of such a banking company are kept, and properly kept, in my opinion. I have before me the defendant company's accounts up to December, 1890. They put down on the one side their liabilities, treating properly the 500,000*l.* which is subscribed by the shareholders as a liability for the purpose of the income account, as against the assets which they put down on the other side. On the same liability side, they properly put their current liabilities and certain other liabilities and reserve fund, which the company according to its constitution is justified in making, and they add up the total amount of those liabilities. On the other side they put down their assets, and for the purpose of giving information to the shareholders they divide the assets into certain heads—'Cash at Bank,' 'Bank premises and managers' residences in Brazil and River

Lubbock v. British Bank of South America

Plate'—and then they add up the total on that side. They of course—because there is not a suggestion that those accounts are not kept with perfect propriety and perfect honesty—therefore put down on the asset side the money value of their assets, some being in money itself and some not. Then when the two sides of this account are compared, there is a surplus of 44,000*l.* shown, which goes, according to the accountant's regular method of keeping accounts, to the liability side, and represents the balance of assets over liabilities. Now what is the result of keeping an account in this form? The capital of the bank is intact, and the account shows it, and after providing for the capital there remains a surplus which rightly goes to the profit and loss account. All that the company is required to do by force of the Companies Act of 1862 is to keep its capital intact, and not to pay dividends out of its own capital; in other words, to keep that capital for its creditors and any others who may be concerned therein. That mode of keeping the account is an excellent illustration of the right way to divide profit and loss. Taking the figures on this account, this sum of 44,000*l.* is profit made and profit available within the Act of 1862 for division among the shareholders, unless there is something in the articles which would prevent the directors and prevent the company from dividing the sum which thus stands to their credit.

"I say I have great difficulty in following the first portion of the argument for the plaintiff, because it was said that what was sold was part of the capital of the company, and that what came in over and above the 500,000*l.* was an accretion to capital, therefore it must be kept intact as part of the capital. That has—with great respect to the counsel who put forward this argument—nothing to do with the matter. The sale being an authorized sale, it is immaterial what is the thing sold. I put, during the argument, a humble illustration. A man's business is to make boots and shoes. He has 10,000*l.*, which he takes into that business as his capital. He makes boots and shoes, and spends the whole of his 10,000*l.* in doing it, and he sells and gets back from his customers a certain sum on the sale. He compares then, assuming he has sold all, what he has got back with his expenditure in producing the boots and shoes and putting them on the market, and if he finds he has his 10,000*l.* (I am treating it apart from any question of debts outstanding, supposing it is a good solid sale), then his capital is intact, and the rest—if there is a rest remaining in his hands—is profit. On the other hand, if he has only 9,000*l.*, his capital is not intact, and he has lost. It is exactly the same principle that has to be applied to a trading company under the Companies Act, and the capital that has to be regarded for the purpose of the Act of Parliament is the capital according to the Act, and not the things, whether houses, goods, boots and shoes, or hats, or whatever it may be for the time being representing the capital, in the sense of being things in which the capital has been laid out. When the company is formed to work a wasting property, such as a mine or a patent, different considerations may apply, as was decided in Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co. I am not dealing with any such special case."

And although this case was distinguished by Byrne, J., in Foster v. New Trinidad Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208, supra, p. 865, his Lordship in no way impugned the principle of the decision.

Kay, L. J., in Verner v. General and Commercial Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 268, said—

"I should be sorry if it were held that a joint-stock trading company can properly estimate their profits in any way differing from that in which an individual, or partnership of individuals, carrying on a similar business would do. An ordinary trader takes a yearly account of all the capital employed in his business, allows for any loss or depreciation in value, and carries the balance to the profit and loss account, from which he makes out the profit or loss of the year. In this mode a loss or depreciation of such capital affects directly the profit of the year, which is thereby diminished. But if upon the whole capital account there is a gain, this goes to swell the year's profits. In my opinion a joint-stock trading company should do the same."

See further, infra, p. 892.

In the decisions relating to income tax, various expressions occur which tend to support the single account system.

Thus in Knowles v. McAdam, 3 Ex. Div. 23, Kelly, C. B., in the course of his judgment, said—

"What is the balance of the profit or gains? Take the simplest case. A man buys a bale of cotton for 20*l.* and sells it again for 25*l.*, no expenses being incurred except the price of the bale. His balance of profit is 5*l.*, which remains to him after having repaid himself everything he paid to obtain the bale. . . . Suppose a merchant dies and bequeaths to his son a warehouse containing 20,000 bales of cotton; the son carries on the trade and sells 1,000 of those bales. Is his profit what he receives for those bales without any deduction? No; his profit is the price at which he sells less the price he has paid for what he sells, or, if he has not bought it, less what he would have had to pay if he had bought it. Apply this principle to the case of a coal mine. Suppose a man pays 1,000*l.* for a lease of a mine for one year only. At the end of that year he has got all the coal in the mine and sold it for 1,200*l.*, the expenses of labour and materials being 100*l.* Is his profit 1,100*l.*? It would be an abuse of language to say so. His profit is what remains in his pocket after deducting the expenses, namely, 1,000*l.* for the liberty to get the coal and 100*l.* for the cost of getting it. That is, his profit is 100*l.* only. Now if that be true in the case of a lease for one year, it must be true in the present case, where the leases have an average of thirty-two years to run, and where the lessees get a portion of the coal year by year. There can be no difference in principle."

See also Re Spanish Prospecting Co., Ltd., supra, pp. 868, 869.

No doubt it now appears that this mode of ascertaining annual profits or gains, though in strict accordance with the practice of business men, is not in accordance with the peculiar rules laid down in the Income Tax Acts (Coltness Iron Co. v. Black, 6 App. Cas. 329, supra, p. 87); but that does not derogate from the value of the above passage as indicating the view of the learned judge in regard to the ascertainment of profit for other purposes.

And this single account system closely accords, moreover, with the rules laid down or recognized by economists.

Views of economists.

Thus McCulloch, in a passage approved by Lord Blackburn in McCulloch v. Coltness Iron Co. v. Black, ubi supra, says:—

"Profits must not be confounded with the produce of industry primarily received by the capitalist. They really consist of the produce or its value remaining to those who employ their capital in an industrial undertaking after all their necessary payments have been deducted, and after the capital wasted and used in the undertaking has been replaced. If the produce derived from an undertaking, after defraying the necessary outlay, be insufficient to replace the capital exhausted, a loss has been incurred; if the produce is merely sufficient to replace the capital exhausted, there is no surplus—there is no loss; but there is no annual profit, and the greater the surplus is, the greater the profit."

Mill.

John Stuart Mill says:—

"The capitalist, then, may be assumed to make all the advances and receive all the produce. His profit consists of the excess of the produce above the advances; his rate of profit is the rate which that excess bears to the amount advanced."

Bonamy Price.

Bonamy Price says (Practical Political Economy):—

"The capital engaged in the business must be replaced in full by the products; for no business goes on permanently at a loss. We have seen that capital is consumed in producing; capital is wealth; and there must be restoration of such wealth as is destroyed not by enjoyment, but in creating other wealth. If that new wealth were not forthcoming there could be no motive to apply any wealth to capital. Profit, which is reward, cannot begin till the replacement of the things consumed has been completed. . . . Endless unforeseen causes may convert hope of profit into loss. In some operations, especially in farming, the product may not appear at all after all the outlay for procuring it has been incurred. Now all such risks for the restoration of the capital consumed must be met by an adequate insurance embodied in an increase of price. By some writers this insurance is regarded as a deduction from profit; but the more correct way of viewing it is to consider it as an item in the cost of production, as an expense included in it."

Sidgwick.

Sidgwick (in his Principles of Political Economy) points out that, in order to understand what is profit, it is necessary to form an exact notion of capital, i.e., of wealth, employed to bring a surplus or profit.

"To attain this result, let us begin by asking what is exactly meant from the point of view of the individual capitalist by 'wealth employed to bring a profit.' It does not mean that the wealth is necessarily in the form of instruments or materials for making new wealth, or in the form of food, clothing, &c. for the labourers who are using the instruments or materials; for, as we have seen, it does not matter to the individual whether his wealth is used productively or unproductively so long as he gets his profit. It merely means that the individual is using his wealth—either personally or by lending it to others—in such a way that he continually finds himself possessed of THE EQUIVALENT of what was originally devoted to such use, together with some additional wealth, this additional wealth being what is called profit. . . .

"We have, therefore, first to ascertain what portion of a man's wealth is being employed with the aim of making its owner continually RICHEN, and then to distinguish the capital from the profit. In the case of wealth that has been lent to some one else there is of course no difficulty, as the sum which the debtor pays for the use of the wealth is clearly profit, and the sum which he is bound to replace clearly capital. And the line drawn in this case can be ideally extended to include the case where the wealth has been spent in purchasing a perpetual annuity; for though here there is no one under legal obligation to pay at any fixed time an equivalent for the principal, still actually the annuity can be at any time sold at its market value, so that we may regard this possible price as the capital. In this case, however, the price at any time may be less or more than the sum originally spent, and, therefore, in calculating profit, we have to subtract from or add to the sums annually received a sum sufficient to compensate for the difference."

Again, Professor Marshall in his Principles of Economics, Vol. I., p. 142, defines profits thus:—

"When a man is engaged in business his profits for the year are the excess of his receipts from the business during that year over his outlay for the business; the difference between the value of his stock and plant at the end and at the beginning of the year being taken as part of his receipts or as part of his outlay, according as there has been an increase or decrease of value."

It has, indeed, been suggested in the Courts that economists consider that loss or depreciation of what is called "fixed capital" (see infra, p. 884) should not be taken into account in ascertaining profits, but, as appears above, this is not the case. See also infra, p. 901.

Economists do not disregard depreciation:

Again, it has been suggested that economists consider that funds expended in the acquisition of "fixed capital" (infra, p. 884) are to be treated as sunken and gone, so that anything recovered in the way of income is so much profit; but this is not so, for the economist, like the business man, treats the capital sunk as represented by and re-appearing in the assets, whether in the shape of goodwill, or connection, or undertaking, which the expenditure has brought into existence or developed.

or treat money expended in fixed capital as lost.

Thus, Sidgwick says (Principles of Political Economy):—

Sidgwick.

"This leads me to consider a source of profit noticed in a preceding chapter, which exhibits the immaterial results of labour and expenditure as still more clearly separate from any material capital than in the cases just discussed—I mean, the saleable article called 'goodwill' or 'business connection.' Let us take, for example, the business of publishing a newspaper. The sale of a newspaper when it first starts is ordinarily so limited that its proceeds do not repay the current expenses of production, so that the business has to be carried on for some time at a loss. Hence, in order that the undertaking should be on the whole a profitable one, it is necessary that the proceeds of the sale should ultimately be sufficient to pay profit not only on the material capital actually employed in production, but upon all the wealth and labour that has been spent without return in the earlier years of the undertaking. The business may be regarded as having capital sunk in it which would be recovered in its price if it came to be sold, though it is actually represented merely by a certain habit of purchasing the newspaper that exists in the community at large. This potential price is properly reckoned as part of the wealth and capital of the individual owning the business."

Fixed and circulating capital.

In connection with the above suggestions, and what is said, infra, p. 903, it may be convenient here to refer to the distinction between "fixed" and "circulating" capital which is to be found in writers on political economy, and has been adopted by learned judges.

The notion that this distinction had some bearing on profits and dividends was first put forward in the Courts by the defendants' counsel in Lee v. Neuchatel, 41 C. D. 1. "The appellant forgets the distinction drawn by economists—which is a very substantial one—between fixed capital—the money expended in purchasing which is sunk once for all—and circulating capital, like stock in trade, which, in the ordinary course of business, is parted with and replaced by other capital." In that case the Court abstained from relying on the distinction thus drawn, and laid down the law in terms far beyond anything counsel had argued for; and in National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 629, 670, the same learned judge says, after citing Lee v. Neuchatel Co.: "What was lost there was fixed capital, and it is obvious that circulating capital, or any other money employed in earning returns must be deducted from them in order to ascertain how much of them can be regarded as profit."

But in Verner v. General and Commercial, &c. Trust, infra, p. 893, Lindley, L. J., in the Court of Appeal, laid great stress on the distinction, saying "that fixed capital may be sunk and lost, and yet that the excess of receipts over current payments may be divided; but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as obviously it will enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law." And the distinction is emphasized in Bond v. Barrow Hematite Steel Co., supra, p. 866. What then is this distinction between "fixed" and "circulating" capital? Let us take, by way of elucidation, some extracts from the leading writers on political economy.

Adam Smith was the first to draw this distinction—

"If it (i.e., stock) is employed in procuring future profit (as distinct from present enjoyment) it must procure the profit either by staying with him or by going from him. In the one case it is fixed, in the other it is a circulating capital." (Wealth of Nations, Pt. II. Ch. I.)

Ricardo altered the use of the terms, applying the name "circulating" to that which is frequently destroyed and has to be reproduced. He says (Principles of Political Economy, ch. 1, s. 5)—"In proportion as fixed capital is less durable it approaches to the nature of circulating capital. It will be consumed, and its value reproduced in a shorter time in order to preserve the capital of the manufacturer." But Mill and most other recent English economists distinguish circulating capital, "which fulfils the whole of its office in the production of which it is engaged by a single use," from "fixed capital, which exists in a durable shape, and the return to which is spread over a period of corresponding duration." Marshall adopts these definitions.

Bonamy Price says, in his Practical Political Economy—

"Capital is divided into two classes, founded on a distinction pointed out by Adam Smith. He classed capital into circulating and fixed. Circulating capital is that which is consumed by a single use, and re-appears in full in the products which it has created. Thus the food of the gardener is restored in the potatoes dug up. The coals burnt in the factory, and the iron-ore which has been dissolved, re-appear in the pig-iron created. Fixed capital is that which is not entirely consumed by a single use, which is capable of doing its work more than once, and consequently does not require that its produce should, on a single use, restore it in its integrity.

"Circulating capital derives its name from its rapid movement. It is applied, then destroyed, and then recovered. A master carpenter sends his man to make repairs in a house. The work takes a day, and wood and nails are used up. When the man leaves at night the job is paid for. The wood, nails, and the man's wages destroyed the carpenter's capital. He receives it back again in the money received, or, rather, in the things which that money purchases. . . . But a distinction of importance must be drawn here. There is no such thing as fixed capital in an absolute sense. A part of what is called by this name is really circulating capital. The wear and tear of the engine and the building of the merchant ship and the cart horse are pure circulating capital, as truly as the coals which generate the steam. The circulation is completed by repairs, and repairs are only the capital destroyed in a machine by working re-appearing in its renovated state. These repairs are charged upon the goods made in their place. They enter into the cost of production. In the case of a cart horse and similar instruments there are no repairs, but the depreciation in its value is met by an annual item added to the cost of production. A farmer who employs twelve horses, each of which is expected to last twelve years, must be repaid the cost of a horse each year as replacement of capital used up."

Macleod in his Theory and Practice of Banking, p. 77, says that—

"Capital itself may be used in two distinct ways:—

"(1) The capitalist may retain it in his own possession, and make a continuous series of profits by its use, and consequently the capital is only replaced with the profits in a series of instalments. Capital used in this way is termed 'fixed capital.'

"The capitalist may part with it entirely; and replace the entire capital and profits in one operation; hence it goes away from him entirely. Capital used in this way is termed 'floating' or 'circulating' capital.

"It must be clearly understood that it is according to the intention of the person who uses it, and the purpose and method in which it is used, that it receives either of these names. The same article may be floating capital in the hands of one person, and fixed capital in the hands of its next possessor, if the first produces it for the purpose of selling it outright, and the second purchases it for the purpose of making profit by its use.

"This distinction is often overlooked, and the term 'fixed capital' is often applied to articles of a particular nature, and floating or circulating capital to articles of another nature. . . .

"It must be carefully observed that Smith's distinction of certain articles as fixed capital, and of other things as floating capital, is erroneous.

"Thus houses, lands, &c. are by no means invariably fixed capital. It is quite common for speculators to buy up land and build houses for the express purpose of selling them again. In the hands of these speculators, houses and lands so traded with are floating capital, because the entire property in them is parted with in one operation. But if a person buys land for the purpose of farming it himself for profit, or of letting it out to farmers, or buys or builds the houses for the purpose of letting them to tenants, then such houses and lands are fixed capital. . . .

"So a shipbuilder builds ships and sells them to a company. In the hands of the builders the ships are floating capital; in the hands of the company they become fixed capital. . . .

"If a person buys into the Funds or shares as an investment to produce an income, they are fixed capital. But there is a class of persons, called stock-jobbers, who buy this kind of property with the intention of selling it again with a profit, and they keep a stock of it as traders do goods. In the hands of such persons such property is floating capital. . . .

"It is therefore incorrect to apply the terms 'fixed' and 'floating' capital to any object, whatever its nature may be, unless we know the intention of its owner in using it.

" . . . The only species of property which is necessarily floating capital is money. Money, to be used, must necessarily be paid away and change masters. Almost all other property is capable of being used in either way at the will of the owner."

The distinction between fixed and circulating capital we thus see does not, according to economists, depend on the nature of the asset, or on its durability, but on the mind and intention from time to time of its owner. We also see that it is extremely difficult to determine what is and what is not fixed capital. Thus shares or other assets are sometimes bought by a company without any distinct determination as to whether they shall be kept or resold; and accordingly whether they are fixed or circulating capital is an open question. And even where assets are required with a specific intention, there is no obligation to record that intention—indeed, to do so would be contrary to all practice.

Furthermore, intentions change. Thus, suppose a company formed to buy, sell, hold by way of investment, and deal in shares, and that it acquires some shares intending at the time to sell. They are at this stage circulating capital, but if they happen to fall in price the company may change its mind and determine to keep them, and thereupon they become fixed capital. A few months afterwards the company may determine to sell them, and thereupon they return to the category of circulating capital.

So as regards "fixed" capital, there is no such thing as fixed capital in an absolute sense. In many cases a part of what is called by this name is really circulating capital.

Act of 1877.

Lastly, it is a matter of notoriety that the Companies Act, 1877 (replaced by sect. 46 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908), whereby power was given with the sanction of the Court to cancel capital "which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets," was passed to remedy the particular grievance which was supposed to exist, namely, that after a loss of capital by depreciation a limited company could not pay dividends unless and until the loss was made good, and could not, like a partnership, write off the amount and resume payment of dividends. This grievance had been accentuated by the decision of Jessel, M. R., in The Ebbw Vale Co., 4 C. Div. 827. See supra, pp. 859, 880. Ebbw Vale Co.

The Bill for the Act of 1877, the outcome of the decision last mentioned, was referred to a Select Committee of the House of Commons, and from the evidence before that Committee it is clear that everyone supposed that the grievance which the Bill was to remedy was that where there was a loss of capital a company could not write down its capital by the amount of the loss but must make good the amount out of subsequent profits, and as we have seen, Jessel, M. R., in exercising in relation to the Ebbw Vale Company the powers given by the Act within a few months after it came into operation, took occasion to say explicitly what he understood to be the object of the Act, for in giving judgment his Lordship said that the power given by the Act was extremely beneficial, inasmuch as it enabled the company to declare dividends where but for the power no dividends would be possible.

Yet now it is not uncommon to argue that the real object of the Act was not to enable dividends to be paid which otherwise could not be paid until loss was made good, but to enable a company to reduce its capital so that the subsequent dividends might be paid at a higher rate per cent. on the reduced capital than the rate which the company would have been able to pay on the unreduced capital. In fact both benefits result from the Act.

An objection sometimes made to the single account system is that it involves periodical re-valuations which may be difficult and, perhaps, impracticable. As to this, it is generally considered that there need be no re-valuation of assets of a permanent character so long as there is no reason to suppose that they have diminished in value; and that what are bonâ fide regarded as casual and temporary fluctuations in the value of such permanent assets should be disregarded. Objections.

Even if a re-valuation is to be made, it is generally considered that in determining the value it is not necessary or proper to regard merely selling value. It may be that the asset could not be sold, or could not be sold for what it cost, and yet, as part of a going concern, it may to the company be worth its cost. On the other hand, if a company gives 20,000*l.* in cash or paid-up shares for a patent, and the patent is held void, it is generally considered that such a loss cannot be disregarded, unless, indeed, it can be set off against some increase in the value of another asset, or some newly created asset, or as goodwill.

Another objection which the advocates of the other systems sometimes raise is, that the single account system gives a sanction to the writing up of the value of permanent assets so as to accord with their estimated value for the time being, and that this is likely to lead to payment of dividends out of profits which only exist by way of estimate; in other words, is open to abuse.

The answer to this criticism is that writing up the value of permanent assets, and carrying the increase to profit and loss, is unquestionably a departure from ordinary commercial practice. It may be justified in special cases, and great numbers of concerns, including many banks, insurance companies, and trading companies, do, as a matter of fact, write up some classes of assets from time to time, e.g., when they act on the rule of taking them at market prices of the day; and it is clear that there is no law against that process.

There is clearly also no obligation—though there may be a temptation—to write up permanent assets, and even if they are written up it does not follow that the increase in value will be divided. There is no obligation to divide, and there is an obligation—a very strong obligation—not to pay dividends otherwise than out of profits.

The single account system has this merit too that it follows the practice adopted in an ordinary partnership. In such a partnership there are no profits available for division till loss has been made good, and it matters not whether loss is incurred on capital account or revenue account, for it is a question not of revenue, but of profit. No doubt, with the consent of all the partners, the revenue, or, for that matter, the capital, can be divided without making good the loss, but primâ facie a loss has to be made good out of subsequent earnings or fresh contributions, or must be written off, before divisible profits can be made. So, also, upon a dissolution of an ordinary partnership nothing can be taken by way of profit until lost capital has been made good. See the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39); Nowell v. Nowell, 7 Eq. 538.

And in Rishton v. Grissell, 5 Eq. 326, where an agreement had been made that the plaintiff, as manager, should have a percentage on the profits of the defendant's business, it was held by Page-Wood, V.-C., that the defendant was entitled to charge the profit and loss account in every year with sums representing the depreciation arising from the running out of the lease and the waste of plant and machinery.

It is, therefore, not surprising that the single account system should have been so generally adopted by companies, "for, after all," as

* When at the Bar, Lord Davey in one case advised that a company having lost one capital asset whilst other capital assets had largely appreciated, it was allowable to have a resolution and to adopt a new balance-sheet on the footing thereof, and thus to extinguish the loss.

Jessel, M. R., said in Griffith v. Paget, 6 C. D. 515, "these companies are commercial partnerships, and are, in the absence of express provisions, statutory or otherwise, subject to the same considerations." And see cases supra, pp. 857 et seq.

2.—The Double Account System.

2. Double account system.

According to this system, the profits of an undertaking are the excess of revenue receipts over expenses properly chargeable to revenue account; the capital account and revenue account are to be kept distinct, and for the purposes of determining the profits we are to disregard accretions to or diminutions of capital. Accordingly, loss on capital account need not, whereas loss on revenue account paid out of capital must, be made good out of subsequent revenue or otherwise.

The principal objections to this system are—

1. That it draws a distinction between loss on capital account and loss on revenue account, which appears to have no foundation in principle. Why should it be necessary, in determining profits, to make good out of revenue a loss of capital on revenue account if it is not necessary to make good a loss on capital account? Why should it be necessary to make good gradual loss, and yet not necessary to make good a sudden or extraordinary loss? The result of the loss in either case is exactly the same, namely, that the paid-up capital is pro tanto diminished. On what principle, then, is the distinction between gradual and sudden loss to be supported? It is not supported by the cases. The views expressed by the Lords Justices, in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., and Verner v. General and Commercial, &c. Trust, infra, and in Bosanquet v. St. John Del Rey Co. (1897), 77 L. T. 207, and National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 629, 670, are opposed to any such distinction.

2. That it lays down as an arbitrary rule that "accretions to capital" are to be disregarded in determining profits; but there is no authority for such a proposition, and the every-day practice of the commercial world negatives the existence of such a rule; and now the Courts have held that there is no such rule. Lubbock v. British Bank of South America, (1892) 2 Ch. 198; Verner v. General and Commercial, &c. Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 239; Foster v. New Trinidad Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208.

3. That it does not even require loss of circulating capital to be made good, whereas, at any rate to this extent, the Court of Appeal considers that loss must be taken into account. See Verner v. General and Commercial, &c. Trust, supra, and National Bank of Wales, (1899) 2 Ch. 629, 670, and infra, p. 897; also Bond v. Barrow, &c. Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353.

4. That it assumes that every company has, or ought to have, a capital account and a revenue account, whereas such a mode of ascertaining profits is only adopted by a comparatively few concerns, such as tramways, trust investments, and other companies of a special character.

5. It makes the Companies Act, 1877, superfluous: for if this is the proper mode of ascertaining the profits, it follows that there was no real necessity for the passing of that Act, whereby power was given to a company to reduce capital lost or unrepresented by available assets, for what was the use of reducing capital if loss or depreciation did not in any way affect the payment of dividends?

3. Double account system (Court of Appeal).

3.—The system approved by the Court of Appeal in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., 41 C. Div. 1.

In this case the company had a nominal capital of 1,000,000*l.* in 10*l.* shares, and had issued the whole of these shares as fully paid up, as the consideration for the transfer to it of an asphalt concession, and other assets. It was alleged by the plaintiff, but not proved, that the concession and assets had become depreciated, and that a large part of the capital had been lost, and that the company ought to be restrained from paying a dividend (which it proposed to pay out of its revenue) until the loss or depreciation had been made good. It was, however, held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of Stirling, J.—(1) that there was not sufficient evidence of depreciation or loss; (2) that if the property of the company was not sufficient to make good its share capital, there was no obligation to make it good out of revenue; and (3) that although the property was a wasting property, there was no obligation to make any provision for depreciation. Cotton, L. J., it is true, treated the case as special. "Of course the present case is very different from that of a company where money has been paid on all the shares. That case is open to different constructions. All that was taken by the company from the first were the assets. But his Lordship agreed that there was no obligation, under the Act of 1862, to make good lost capital out of revenue.

And Lindley, L. J., considered that it was wholly immaterial whether there had or had not been a loss or depreciation of capital, inasmuch as a company may apply its net revenue to payment of dividends, even if it has lost the whole of its capital; and Lopes, L. J., concurred, being of opinion that capital and revenue accounts are distinct, and that for the purpose of determining profits, accretions to and diminutions of capital are to be disregarded.

In the above case Lord Justice Lindley put the case of a company which had sunk 250,000*l.* in acquiring a property "which, if put up for sale, would, perhaps, not yield 10,000*l.*," and said that in such case—

"So long as they pay their creditors there is no reason why they should not go on and divide profits, so far as I can see, although every shilling of the capital may be lost."

And again his Lordship said—

"If a company is formed to acquire and work a property of a wasting nature—for example, a mine, a quarry, or a patent—the capital expended in acquiring the property may be regarded as sunk and gone, if the company retain assets sufficient to pay its debts. It appears to me there is nothing whatever in the Act to prevent any excess of money obtained by working the property over the cost of working it from being divided among the shareholders, and this, in my opinion, is true, although some portion of the property itself is sold, and in some sense the capital is thereby diminished. If it is said that such a course involves payment of dividend out of capital, the answer is that the Act nowhere forbids such a payment as is here supposed. . . . But it is, I think, a misapprehension to say that dividing the surplus, after payment of expenses of the produce of your wasting property, is a return of capital in any such sense as is forbidden by the Act."

If this system is correct, no balance-sheet is necessary in order to ascertain divisible profits; all that you want is an account of income and expenditure. And, although a company may not directly pay dividends out of capital, there is not by this method the slightest objection, in point of law, to its doing so indirectly, for, according to Lord Lindley's view, there is nothing in the Act to prevent that.

Accordingly, if a company with a paid-up capital of 100,000*l.* likes to buy, say, ten acres of coal for 100,000*l.*, and works one acre per annum, and, after paying expenses of raising the coal and of management, has, say, 15,000*l.* per annum in hand, that sum is profit available for dividend, and there is no obligation on the company to treat any part of it as capital, and when at the end of ten years the coal has been worked out, and the 100,000*l.* has disappeared and the capital has thus become reduced to nil, we are not to regard this as a reduction of capital prohibited by the Act! But is it not obvious that each year's income in such a case includes a return to the company of part of its capital outlay, and therefore that the company is each year paying dividends consisting in part of capital? What would become of debenture holders whose principal was payable, say, fifteen years after issue?

The Court got at this strange result on the theory that the mode in which profit is to be ascertained is by the law left to the particular company, and there is no objection to a clause in the articles of association to the effect that a company shall not be bound to make good wasting property, or that the net revenue shall be available for dividend notwithstanding loss of capital. (See Forms 296 and 297, supra.) It is clear, however, that the articles cannot effectually authorize that which would amount to a reduction of capital. Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409; Re Sharpe, (1892) 1 Ch. 154. And this being so, it is not easy to conceive that they can effectually sanction that which is only an indirect mode of authorizing the return of capital.

It should, however, be added that Lindley, L. J., appears subsequently to have modified to some extent the views above referred to, and it has become abundantly clear that those views are not shared by some other learned judges, and that they do not commend themselves to the common sense of accountants, economists, or business men in general.

Thus we find Chitty, J., adopting an entirely different rule as to the proper mode of ascertaining profits (p. 879); we find Stirling, J. following Lee v. Neuchatel with hesitation (p. 893), and evidently against his own judgment; we find Kay, J., in effect (p. 880), disclaiming the doctrine laid down by Lindley, L. J., and it is well known that Rigby, L. J., whilst at the Bar, advised, on more than one occasion, that income was not profit when it was counter-balanced by loss or depreciation. See also Dovey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477. Lindley, L. J.'s view has also provoked much unfavourable comment from accountants, bankers, and others.

Palgrave.

The following observations in Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy, sub tit. "Capital," are very pertinent and to the point:

"Legal ruling that capital need not be replaced from profits.—A trader's assets are in most cases wholly or partly of a perishable nature. Before ascertaining the profits derived from such assets in a given year, provision ought to be made for the depreciation estimated to have taken place during that year. If, for instance, a person who invested 1,000*l.* in the purchase of a patent having five years to run, and producing an annual profit of 500*l.*, treats the whole of the annual 500*l.* as the profit of the respective year, he will find at the end of the five years that his source of income has disappeared. If, on the other hand, at the end of each year a sum of 200*l.* is carried to the credit of a sinking fund, and the remaining 300*l.* only are treated as income, the owner of the patent will, at the end of the five years, be able to invest his original 1,000*l.* in some other profitable manner. Where the facts are so very plain this seems almost a truism, but in many cases it is more difficult to distinguish between income in the proper sense and repayment of capital. The inquiry ought, however, always to be made and acted on. The importance of taking the depreciation of property into account in ascertaining the profits of a given year is even more obvious in the case of a company than in the case of a private individual. The gradual disappearance of wasting property must, in the end, materially damnify preference shareholders, debenture holders, and ordinary creditors, and must also cause great injustice as between the persons entitled to the income of shares for limited periods and the persons ultimately entitled to the property of the shares. It seems strange that, although the integrity of the capital of limited companies is in other directions most jealously watched by our Courts, the greatest laxity is allowed with reference to the valuation of assets of a wasting nature. In the leading case of Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co., 41 C. D. 1, it was held by the Court of Appeal that 'there is nothing in the Companies Acts to prohibit a company formed to work a wasting property, as, e.g., a mine or a patent, from distributing as dividend the excess of the proceeds of working above the expenses of working, nor to impose on the company any obligation to set apart a sinking fund to meet the depreciation in the value of the wasting property.'"

See also the article on "Depreciation," ibid.

4 - The System approved by the Court of Appeal in Verner v. General and Commercial Trust, (1891) 2 Ch. 239.

In this case the company was formed to invest its capital in stocks, funds, shares, and securities of various descriptions, and to apply the income in paying dividends. It had raised 600,000*l.* by the issue of share capital, and 300,000*l.* by the issue of debenture stock, and had invested the whole. The market price of some of the investments acquired fell, and others proved worthless, so that to the extent of at least 250,000*l.* the capital was not represented by equivalent assets; but the income from the investments, or from those which yielded an income, was in excess of the annual outgoings. On these facts it was held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of Stirling, J., that the company might apply this excess income to the payment of dividend, notwithstanding the loss of capital or depreciation.

Verner v. General and Commercial Trust

Stirling, J., in his judgment, referred to what Lord, M. R., said in Re Ebbw Vale Co., 4 C. D. 827, "as indicating his opinion to be that when loss of capital had occurred in a company governed by the Act of 1862, dividends could not be paid unless the loss was made good," and to the consequent passing of the Companies Act of 1877, which—

"does provide a means by which a company which has lost capital, or whose capital is, to some extent, not represented by available assets, may reduce that capital, and so be enabled properly to pay a dividend on the reduced capital; and we all know that to this process of reduction of capital for the purpose of enabling dividends to be paid, recourse has been largely had in practice. This, I am bound to say, seems to be a consideration to which great weight ought to be given, so much so that if I had not the guidance of the judgments of the members of the Court of Appeal in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., 41 C. D. 1, I should probably come to the conclusion that the only proper course which could be taken by a company, constituted as the present company is, would be to present a petition, and obtain the sanction of the Court to a reduction of capital before a dividend was declared." But his Lordship said that such a view was inconsistent with the principles laid down by the Court of Appeal in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., ubi supra, and, accordingly, applying those principles to the particular case, he held that it had not been made out that the payment of dividend was ultra vires, but he said, "I base my decision on the peculiar nature of the constitution of this particular company, and it is not to be assumed that I should have arrived at the same conclusion if I had been dealing with an ordinary trading company: if, for example, the object of the company had been to carry on the business of a stockbroker, and the investments had been the ordinary stock-in-trade of this business."

This doubting judgment was not entirely satisfactory to the parties to this very friendly action or to the various other companies interested, and accordingly the matter was carried to the Court of Appeal (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Kay, L. J.J.) as an interlocutory appeal.

In the result the decision of Stirling, J., was affirmed.

Lindley, L. J., in delivering the judgment of A. L. Smith, L. J., and of himself, said that the broad question raised was whether a limited company which has lost part of its capital can lawfully declare and pay a dividend without first making good the capital which has been lost; that he had no doubt that it could, although it could not lawfully return paid-up capital to the shareholders.

"There is a vast difference," the learned judge went on to say, "between paying dividends out of capital and paying dividends out of other money belonging to the company, and which is not part of the capital mentioned in the company's memorandum of association. . . . If, therefore, the company has any assets which are not its capital within the meaning of the Companies Acts, there is no law which prohibits the division of such assets amongst the shareholders.

"Further, it was decided in that case (Lee v. Newchattel Asphalt Company)—and, in my opinion, rightly decided—that a limited company formed to purchase and work a wasting property, such as a leasehold quarry, might lawfully declare and pay dividends out of the money produced by working such wasting property, without setting aside part of that money to keep the capital up to its original amount.

"There is no law which prevents a company from sinking its capital in the purchase or production of a money-making property or undertaking, and in dividing the money annually yielded by it without preserving the capital sunk so as to be able to reproduce it intact either before or after the winding-up of the company. . . .

"But although there is nothing in the statutes requiring even a limited company to keep up its capital, and there is no prohibition against payment of dividends out of any other of the company's assets, it does not follow that dividends may be lawfully paid out of other assets regardless of the debts and liabilities of the company. A dividend presupposes a profit in some shape, and to divide as dividend the receipts, say, for a year, without deducting the expenses incurred in that year in producing the receipts, would be as unjustifiable in point of law as it would be reckless and blameworthy in the eyes of business men. The same observation applies to payment of dividends out of borrowed money. Further, if the income of any year arises from a consumption in that year of what may be called circulating capital, the division of such income as dividend, without replacing the capital consumed in producing it, will be a payment of a dividend out of capital within the meaning of the prohibition which I have endeavoured to explain.

"It has been already said that dividends presuppose profits of some sort, and this is unquestionably true. But the word 'profits' is by no means free from ambiguity. The law is much more accurately expressed by saying that dividends cannot be paid out of capital than by saying that they can only be paid out of profits. The last expression leads to the inference that the capital must always be kept up, and be represented by assets which, if sold, would produce it; and this is more than is required by law. Perhaps the shortest way of expressing the distinction, which I am endeavouring to explain, is to say that fixed capital may be sunk and lost, and yet that the excess of current receipts over current payments may be divided; but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as otherwise it will enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law."

Kay, L. J., however, whilst agreeing that in the special circumstances of the case the appeal must be dismissed, said: "I have not a very confident opinion in the matter, but on the whole I am not satisfied [i.e., in the circumstances of the case] that there is any legal obligation on the directors to replace lost capital out of income"; but, as appears from the passage cited from his judgment above, at p. 880, his Lordship disapproved of the double account system, and was of opinion that the profits of a joint stock trading company should be ascertained in the manner usual in the case of partnership concerns, viz., on the single account system, supra, p. 880.

Such was the not too encouraging result of this friendly action, in which the defendants had the great advantage of being sued by a plaintiff who was not unwilling to be defeated. Stirling, J., apart from the authority of Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co., supra, which was binding on him, was evidently against the payment of dividend in the circumstances, Kay, L. J., was not very confident that it could be paid, and Lindley, L. J., whilst in terms reiterating the paradoxical propositions laid down in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., showed that he in effect qualified them considerably by laying down that dividend presupposes profit, and that loss of "circulating" capital must be made good in ascertaining profits.

The views expressed by the Court in Vernor v. General and Commercial Trust depart somewhat from the views expressed in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., and appear to involve the following not altogether consistent propositions:—

- (1.) Dividend presupposes profit of some sort; but it is for the company to determine by its articles or by resolution, what sort of profits are available for dividends, and if they do so, the Court will not, subject to what follows, interfere, however illusory or unsound the principle adopted for arriving at profits may be.
- (2.) To divide the net income arising from a company's property is not to be regarded as in any sense a return of capital, even when the income arises from a wasting property acquired by an expenditure of capital, for instance, from a lease of ten acres of coal, one acre of which is worked out each year, unless indeed the wasting property is circulating capital. See Bond v. Barrow Hematite Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 353.
- (3.) Therefore, though an express power in the memorandum to return capital to shareholders can only be exercised with the sanction of the Court, a power in the articles to apply the proceeds arising from a wasting property in paying dividends, is free from objection, although the result is the same.
- (4.) Loss or depreciation of "fixed" capital does not affect the profits available for dividend, or render it necessary to make good the same out of income. "Fixed capital" does not Resulting propositions.

The regulations are to be followed subject to next paragraph).

Net income of wasting property is divisible as profits.

Express power in articles to apply such net income is equivalent to sanction of Court to reduce capital. Loss, &c. of "fixed capital" need not be made good out of income.

mean property physically fixed, but property which the company means to retain as part of its undertaking. See further, pp. 881 et seq., supra.

Otherwise as to "circulating capital."

- (5.) But in ascertaining profit for a particular period, loss or depreciation of "circulating" capital during the same period must be taken into account. Circulating capital means here capital which performs its whole office in the production in which it is engaged by a single use, e.g., the goods which the tradesman has for sale, he sells out and out and gets the money in exchange; the materials which the workman uses up in making repairs for a customer; the horses of a horse dealer.

Realized accretions of capital are divisible as profits.

- (6.) Accretions to capital, when realized, may be brought into the profit and loss account of the year and dealt with accordingly. Lubbock v. British Bank of S. A., (1892) 2 Ch. 198. Compare Foster v. New Trinidad Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 208 (supra).

Legal mode of ascertaining profits if regulations admit.

- (7.) A legal mode of ascertaining the profits of a particular period, if the articles so provide, is to take an account of the ordinary outgoings, and in so far as the receipts exceed the outgoings, and the loss of circulating capital during such period, the same may be treated as profit. But see Dovey v. Cory, infra.

- (8.) A balance-sheet need not disclose the true position of the company. It deals, as regards the assets, not with existing facts, but with past history. It shows what the particular assets cost, not what they are worth. Thus, if a company buys a property for 10,000*l.* and the value has fallen to 1,000*l.*, it will—on this hypothesis—be properly entered on the balance-sheet as property that cost 10,000*l.*, and it will remain at that figure even though each year, by consumption or otherwise, it depreciates more and more.

From this analysis of the judgment in Verner v. General and Commercial Trust it is plain that the Court of Appeal allowed the greatest possible latitude to shareholders, and afforded the least possible protection to creditors, and if the above propositions are all to be accepted as correct, it is obvious that the law is in a defective condition.

The system, commercially unsound

One thing is clear, viz., that these decisions, whatever their authority as expositions of the law, did not pretend to touch the commercial or economical practice in such matters, and from that point of view, the systems of ascertaining profits which they sanction are so obviously unsound that men of business generally refuse to act on such systems.

Following these decisions came, in 1899, the decision of the Court of Appeal in National Bank of Wales, Limited, (1899) 2 Ch. 629 (on appeal, sub nom. Dorey v. Cory, see infra, p. 899).

In that case the company was being wound up, and it was sought to make a former director, Mr. Cory, liable for alleged misfeasance or breach of trust in paying dividends out of capital, or making false statements in reports and otherwise which resulted in such dividends being paid. The defence was two-fold: (1) That he had acted honestly, and that if the dividends were paid out of capital he was not cognizant thereof, or that the statements complained of were false; and (2) that the dividends were not in fact paid out of capital, but out of revenue applicable to the payment of dividends.

As to (1), it appeared that Mr. Cory had acted on false information given to him by the officials of the company, and it was held by the Court that he was not guilty of a breach of duty in not discovering that those whom he trusted were misleading him. As to (2) it was held, in accordance with the principles laid down in Lee v. Newchapel Co., 40 C. D. 1, and Verner v. General and Commercial Co., (1894) 2 Ch. 239, that the dividends in question were not in fact paid out of capital. "What was done," said Lord Lindley, who delivered the judgment of the Court, was this: the accounts were made up annually. Such losses incurred during the year as the directors recognized as losses were written off or provided for by carrying sums of money over to a reserve fund, and the balance of the receipts in any year over the outgoings in the same year, after making some allowance for debts and deductions for sums carried over to the reserve fund, were treated as the profits of that year, and were distributed as dividends; losses written off any year were not brought forward the next year, so as to diminish the profits of the next year, but were simply ignored, a fresh start being made every year and dividends being paid out of the excess of the annual receipts over the annual expenses. The effect of this was to throw all bad debts, written off and not provided for by an increase of the reserve fund, on to the capital: to diminish the paid up capital year by year, and nevertheless to keep paying dividends out of the annual receipts over the current expenses. It is obvious that such a procedure, if long continued, would ultimately exhaust the capital of the company, and the first disastrous year in which the current receipts exceeded the current outgoings would produce great embarrassment. Any dealing with the company's assets, however reprehensible, must be justified by the fact of being accompanied with paying dividends out of the paid up capital of the company. The paid up capital of a limited company cannot be lawfully distributed to the shareholders under the guise of dividends or otherwise. Even an ordinary resolution authorizing the payment of interest to shareholders on the shares paid upon their shares cannot authorize a payment of such interest out of capital see Shelford, (1892) 1 Ch. 151; but paid up capital which is lost can be made good in paying dividends, than in paying debts. Its loss renders the application of it impossible. There was no such dealing with the capital of the company in this case as to amount to an illegal appropriation of it. Further, it is not possible for the Court to say that the law prohibits a limited company, even a limited banking company, from paying dividends unless its paid-up capital is intact. Suppose a heavy unexpected loss is sustained, which must be met if there are assets with which to meet it, the capital, even if it is capital, must, if necessary, be applied to meet it. Such an application of capital is a perfectly legitimate use of it. There is no law which in the case supposed prevents the payment of all future dividends until all the capital so expended is made good. Many honest and prudent men of business would replace a large loss of capital by degrees, and would reduce the dividends, but not stop them entirely, until the whole loss was made good. No law compels them to pay none at all. There are cases in which no honest, competent man of business would think of charging particular debts or expenses to capital.

"We are certainly not prepared to sanction the notion that all debts incurred in carrying on a business can be properly permanently charged to capital, and that the excess of receipts over other outgoings can be afterwards properly divided as profits, as if there had been no previous loss. No honest, competent man engaged in trade or commerce would carry on business on such a principle. But excluding cases in which every one can see that a particular debt or outlay cannot be reasonably charged to capital, it may be safely said that what losses can be properly charged to capital and what its income is a matter for business men to determine, and it is often a matter on which the opinions of honest and competent men will differ; see Timothy v. Parrish, 33 Beav. 336. There is no hard and fast legal rule on the subject.

"There can, however, be no doubt that, if expenses or payments are obviously improperly charged to capital, and are so charged simply to swell the apparent profits, and to make it appear that dividends may properly be declared, dividends declared and paid under such circumstances cannot be treated as being properly paid out of profits, and can no more be justified than if they were paid out of capital. This was determined in Bloomfield v. Metropolitan Bank, and has been acted upon in many other cases—e.g., Rance v. Bank; Attford Bank v. Banking and Investment Society; Leeds Arcade Building and Investment Co. v. Shepherd; London and General Bank (No. 2).

"It would seem that Jenni. M. R., inclined to the opinion that a limited company could not pay dividends unless its paid-up capital was kept up; see Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. But no decision has yet gone this far, and it has since been decided that dividends may be paid, even by a limited company, although its nominal capital is not kept up; see Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust and Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co. What was lost there was fixed capital, and it is obvious that circulating capital, or any other money employed in earning returns, must be deducted from them in order to ascertain how much of them can be regarded as profit. If the returns do not exceed the money spent in procuring them (whether such money be called circulating capital or by any other name) there can be no profits, and no ingenious process of book-keeping can alter the fact. It is not denied that in this case the annual receipts did exceed the annual outgoings, and, the dividends having been paid out of the excess, the allegation that they were paid out of capital is not accurate. But, as already pointed out, it does not at all follow that the course adopted by the directors in declaring dividends year after year as they did was legally justifiable. It cannot be denied that the balance-sheets and profit and loss accounts concealed the truth, as now known, from the shareholders, and were, as it now turns out, grievously misleading. The shareholders were never told that the paid-up capital was being constantly diminished by bad debts, as now appears to have been the case. The shareholders were told every year that proper provision was made for such debts, and now that the case has been thoroughly investigated, it is really reduced to the question whether Mr. John Cory was justified in making the statements he did, and in dealing as he did with debts which have now been ascertained to be bad. It is easy to be wise after the event, and there is danger in treating a director as knowing years ago what now appears to be the fact. But it is the duty of the Court to examine the state of things as they appeared to him when the dividends were declared, and to decide whether he was justified in what he did by what he knew or ought to have known. What he ought to have known is as important as what he knew.

The views thus expressed did not advance matters much beyond the earlier decisions. They only emphasized and carried to their logical conclusion the principles laid down in the cases just referred to, and illustrated in the clearest way that, according to the view of the Court of Appeal, a limited company was at liberty to pay dividends year by year, although its capital was being concurrently diminished and the dividends were [not] in a business sense paid out of profits.

This, however, was carried to the House of Lords, and is reported under the name of

Dovey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477

The House of Lords affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal, on the ground that, as the respondents by their counsel admitted, they "did not impute to Mr. Cory any moral obliquity," the Commission in effect cleared him of the charge of misfeasance or breach of trust, and therefore of any liability for the same; but as regards the other grounds on which the Court of Appeal had decided the case, the House of Lords expressed an extremely guarded opinion. The Lord Chancellor said:

My Lord, I am very clearly of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is right and ought to be affirmed. But my opinion is entirely based on the question of fact that he [Cory] was guilty of no breach of trust whatever, and for reasons which I will refer to hereafter. I am very anxious not to deal with some reasons given for their judgment by the Court of Appeal, which, in the view of the facts that I take, do not arise here."

And then, after dealing with the question of misfeasance and breach of trust, his Lordship proceeded thus:

If I assume, as I do, that Mr. Cory acted upon representations made to him which he believed, and which came from the officers of the bank, to whom he was, in my judgment, justified in giving credit, the discussion of whether the dividends actually paid were or were not properly divisible has no bearing on Mr. Cory's liability, and I am very reluctant to give any opinion upon it, inasmuch as the question may arise when it may be necessary to decide it. I deprecate any premature judgment. My Lords, I am, as I have said, very reluctant to enter into a question which, for the reasons I have given, does not arise here, and into which the Court of Appeal has entered at some length. The only reason why I refer to it at all is lest by silence I should be supposed to adopt a course of reasoning as to which I am not satisfied that it is correct. I doubt very much whether such questions can ever be treated in the abstract at all. The mode and manner in which a business is carried on, and whether usual or the reverse, may have a considerable influence in determining the question what may be treated as profits and what as capital. Even the distinction between fixed and floating capital, which may be appropriate enough in an abstract treatise like Adam Smith's 'Wealth of Nations,' may with reference to a concrete case be quite inappropriate. It is easy to lay down as an abstract proposition that you must not pay dividends out of capital, but the application of that very plain proposition may raise questions of the utmost difficulty in their solution. I desire, as I have said, not to express any opinion. But as an illustration of what difficulties may arise, the example given by the learned counsel of one ship being lost out of a considerable number, and the question whether all dividends must be stopped until the value of that lost ship is made good out of the further earnings of the company or partnership, is one which one would have to deal with. On the one hand, people put their money into a trading concern to give them an income, and the sudden stoppage of all dividends would send down the value of their shares to zero and possibly involve its ruin. On the other hand, companies cannot at their will and without the precautions enforced by the statute, reduce their capital. But what are profits and what is capital may be a difficult and sometimes an almost impossible problem to solve. When the time comes that these questions come before us in a concrete case we must deal with them, but until they do, I for one decline to express an opinion not called for by the particular facts before us, and I am the more averse to doing so because I foresee that many matters will have to be considered by men of business which are not altogether familiar to a court of law."

And Lord Macnaghten, in the same case, whilst expressing his concurrence, said that he desired to guard himself from being understood to assent to all the propositions supposed to have been laid down by the Court of Appeal in this case.

Lord Davey went further. After expressing his concurrence as regards Mr. Cory's liability, he said:

"I desire to express my dissent from some propositions of law which were laid down in the Court of Appeal, and on which your Lordships thought it right to hear the respondent's counsel. The learned judges seem to have thought that a joint stock company incorporated under the Companies Acts may write off to capital losses incurred in previous years, and may in any subsequent year, if the receipts for that year exceed the outgoings, pay dividends out of such excess without making up the capital account. If this proposition be well founded, it appears to me that a company whose capital is not represented by available assets need never trouble itself to reduce its capital with the leave of the Court, and subject to the other conditions imposed by the Act of 1877, in order to enable itself to pay dividends out of current receipts. My Lords, it may be that I have misapprehended the statement of law intended to be made by learned judges in the Court of Appeal. I think that is possible. For, as I had that in Pepper v. General and Commercial Investment Tr. (1880) 14 Q.B. 239, at page 266, Lord Lindley says: 'Perhaps the shortest way of explaining the distinction which I am endeavouring to explain is to say that fixed capital may be sunk and lost, and yet that the excess of current receipts over current payments may be divided; but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as otherwise it would enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law.' I reserve my opinion as to the effect of an actual and ascertained loss of part of the company's fixed capital, as in the case put by Mr. Swinfen Eady of a loss of a ship uninsured. But, subject to this observation, I think that the statement of law contained in the passage I have quoted is not open to objection, and it is only because the learned judge appears to me to have departed from it in his judgment in the present case that I have troubled your Lordships with these remarks."

From these dicta it is plain that the House of Lords was not prepared to accept as sound the principles as to the payment of dividend laid down in the Court of Appeal in the National Bank of Wales principles which in the main accorded with those adopted in Lee v. The Neuchâtel Co., supra, p. 890, and in Verner v. General and Commercial Trust, supra, p. 893.

Had the principle there laid down not been open to criticism, the House of Lords would have affirmed the decision without making such pointed and significant reservations. In dealing as it did with the matter the House, in effect, administered a salutary caution to those who thereafter were minded to act on those principles.

Reviewing then the several systems above discussed, it is submitted that the single account system is the one which is open to the least objection. Clearly the Legislature intended to limit the power of companies to pay dividends; and it seems not unreasonable to assume that the limit contemplated was that dividends should only be paid out of profits, and that profits should be ascertained as men of business usually ascertain the same, and not in accordance with rules which would allow capital assets to be gradually transferred to the pockets of the shareholders although representing assets acquired with the capital they have contributed, and meant by the Legislature to meet the claims of creditors subject to the fair risks of trading.

The single account system conforms to these requirements. It has the advantage of being commercially and economically sound, which is more than can be predicated of the other systems; and the objection that it gives facilities for writing up and down the assets, and for the payment of dividends out of fictitious profits, applies equally to the systems approved by the Court of Appeal in Verner v. General, & Co., ibid supra, for according to that system circulating capital is to be valued. Moreover, as appears above (p. 888), it is contrary to practice, as applied to the single account system, to write up and down permanent capital assets.

No doubt the single account system does not permit a company limited by shares to expend its capital, or most of it, in the acquisition of a wasting property—say, a ten years' mining lease—and to divide the net yearly income so that at the end of the lease the capital will be gone. And it is suggested that not to be able to form a company on such a footing is a hardship. Who is harmed? it is asked. The answer is that it is not consistent with the scheme of the Companies Act for the protection of creditors to allow the capital thus in effect to be returned to the shareholders without the sanction of the Court, and those who elect to take the privileges of limited liability under the Act must pay the price and submit to the restrictions imposed by it.

The most serious objection to the systems approved by the Court of Appeal is just this, that they derogate from the rights of creditors by sanctioning the distribution as profit of that which obviously includes capital. If the memorandum were to authorize the division of the capital among the shareholders by ten equal instalments, the authority would be clearly void: can it then be legal to authorize the expenditure of the capital in an acre of coal, or in an annuity for ten years, or a leasehold for ten years, and to distribute the annual income without making good the capital from time to time consumed under the name of income, when in the result at the end of the time the capital will have in fact been returned to the shareholders? Surely the answer must be in the negative if the Act prohibiting reduction of capital without the sanction of the Court is not to be rendered a dead letter. "I think," said Fry, J., in Re Alexandra Palace Co., 21 Ch. D. 169, "no subterfuge by which is attempted to return capital to shareholders, and thereby diminish their liability, ought to be countenanced for one moment by the Court." And see the remarks of Farwell, L. J., supra, p. 171.

Another objection to those systems is that they afford great opportunities in another way for covertly transferring the capital assets into the pockets of the shareholders; for not only may income which really represents a return of capital be divided by way of profit, but a large expenditure one year may be debited to capital and the enhanced income of the next year treated as profits; e.g., capital may be expended one year in removing the cover from a piece of reef sufficient for next year's work: this expenditure may be placed to the debit of capital, and next year the whole income from working the piece uncovered, less the working expenses of that year, may be treated as profit.

Or, a crop of unfruitful prices may be sowed one year in order, by driving competition away, to reap a fuller harvest of profit next year; in such case, if the unfruitful prices result in a loss, that will fall on capital, and next year the whole profit of the year will be available for dividend.

Further, if in applying the rule laid down in Verner v. General and Commercial Co., (1899) 2 Ch. 239 that in ascertaining profits "fixed" capital need not, but "circulating" capital must, be kept up—the usual (supra, p. 831) definitions of fixed and circulating capital are to be adopted, the absurd conclusion would follow that in ascertaining the profits of an omnibus company the loss or depreciation of horses and vehicles need not be taken into account; and that in ascertaining the profits of a manufacturing company the loss and depreciation of machinery, implements and rolling stock need not be taken into account; and in either case that the so-called profits of the year may legitimately be swollen by omitting to make any provision for such loss or depreciation. If this is what the Court of Appeal meant it follows that the Court, whilst adopting the phraseology of the economists, has discarded their principles; for clearly in such cases there can, from an economist's point of view, be no profit until the loss and depreciation has been made good or provided for: unless the view (supra, p. 882) of Professor Bonamy Price should be adopted, namely, that there is no such thing as absolute fixed capital, and that assets of the description just mentioned ought to be taken to include and to consist in part of circulating capital, so that the consumption of each year, so far as it consists of circulating capital, should be made good, and that this is what the Court meant. But this can scarcely be maintained; for the views expressed by the Court of Appeal in Lee v. The Neuchatel Co., 40 C. D. 1, were approved, and in that case the Court said that it was not necessary in the case of a wasting property to make good, in ascertaining the profits, the year's consumption of capital.

It may be that the House of Lords will ultimately hold that, whilst the single account system is a sound and proper system for the ascertainment of profits, it is not the only allowable system, and that, under the Companies Act, any mode of ascertaining profit may be adopted which does not directly or indirectly involve the treating as profit that which is in fact capital, or property which ought to be applied to make good capital lost or unrepresented by available assets.

Thus, it may be held allowable to act on the footing that each financial year of the company is to be considered a separate adventure, and that the surplus receipts of the year, after paying expenses and restoring capital to the position it was in at the commencement of the year, are, unless the articles otherwise provide, to be considered the profits of the year. This would be a workable system, and the objections are

- (a) That it ignores the main purpose for which the Companies Act, 1877, was passed, and in effect shows that Act to have been practically needless; and
- (b) That it is not consistent with the rules laid down in Lee v. Neuchatel Co., 40 C. D. 1, according to which it is not necessary, in ascertaining the profits of the year, to make good the capital consumed during such year; or it may be that the House of Lords will hold that another allowable mode of ascertaining profits is to treat the paid-up capital and all borrowed moneys like the capital of a settled fund, and accordingly to invest it in permanent investments, and then to treat the net income arising therefrom, after payment of expenses and interest, as profit available for dividends, accretions to and diminutions of capital, as in the case of a settled fund, being disregarded in ascertaining income. But this system again is open to the difficulty (a) above referred to, and it cannot be applied to a company in which the capital cannot thus be kept separate.

Or, again, it may be held that it is open to a company to ascertain profits by periodical valuations of assets, so that if at the end of any year it appears that the value of the assets exceeds the paid-up capital and the debts and liabilities, the excess may be treated as profit; and there may be other allowable systems; and there can be little or no doubt that this last-mentioned mode would be allowable.

But all this is in the nature of speculation, and pending an authoritative declaration on the subject the practice of prudent men of business must be the safest guide.

As to the Employment of Accountants.

Employment of accountants and auditors.

For the purpose of ascertaining profits, directors are entitled to employ skilled agents, such as accountants, valuers, actuaries and auditors (Leeds Estate Co. v. Shephard, 36 Ch. D. 787), and to give credit to their reports, provided that they—the directors—act bona fide, and

Rance's case

"If," said Lord Justice James, in Rance's case, 6 Ch. 418, "the directors, by placing unfounded reliance upon the representations of their servants or actuaries, had arrived at the conclusion that they had made a divisible profit, this Court ought not, I say, to sit as a Court of Appeal from that conclusion, although it might afterwards be satisfactorily proved that there were very great errors in the accounts, which would not have occurred if they had been made out with greater strictness or with more scrutinizing care."

In the same case, Lord Justice Mellish said:

"I quite agree that if directors, or a proper actuary, had made out a profit and loss account, the Court ought to assume, very strongly indeed, that it was a correct account, and ought not, without very strong reasons showing that it was done malâ fide, to set it aside, or declare a dividend made upon it improper."

Denham & Co.

"It is sufficient if directors appoint a person of good repute and competent skill to audit the accounts, and have no reason for suspecting that anything is wrong. The directors are bound to examine entries in the company's books." Per Chitty, J., Denham & Co., 25 C. D. p. 768; approved in Duncan, (1901) A. C. 477.

Midland Land and Investment Corp. (not reported).

In the case of Midland Land and Investment Corporation, Limited (who were before Chitty, J., in Nov. 1886), the question arose whether a dividend had been paid out of capital. It appeared that the directors had employed an experienced valuer to value the assets of the corporation, which consisted of building land and ground rents and contracts and options, and had prepared a balance-sheet in which, upon the basis of this valuation, it appeared that the value of the assets exceeded the debts and liabilities by 100,000*l.*, and out of the surplus thus shown the directors had carried 20,000*l.* to the dividend fund and been party to its distribution by way of dividend.

The valuer had in many cases valued the assets at more than they cost the company, and much more than they afterwards realized, and it was contended that the dividend ought not to have been paid out of profits which rested on estimate. Chitty, J., however, was of opinion that the directors were not liable, and the following extracts from his judgment (8 Nov. 1886) are of interest:

"In declaring a dividend, in my opinion, in trading concerns, the directors are entitled to put an estimate on the value of their assets from time to time, in order to ascertain whether there is or is not a surplus remaining after providing for liabilities, and where they make those valuations from time to time on a just and fair basis, and take all the precautions which ordinary prudent men of business engaged in a similar business would do, they are entitled to treat the value thus ascertained as profit. But in saying that, regard must, of course, always be had to the nature of the business. I put this illustration before you, and I put it again. There are some trading concerns dealing in goods and the like where the turn-over is rapid, and where the business is brought to market with the greatest facility. With a large business, and supposing the whole stock-in-trade is turned over and converted into money, in the ordinary course of dealing, within a few weeks or a few months, the directors there are entitled to put a valuation upon the goods, and to say that, having regard to the state of the market, seeing that there is no serious apprehension that the sales will not proceed in the ordinary way, they are entitled to treat, for the purpose of profit, their valuation as a basis on which they can say there is a profit shown. . . . That is a simple case. I put now one that requires more caution on the part of the directors, and that is where the turn-over is not rapid, and where the nature of the business, such as the business these directors had to deal with, is an eminently speculative one, and where they cannot bring their commodity, whether it may be ordinary goods or building land, such as in this case, into the market rapidly, and where they must wait before they realize, and where their market is liable to great fluctuations one way or the other. A case of that kind requires more skill, and more judgment, and more caution. Still I refrain from laying down, and I think I should be wrong in laying down, that, that being a trading concern, the directors were not entitled to make a just estimate of what they considered to be the profits, making all reasonable allowances, and all reasonable reductions with regard to the prospects of trade, and the particular trade in which they are engaged, and the general commercial prosperity which may, or may not, of course, have a direct or indirect bearing on their own particular business. Now, when it comes to questions of valuation, it is undoubted that, except in various rare cases, the directors are not the persons who have the skill. Their constituents, the shareholders, are not to suppose that they have the skill to make valuations which require a special knowledge and special consideration, and the directors under those circumstances pursue a right course if they employ a gentleman of integrity—a gentleman of reputation in the town or district where he lives, a gentleman who is supposed and generally reputed to be a competent and skilled man—to make a valuation. The directors cannot go round, as I have said during the course of the argument, each man individually, and value the properties such as those which formed the staple of the assets of this company. Their valuations would be useless, and they must therefore employ a competent man. In this case the directors did employ a gentleman against whom nothing has been said. Nothing has been said as to his position, as to his skill, or as to his integrity, and the directors received from this gentleman a report and valuation which is dated the 31st January, 1880, and that formed the basis of the balance-sheet in respect of which the dividend for the year ending the 31st of December, 1879, was declared. . . .

Upon that report he advised the directors that he had carefully surveyed and valued the whole of the properties, and he concluded his report by stating that he estimated the total present value of all the above properties at 824,747l., and he said he had arrived at this valuation without any knowledge of the book debts of the corporation representing such properties. I understood that to be, that he had arrived at his conclusion without reference to the sums to be found in the company's books. . . . He says in his estimate he had not taken credit for any prospective values. Now, there I think he was right; but I think the directors were entitled to rely on what the skilled valuer told them—that he had, as he says in substance, taken the present value, and had not taken credit for any future, and in that sense speculative, value. . . . The substance, therefore, is that the dividend was to be paid out of the fund which was represented by the surplus, which had been ascertained to be 109,990l., of the assets as valued over and above the liabilities. Now, it is obvious that the directors did not advise that the whole of this estimated profit—because I agree that it is an estimate, and it must be an estimate—should be dealt with. . . . I think, under these circumstances, that it would be a terrible thing for all companies, shareholders as well as directors, to say that this was not justified. . . . I think, therefore, . . . that no case is made out against the directors with regard to the dividend paid on the balance-sheet of 31st December, 1879.”

“I cannot think that it can be expected of a director that he should be watching either the inferior officers of the bank or verifying the calculations of the auditors himself. The business of life could not go on if people could not trust those who are put into a position of trust for the express purpose of attending to details of management. If Mr. Cory was deceived by his own officers—and the theory of his being free from moral fraud assumes, under the circumstances, that he was—there appears to me to be no case against him at all. The provision made for bad debts, it is well said, was inadequate; but those who assured him that it was adequate were the very persons who were to attend to that part of the business; and so of the rest. If the state and condition of the bank were what was represented, then no one will say that the sum paid in dividends was excessive.” Per Lord Halsbury, L. C., in Dovey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477.

“I think the respondent was bound to give his attention to, and exercise his judgment as a man of business on, the matters which were brought before the board at the meetings which he attended, and it is not proved that he did not do so. But I think he was entitled to rely upon the judgment, information and advice of the chairman and general manager, as to whose integrity, skill and competence he had no reason for suspicion. I agree with what was said by Sir George Jessel in Hallmark's case (9 Ch. D. 329), and by Mr. Justice Chitty in Dryham & Co. (25 Ch. D. 752), that directors are not bound to examine entries in the company's books. It was the duty of the general manager and (possibly) the chairman to go carefully through the returns from the branches and to bring before the board any matter requiring their consideration; but the respondent was not, in my opinion, guilty of negligence in not examining them for himself, notwithstanding that they were laid on the table of the board for reference.” Per Lord Davey, Dovey v. Cory, (1901) A. C. 477.

An auditor, or accountant, or valuer who neglects his duty may be held liable for the consequences. Leeds Estate Co. v. Shephard, 36 C. D. 787; London and General Bank (No. 3), (1895) 2 Ch. 673; Oxford Benefit Building Society, 35 Ch. D. 511; New Oriental Bank Co., 41 W. R. 16. But in making his investigation he is entitled to rely on documents vouched by servants of the companies unless he has reason for believing those servants to be dishonest. Squire Cash Chemist v. Ball, 28 T. L. R. 81. The Act of 1908, sects. 112, 113, reproducing sects. 21-23 of the Act of 1900, imposes on him a statutory duty, and he is liable for breach thereof.

Opinions of Counsel.

Looking to the divergent views which prevail as to the mode in which profits are to be ascertained, it may be of interest to give a few opinions of counsel.

Opinions of counsel on mode of ascertaining profits

The following is an extract from the opinion given (1884) by the late Lord Davey (when at the Bar) to a cable company:—

"I am of opinion that the directors cannot properly pay a dividend on any of the shares (including the preference shares) until they have taken one of two courses, i.e.—

- "(1) Have put the original cable into a proper state of repair and working order, or made adequate provision for that purpose; or
- "(2) If they determine to abandon the old cable, have taken proper steps under the Companies Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 26), to write off the capital represented by that cable, or a proper amount of it, as lost capital unrepresented by available assets. See judgment of Sir George Jessel in Darison v. Gillies, 16 C. D. 347.

"In making provision for the restoration of the old cable to a proper state of repair, I do not think it would be necessary to set aside the full amount required in one year; but if the expenditure is of such a character that it can be spread over a limited number of years, the directors would be justified in so dealing with it.

"If the directors determine to discontinue the use of the old cable, they should, of course, in arriving at the amount of the loss to be written off, take into account, on the one hand, the value (if any) of the cable in its present state, and the value of the new cable; and, on the other hand, the sum still owing in respect of the borrowed money for the construction of the new cable."

The following opinion (in relation to a trust investment company) was given in December, 1887, and was signed by the late Sir John Rigby (afterwards Lord Justice Rigby) when at the Bar, and by several other well-known Chancery lawyers:

"1. Is there any obligation upon directors to take into consideration the question of loss arising from permanent depreciation of securities, and to exercise their bona fide judgment in such consideration? Are they under obligation to write down the value of such securities in their books, and to replace such loss either out of reserve fund, if there be any sufficient for the purpose, or out of the profits of the company derived from dividends or interest on securities, if there be no other funds available for the purpose?

"Directors should not neglect to take into consideration a depreciation in value of securities which, in their judgment, appears to be of a permanent character. Loss should be made good out of reserve fund, or, failing this, out of the income of the then current year. Depreciation in value which has become of such a marked character as to be unavoidable should be dealt with as ascertained loss.

"2. Are they (the directors) bound, for the purpose of dividend, to neglect entirely temporary fluctuations in value of securities?"

"Directors are justified, though not bound, to take a very close estimate of securities of the company, as by actual valuation on a certain day. They may consider the securities as retaining their value if, in their opinion, the fall in value is only due to casual variation of the market.

"3. Whether, in case of an investment, consisting of shares in a company which has publicly reduced its capital, of a company in liquidation, or in bonds of States, or other debtors long in default, they (the directors) would not run a risk of a Court holding that their judgment had not been bonâ fide exercised if they neglected to treat the loss as permanent?"

"This case comes within the principles of the answer to the question No. 1.

"4. Whether they may take into account rises in value of securities held, whether a general rise or what the directors may conclude to be a permanent rise in any particular security, as a set-off or in reduction of the permanent loss of capital arising in the case of securities not sold?"

"The directors may take into account the rise in value of a security, but it must be of the same marked and permanent character as a depreciation referred to in answer to question No. 1."

The following opinion was given in 1890 by Sir John Rigby (afterwards Lord Justice Rigby) when at the Bar:—

"I am of opinion that the directors would not, under the circumstances, be justified in distributing the balance of revenue account, or any part thereof, by way of interim dividend. It appears to me that the profit there shown is counterbalanced by loss during the same period arising from depreciation of securities, so that in substance there are no profits out of which dividends can properly be declared.

"My opinion, above written, is founded on the assumption that the valuation of securities of June 30th was a proper valuation, such as the directors were willing to accept as correct. I am by no means of opinion that the market prices of the day for the different investments would necessarily be binding on the directors, as the value for immediate sale would not necessarily represent the true value to the trust. If it could be shown, by satisfactory valuation of competent persons such as the directors could stand by, and justify if necessary, that the real value of the investments differed from the market value of the day, I am of opinion that such real value, when ascertained, might properly be taken as the basis for estimating whether, on the whole, there had been a loss or profit during the period over which the transactions of the company extend, and the result might be to liberate a sum available for interim dividend."

PRIVATE COMPANIES.

CHAPTER X.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

THE term "private company" had until quite recently no very precise signification. In the last edition but one of this work it was used in its popular sense as denoting a company registered under the Act of 1862, but intended to be carried on without any appeal to the public for share capital. In this sense the term had long been recognized, even in the Courts of law. Thus, in a case before the Court of Appeal in 1881, Cotton, L. J., said: "But here it is an established fact that when the company was formed it was intended to be a private company, that is, it was intended to carry it on without calling in the public, or issuing any shares except to the then existing shareholders." British Seamless Paper Box Co., Lim., 17 C. Div. 467. And in George Newman & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 685, Lindley, L. J., said: "It is true that this company was a small one, and is what is called a private company."

Meaning of

Many industrial and banking companies," said Lord Herschell in Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22, "of the highest standing and credit have in recent years been, to use the common expression, 'converted' into joint stock companies, and often into what are called private companies, where the whole of the shares are held by the former partners." And in the same case Lord Macnaghten said: "Among the principal reasons which induce persons to form private companies . . . are the desire to avoid the risk of bankruptcy, and the increased facility afforded for borrowing money."

And in Wragg, Limited, (1897) 1 Ch. 796, Vaughan Williams, J., said: "There have been probably in the last twenty-five years an enormous quantity of private companies formed in which the partners in the business which was sold and the shareholders in the new company have been identical. It is a very usual way of dealing with a business, and the truth of the matter is, that the more valuable the business is, the more often does this in practice happen. Two partners in a first-rate business do not want, because they are converting their business into a company for convenience of administration and distribution of profits and liabilities, to let any strangers or outsiders into a share in the business, and the consequence is that in all probability, if you were to take a list of the private companies in existence at the present moment, you would find that their solvency compared very favourably with that of the solvency of what are ordinarily spoken of as public companies as distinct from private."

It was quite time—with this rapid multiplication of private companies going on—that a more precise meaning should be attached to the term, and this has now been done by sect. 121 (1) of the Act of 1908, replacing sect. 37 of the Act of 1907. The definition runs as follows:—

121.—(1) For the purposes of this Act the expression "private company" means a company which by its articles—

- (a) restricts the right to transfer its shares; and
- (b) limits the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company) to fifty; and
- (c) prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company.

(2) A private company may, subject to anything contained in the memorandum or articles, by passing a special resolution and by filing with the registrar of companies such a statement in lieu of prospectus as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before allotting any of its shares or debentures, together with such a statutory declaration as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before commencing business, turn itself into a public company.

(3) Where two or more persons hold one or more shares in a company jointly they shall, for the purposes of this section, be treated as a single member.

This definition summarises what may be called the three characteristic points or incidents of a private company—(1) restrictions on the transfer of shares; (2) limited membership; (3) no appeal to the public to subscribe. But it is to be observed that the test whether a company is a private company within the definition depends not on whether the company possesses these three features, but on whether its articles contain the specified provisions. And so long as the articles contain the provisions the company is a private company even though it disregards and acts in contravention of those provisions, e.g., by allowing the number of members to be more than fifty. Park v. Royalties Syndicate, (1912) 1 K. B. 330. It appears from the 20th Annual Report of the Board of Trade that the number of companies registered in 1910 was 7,181, and that of these 5,036 were registered as private companies, besides which 15,621 companies were by special resolution converted into private companies. Thus the popularity of the private company is marked.

Thus defined the "private company" is given various privileges and immunities by the Act, thus:—

- (1) A private company may be formed by two persons instead of seven subscribing the memorandum of association (Companies Act, 1908, s. 2).
- (2) No consents by directors to act need be filed, or list of directors delivered to the registrar (s. 72).
- (3) A private company is not bound by the provisions as to going to allotment under sect. 85 (7).
- (4) A private company may commence business immediately on registration, and without obtaining a certificate entitling it to commence business (sect. 87).
- (5) A private company need not file with the registrar a statement in the form of a balance-sheet (sect. 26).
- (6) A private company need not forward and file a report for the statutory meeting (sect. 65 (10)).
- (7) A private company may pay commission to persons for subscribing or underwriting its shares (sect. 89). Dominion of Canada Trading Syndicate v. Brigstone, (1911) 2 K. B. 648.
- (8) A private company is exempt from the provisions of sect. 114, which gives to the holders of preference shares, debentures and debenture stock the same right as ordinary shareholders have to receive and inspect the balance-sheets of the company, the reports of the auditors and other reports. See further, infra, p. 996 et seq.

But, subject to these and a few other distinctions made by the Companies Act, 1908, a so-called private company, though private in the sense above-mentioned, is in no way different from any other company under the Act. "If it takes the benefit of the Act [of 1862], it is bound by the Act as much as any other company. It can have no special benefit or immunity." Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 434. And in point of law it is a public company, for all companies registered under the Companies Act, 1908, are public companies (see Sharp, 45 C. D. 286, and Lysaght, (1898) 1 Ch. 115); although foreign companies purchasing their undertakings are not necessarily public companies. See Re Castlehow, (1903) 1 Ch. 352.

A private company, for instance, must make a return of allotments to the registrar under sect. 26 of the Act. It must hold the statutory meeting required by sect. 65. It must keep a register of its members accessible to the public under sect. 30. It must register its mortgages and charges under sect. 93. It must keep a register of its directors (whether they are called managers, trustees, or otherwise in the articles) and notify changes in the directorate to the registrar. If its articles require a share qualification for the directors sect. 73 applies, and no director must act without one unless within some prescribed period not exceeding two months from his appointment. It must make a return of allotments to the registrar under sect. 88. It must observe the statutory requirements as to audit of its accounts (sect. 112).

Private companies may be formed

- | | | |
|---|--------|---|
| 1) To acquire and carry on an existing business, or to carry out and complete some pending operation or transaction. (Class A.) | { or { | 2) To establish and carry on some new business, or to carry out some operation or transaction about to be commenced. (Class B.) |
|---|--------|---|

Where an existing business is made over to a private company formed for the purpose of taking it over, the operation is termed "the conversion of the business into a private company." Or if, as is commonly the case, the vendors have practically all the shares in the company, they are popularly said to have "turned themselves into a company," a description that is not perfect, but approaches more nearly to accuracy than the one previously noticed. Where persons are engaged in some single transaction, operation or adventure, it is extremely common to form a private company to take over their interests and liabilities, and carry out and complete such transaction, operation or adventure.

Private companies formed thus to carry out and complete some pending operation or transaction, or some contemplated operation or transaction, are commonly called Syndicates. At one time, syndicates were usually formed by agreement in writing signed by the members of the syndicate, but such agreements had the disadvantage of rendering the members partners, to the extent at least of making them agents for each other, and thereby exposing them to serious risk. Accordingly, it has now become usual to form and register syndicates as private companies. As to syndicates generally, see supra, p. 158.

Inducements to conversion.

There can be no doubt that in most cases the principal inducement to conversion is that by means of a private company the great benefit of "limited liability" can be obtained.

In order to appreciate the extent of this boon, it is necessary to contrast with it the position of those who engage in business without availing themselves of the Companies Act.

According to the law of England (prior to the Limited Partnerships Act, 1907), a person who goes into business, whether on his own account or as a partner in a firm, is liable for all the debts incurred in the business to the full extent of his means. "If," says the law, "you want to trade, you must risk all you have." This is bad enough in the case of an individual trader, but it is worse still in the case of a partner, for his whole fortune is at the mercy of a dishonest or imprudent partner. Thus:

- (a) Suppose a man to have 20,000*l.* invested in his business, and 5,000*l.* otherwise invested. He desires to limit his liability to the 20,000*l.*, so that if the business fails the 5,000*l.* will at any rate remain intact. He cannot do so.

- b) Suppose a man with a fortune of 50,000*l.* to be partner in a concern in which he has invested 5,000*l.* He desires to limit his liability to the 5,000*l.* He cannot. If the firm fails, the whole of his fortune may be swept away to pay the creditors, even though the failure may have been caused by the dishonesty or imprudence of his partners, or some person in the employment of the firm, and even though the partnership deed expressly declares that his liability is to be limited to 5,000*l.*
- (c) Suppose A., B. and C. to enter into partnership upon an agreement that each shall contribute by way of capital 2,000*l.*, viz. 1,000*l.* down and 1,000*l.* when wanted, and that the liability of each to creditors shall be limited to the amount so contributed. This attempt to limit their liability is void as to outsiders; and if debts are incurred, each partner will be liable "to his last shilling and his last acre" to pay the creditors in full, and in default may be made bankrupt.

The striking observations of James, L. J., in Baird's case, 5 Ch. 733, find here an appropriate place:—

"As between the partners and the outside world (whatever may be their private arrangements between themselves), each partner is the unlimited agent of every other in every matter connected with the partnership business or which he represents as partnership business, and not being in its nature beyond the scope of the partnership. A partner who may not have a farthing of capital left may take moneys or assets of the partnership to the value of millions, may bind the partnership by contracts to any amount, may give the partnership acceptances for any amount, and may even—as has been shown in many painful instances in this Court—involve his innocent partners in unlimited amounts for frauds which he has craftily concealed from them."

And in Greenwood's case, 3 De G. M. & G. 459, 476, Lord Cranworth, L. C., said: "A., B. and C., carrying on business together, may stipulate among themselves that no one of them shall be liable for more than 1,000*l.*; yet, if in the conduct of their business they incur a debt to the extent of 10,000*l.*, every one of them would be liable for it notwithstanding any stipulation they might have made with one another. That doctrine does not depend upon the persons dealing with the partners having notice, and any notice would be quite immaterial."

Such are the risks which the common law imposes on those engaged in business as individuals, and however wholesome a tonic unlimited liability may be to a trader, it is highly detrimental to all enterprise in trade. Who can wonder that the Legislature at last found itself obliged to relax the severity of the law, and to permit persons by forming a limited liability company under the Act of 1862, to place such limit on their liability as the dictates of prudence might suggest?

"These limited companies," in the words of Jessel, M. R., "are the offspring of a great necessity, that is, that men should be entitled to engage in commercial pursuits without necessarily involving the whole of their fortune in that particular pursuit in which they are engaged." Report of Com. of 1877 on the Acts.

And this observation may also be added to the credit of the company system: that though limited liability restricts the fund available to creditors, this fund—the capital of the company—is, so far as it goes, a reality, and persons dealing with a company have the means of knowing what they have to depend upon. In the case of an ordinary trader, non constat he has any capital at all available for his creditors.

Nevertheless, it took a good many years before the full significance of the change and immense advantages offered by the Act of 1862 were understood and appreciated. At first, the machinery of the Act was used almost exclusively for public companies with numerous shareholders, and the notion of utilizing it for private concerns scarcely entered the minds of the commercial community; it may be doubted whether it was contemplated at the time even by the Legislature; but by degrees it was discovered that private companies and syndicates could without difficulty or inconvenience be formed and work under similar conditions, that the Act had, in effect, struck off the fetters imposed on freedom of contract by the common law, and had emancipated the community at large from the tyranny of unlimited liability.

Since this discovery of the advantages of conversion, thousands of private companies have been formed, and the number is rapidly increasing, as day by day the advantages of the system become more apparent and more appreciated. Out of 7,000 companies registered in 1910 no less than 5,000 were private companies.

It is in what is known as a sleeping partnership that the advantage of excluding unlimited liability are perhaps the most strikingly manifested. A sleeping partner takes no place in the management, and is not ostensibly a partner, yet he incurs the same liabilities as an ordinary partner. The fact that his interest is kept private, and that the creditors never even heard of him, affords him no protection; and if the firm gets into difficulties, and his connection with it is discovered, he can be sued along with the other partners, and may be made bankrupt.

Thus, suppose that A., B. and C. are in partnership under the firm name of "A. and B.," and that C.'s interest is kept entirely secret, and that the firm gets into difficulties, and is sued by D. for a large sum; D. will have an opportunity of asking A. and B. on oath whether they have any other partner, and out will come the fact that facilities.

C is a partner; thereupon C. will be made a co-defendant, and judgment will go against the three. This risk operates as a serious discouragement to capitalists to put money into a private firm or help a trader who is starting in business, whatever may be their confidence in his integrity and ability. If, however, the business is worked as a private company, C. can have as large an interest as he likes without incurring any additional liability beyond his shares, and there is no need for his name to appear in the register of members or elsewhere in connection with the company, for his shares can be placed in the name of a trustee or nominee, or in the names of several.

This option of remaining incognito is in many cases a matter of great importance, and especially in the case of syndicates (p. 158. supra); for it very commonly happens that leading financiers, peers of the realm, members of Parliament, and commercial men of standing, whilst willing to subscribe to a syndicate, make it a condition that their names shall not appear.

The facilities which a company has for borrowing unquestionably constitute another inducement to the formation of private companies. Borrowing facilities.

These facilities are much greater than those of an individual or firm engaged in trade. Not only can a company borrow in the same way and by the same methods as an ordinary individual, but it can raise money by the issue of debentures or debenture stock, and the advantages of debentures and debenture stock are two-fold. In the first place, they enable a company to raise a large sum on easy terms by the contributions of a number of small lenders on the same co-operative principle on which a company's capital is subscribed; and in the next place they are securities with which the public is familiar: they are easily enforced, and can be made readily transferable. If issued by a company in good repute, they are a very marketable security. No advantageous, indeed, is this mode of raising money found to be that it is by no means uncommon for a business to be converted into a company solely for the purpose of raising a loan by the issue of debentures or debenture stock.

In this way a large sum may be raised on easy terms, which, but for the conversion, it would have been impossible to raise. Moreover, a member of the company may himself become a secured creditor on its assets by becoming a debenture holder (Salomon v. Salomon & Co., 1897) A. C. 22, 52), without being postponed to other lenders, as he would be if as a partner he lent money to the firm.

Debentures are commonly made payable in ten or fifteen years. Debenture stock is usually in the nature of a permanent loan.

Another inducement to conversion which very commonly operates is the urgent necessity for the introduction of additional capital, and the knowledge that a private company has far greater facilities for securing such additional capital than an unconverted concern. Further capital.

Capital in many cases is the life-blood of a concern, and it is always a great misfortune where the development of a promising concern is arrested by want of it. It is not possible here to specify all the cases in which additional capital may be required, but in the case of a manufacturing concern the following are a few salient instances.

It may be wanted to enable the parties interested to enlarge and extend the works; to buy, manufacture, and hold larger stocks, to buy in the cheapest market for cash; to make a large capital outlay in the way of advertisements; to replace and clear off bank and other advances; to open and establish branches; to buy up other concerns; to lend money to customers with a view to tying their trade; to pay out a retiring or deceased partner; and for many other purposes.

By converting the concern into a private company, the parties are at once placed in a position, by issuing preference shares, debentures or debenture stock, or by mortgaging the uncalled capital, to raise additional capital on the most favourable terms.

The tied-house system.

Another inducement to conversion is the recognition of the fact that the concern is one in which the tied-house system can with advantage be adopted. That system necessarily involves the possession of large capital resources, and it is rarely that it can be worked satisfactorily without converting the undertaking into a company. The system thus referred to is that which is so generally adopted by brewery companies. According to it the brewery company acquires a public-house and then lets it to a tenant at a fixed rent, the tenant being bound by contract to buy all his malt liquors from the brewery company at ordinary published prices, less some specified discount; thus the public-house is "tied" to the brewery. Another tie is effected by the brewery company lending to the owner or tenant of a public-house a sum of money secured by mortgage of the public-house, and by a stipulation that whilst the loan is outstanding all malt liquors shall be bought from the brewery company. Of late years it has been discovered that the tied-house system is not applicable to brewery businesses only, but can with advantage be adopted in relation to other business concerns, and there can be no question that the system is susceptible of further development. In order, however, to adopt and work this system, it is essential that the tying concern should be able to supply goods of a satisfactory quality, and that by means of competent inspectors, or otherwise, it should be able to watch and safeguard its interests in relation to the borrowers or tenants. Where a concern ties a business by a loan, it is extremely common to require the conversion of the business into a private company, so that the tying concern may be able to have its loan secured by debentures on the undertaking of the tied concern. Sometimes the tied-house system is still further developed by making it one of the terms of the letting or loan that the tenant or borrower shall not only purchase a certain class of goods from the tying concern, but shall purchase some other class of goods from such person or persons or company as the tying concern shall from time to time nominate. Two or more concerns may thus tie trade and then nominate each other, and by a judicious system of co-operation of this kind highly favourable results are sometimes obtained.

There is another aspect to conversion. It sometimes happens that a man engaged in business develops extraordinary management capabilities. Perhaps he has established and built up the business either alone or with partners, or he may merely have worked up the business. In either case his experience and judgment may in the result have rendered him invaluable, and his capacity for organisation and management may amount to quite an exceptional gift. He may be possessed of ideas and initiative, and of great energy, courage, and determination, and with the power to inspire others with unlimited confidence in his capacity. A man of this kind is often able, with ease to manage directly, or by means of skilled subordinates selected by himself, not only the original business, but a business of ten times its magnitude, and both he and his friends and supporters may be fully cognisant of the fact. That such a man should remain satisfied managing a comparatively small business amounts to a great waste of ability. By converting the concern into a private company, full scope may be afforded for his remarkable powers. The company may take over the existing concern, and with the assistance of further capital, contributed willingly by those who know and feel confidence in the manager's ability, prudent developments may be made, and new branches established in different places, and other concerns may be acquired. Thus, before very long a great concern may be built up worthy to engage and capable of absorbing the attention of such a competent manager, assisted by other directors working in harmony with him. Men of this calibre are not to be found every day, but, when found and backed by capital, they are capable of achieving the very highest success in commercial concerns, as may be seen exemplified in the heads of so many great industrial undertakings both in England and America to-day.

Utilisation of extraordinary management capacity.

Another inducement to conversion consists in the facilities offered by corporate existence for co-operation, reciprocal concession, and joint purse arrangements. Thus, three or four firms may be carrying on a similar class of business and be on friendly terms, and yet be engaged in competition. Each employs a separate set of travellers and each has to incur various expenses which might be largely reduced if the firms worked together. In such cases it is very common to convert the firms into a single company, dividing the capital in proportion to the value of the several undertakings and making the members of the firms or some of them directors of the company. In adopting such a course there should be a large saving in working expenses, and the combination may endow the united concern with capacities for development and profit far exceeding those possessed by the individual firms. Sometimes a number of firms prefer not actually to amalgamate, but to convert each into a separate company with its own separate capital, and then all can enter into an agreement to pool their profits and divide them in certain specified proportions, or to offer to one another special advantages and privileges which, in the result, will tend to the common benefit.

It not uncommonly happens that the owners of a business find that it is doing very well, but are confident that certain measures which have been adopted by them, e.g., extended advertisement, improved processes of manufacture, acquisition of patents, or what not, will, in the near future, result in a great development. They, however, want at once further capital and the advantages of corporate life, and accordingly they convert the concern into a private company, fully intending that in the course of a year or two, when the anticipated developments shall have taken place, the business shall be brought out as a public company. Such a conversion may facilitate very largely the ultimate conversion into a public company. Thus, there may be a number of members of the partnership at the moment willing to convert the concern into a private company who may not be unwilling in a year or two hence to convert the same into a public company. Again, by converting into a private company the concern is enabled to raise without difficulty the requisite funds to secure the anticipated development, and further is able to place the undertaking in such a condition that its audited balance-sheets and accounts will figure well in the prospectus of the future public company, and that the large dividends on the shares in the private company will justify the capitalization of the undertaking on a satisfactory footing.

Not uncommonly, also, it is considered desirable to convert a concern into a private company with the full intention that some of the company's shares shall before very long be offered for subscription by the public. Thus the members may, on the conversion, receive, say, 100,000 preference shares and 100,000 ordinary shares, and they may determine that, after the company has been in existence for a time, they will have the preference shares offered for public subscription, and either appropriate the proceeds themselves, and so, in effect, draw it out of the business, or apply the proceeds in taking up further ordinary shares in the company. This is a mode of converting the concern into a public company without re-registering the concern. Many instances might be pointed out in which this course has been adopted, and amongst those the great concern known as Bass, Ratcliff and Gretton, Limited.

Customers' participation.

Another inducement to conversion is that by means thereof it is possible to enable customers to participate in the profits of the undertaking, and thus to interest them in its success. With a view to such participation the capital of the concern may be made to consist in part of preference shares carrying a fixed dividend, say 5 p.c.p.a., but without any right to attend or vote at general meetings or to inspect the accounts, and customers, or leading customers, at the time of the conversion may be given the opportunity of taking up such preference shares or some of them, and if desired some can be set aside for allotment to subsequent customers as and when thought expedient. Occasionally, also, such preference shares may be given a limited right to participate also in surplus profits, e.g., in proportion to the goods purchased from the company by the holders. Sometimes, instead of preference shares, debentures or debenture stock, or even ordinary shares, are issued to customers. It has been found from experience that the possession of a continuing capital interest of this kind in an undertaking is highly favourable to the development of business where the number of persons so interested is considerable, for each person so interested is conscious that in dealing with the concern, and in introducing additional customers, he is indirectly enhancing the value of his own shares in it. The writer knows of cases where the adoption of this mode of development has, in the course of a few years, doubled and quadrupled the profits of a concern.

Restrictions on Directors.

Another and very strong inducement to the formation of private companies is, that persons trading as a company can effectually restrict the powers of the acting partners, i.e., of the directors. In the case of an ordinary trading partnership every partner is, in contemplation of law, the unlimited agent of every other partner in every matter coming within the scope of the partnership business. Thus, every partner may enter into engagements, however improvident, binding on the firm, may pledge and sell the partnership property, may buy goods on account of the partnership, may borrow money, contract debts, and pay debts on account of the partnership, may draw, make, sign, indorse, accept, transfer, negotiate, and procure to be discounted, promissory notes, bills of exchange, and other negotiable paper, in the name and on account of the partnership. And this perilous general agency of partners cannot be limited by agreement between the partners so as to bind outsiders. Baird's case, 5 Ch. 733. Accordingly, a person dealing with a partner is entitled, unless he has express notice to the contrary, to assume that the partner has the usual powers. For instance, suppose the articles of partnership provide that one of the partners shall not be entitled to accept bills in the name of the firm; a bill accepted by him in the name of the firm will nevertheless be valid unless the person taking it knew that he was not entitled to accept it, and even then a bonâ fide indorsee gets a good title. A man, therefore, who is a member of a trading firm is at the mercy of his partners, just as they are at his mercy. If one member of a firm proves imprudent or dishonest, he has it in his power to involve his partners in liabilities unlimited in amount. Partnership, in other words, is essentially based on mutual confidence, and there is no security that such confidence will not be agency of directors

Limited

abused. But the directors of a company are in a very different position. They are special agents, and have only such powers as are given to them by the articles of association or other regulations of the company; and every one dealing with a company is presumed to know the contents of such articles of association, for they are registered public documents. Supra, p. 79. If, therefore, the articles say that the directors shall not borrow more than a specified sum, the onus is on a lender to see that they are not exceeding their power. If he does not, he takes the security at his risk should the borrowing limit prove in fact to have been exceeded. So, if the articles say that every contract of a certain kind, e.g., a negotiable instrument or a mortgage, must be signed by at least three directors, the person dealing with the company must see that three directors sign, otherwise the instrument or security will as a rule be invalid. See supra p. 79. The power of thus effectually limiting the authority of the acting partners is of great value, and constitutes one of the chief advantages which a company has over a partnership.

Advantages of incorporation.

Not less striking is the convenience which incorporation affords in dealing freely with the shares of a trading concern. In an ordinary partnership, the death, bankruptcy, or retirement of a partner, the admission of new members, or the sale or settlement of shares seriously dislocates, if it does not dissolve, the partnership. Not so with a company, which is a body corporate with perpetual succession.

A company, in contemplation of law, is an artificial person having an existence independent of the members who from time to time compose it (supra, p. 27). It is also a body corporate with a perpetual succession; and accordingly no change among those members occasioned by death, bankruptcy, retirement, new admission, or otherwise, affects the company's identity: it still remains in law the same person, and continues to exist until dissolved according to law.

Some of the advantages resulting from this independent separate existence of the company may be specified.

Death.

1. As regards Death.

Where a man is possessed of a profitable business, or of a business which promises to be profitable, he very commonly wishes to provide for its continuance in the event of his death. If he proposes to bequeath the concern to some person (e.g., a son) absolutely, there is no difficulty; but perhaps his sons may be under age or not anxious to go into the business; and he may wish the concern to be carried on for the benefit of his estate until they attain maturity, or until certain sums are raised (e.g., for his widow and daughters), or otherwise for a limited period; or he may desire to give an interest in the concern to persons (e.g., his daughters) who could not personally carry it on.

In such cases the ordinary course (where the concern is not converted into a company) is to bequeath the business, with the capital employed in it, to trustees, who are directed to carry it on so as to effect the testator's wishes.

But it is often a matter of great difficulty to find trustees competent and willing to undertake such trusts; for in carrying on the concern (even though acting avowedly as trustees or executors) they become personally responsible for all debts and liabilities incurred in carrying on the business after the testator's death, with a right of indemnity, it is true (see Bennett v. Wyndham, 4 D. F. & J. 259; Re Raybould, (1900) 1 Ch. 199), but an indemnity which is frequently restricted to the assets employed in the business. This responsibility may even result in bankruptcy, if the concern is not successful. Moreover, however prudently the trustees may act, there is a certainty of anxiety, and not improbably the executors' management may be questioned, quarrelled with, misconceived, or disapproved by the persons beneficially interested, and they may be called to account in an action in the Chancery Division or elsewhere. Even if trustees are found who are willing to undertake the responsibility, they may predecease the testator, or when upon the death of the testator they are properly advised as to their responsibilities, they may decline to act, or they may die before the trusts are at an end, or wish to retire, and there may then be great difficulty in finding successors to them.

Where, however, the business has been converted into a private company these difficulties disappear. Upon the conversion all the shares in the company (with the exception of perhaps a dozen) are issued to the former owner as fully paid up, and he becomes managing director, with power, by will or otherwise, to appoint, or authorize others (e.g., his trustees) to appoint, directors. By his will the shares are bequeathed to trustees, who themselves become or appoint directors. As the directors of the company are under no personal liability for the company's debts, there is no difficulty in finding persons to act, especially as directors receive remuneration, which trustees do not. Thus upon the death of the testator the business will go on as usual, and in due course the shares will be sold, distributed, or otherwise dealt with as the testator directs.

The above deals with the case of a sole trader dying; where several persons are carrying on business in partnership the difficulties are still greater, and the death of one or more may seriously prejudice the survivors and the persons interested in the estate of the deceased. Prima facie, the death of a partner dissolves the partnership as to all the partners, and the concern has to be wound up and the assets realized and distributed. In the absence of special authority under the will of the deceased partner, his executors or trustees cannot leave his capital in the concern, and accordingly, if the surviving partners desire to continue the business, they must purchase the share of the deceased partner, if, that is, they can arrange matters with the executors. But this may entail the withdrawal of such an amount of capital as will seriously cripple the concern. Moreover, it may be impossible to arrange terms with the executors, and an action in the Chancery Division may be necessary.

To meet these difficulties, the articles of partnership very commonly provide that the survivors shall purchase or shall have the option of purchasing the share of the deceased; but in either case, whether there is or is not an option of purchase, the withdrawal of capital may be disastrous to the concern, even though spread over several years, not does it preclude the representatives of the deceased partner from having the accounts taken by the Court. Sometimes the deceased partner authorizes the trustees or executors to carry on the business in conjunction with the surviving partners; but here again difficulties are apt to arise, for the trustees or executors may disclaim, or the surviving partners may be unwilling or find it impracticable to act with them, or disputes may arise. As stated in Lord Justice Lindley's work on Partnership, "The position of the executors of a deceased partner is, in fact, one of considerable hardship and difficulty; if they insist on an immediate winding-up of the firm, they may ruin those whom the deceased may have been most anxious to benefit whilst if for their advantage the partnership is allowed to go on, the executors may run the risk of being ruined themselves. With the view to obviate this, it is not unusual for one partner to make his co-partner his executor; but the difficulty of the executor's position is thus rather increased than diminished, for his own personal interest as a surviving partner is brought into direct conflict with his duty as an executor. Everything, therefore, which he does is liable to question and misconstruction on the part of the persons beneficially entitled to the estate of the deceased; and he is practically much more fettered in the discharge of his duties, and in the exercise of his rights, than if he had not to act in the double character imposed on him."

If, however, the concern is converted into a company, these difficulties and inconveniences are got rid of. The shares of the deceased partner form part of his estate, and are bequeathed in trust, or otherwise dealt with as may be convenient, and his estate will be represented on the board of directors by his trustees or their nominees, who, being mere agents of the company, can act without incurring personal responsibilities.

Bankruptcy.

2. As regards Bankruptcy.

Where a man is engaged in trade, whether alone or in partnership, he is liable to be made a bankrupt, if he gets into financial difficulties. His position may be the result of misfortune, or of the fraud or misconduct of a partner or clerk, and he may be quite blameless himself, but as he has neglected to avail himself of the advantages offered by the Companies Act, 1908, he must take the consequences—administration of his assets in bankruptcy, together with the stigma attaching to publicly declared insolvency. A company, on the contrary, cannot be made bankrupt; nor can its shareholders be made bankrupt in respect of the company's liabilities, for the company's liabilities are not theirs. If the company gets into difficulties it will, it is true, be wound up voluntarily or otherwise, and its shareholders will have to pay up the amount, if any, unpaid on their shares; but that is all. Where, on the other hand, bankruptcy befalls a member of a partnership, great inconvenience may be caused to the solvent partners; for the share of the bankrupt partner has to be ascertained and paid to the trustee in bankruptcy, and this again may involve an action in the Chancery Division. Sometimes articles of partnership try to meet the case by giving the solvent partners the option of taking the share of the bankrupt partner at a valuation, or at the amount at which it stands in the books, or otherwise, on favourable terms. Such provisions, however, cannot be relied on, for the law will not allow a man to interfere with the ordinary operation of the bankruptcy law by giving his partners a benefit at the expense of his creditors or to their prejudice. But if the partnership has been converted into a company, the bankruptcy of a member does not affect the company, or will only do so indirectly. The trustee of the bankrupt on his part sells and transfers the shares of the bankrupt, or if worthless or onerous disclaims them, but that is all (see p. 29, supra). The company on its part proves for the estimated value of future calls or for damages for disclaimer, and there is an end of it. The trustee is not entitled to have the accounts of the company taken and the property sold, or to require the other shareholders to pay off the bankrupt's share; accordingly, the concern goes on as before, its capital remains intact, and its powers are unaffected. Moreover, articles may be so framed that on a shareholder becoming bankrupt, the trustee is compellable to sell the bankrupt's shares to some of the other shareholders. See supra, p. 849.

See Lord Macnaghten's observations, infra, p. 944.

3. As regards Lunacy.

When, again, a partner becomes lunatic or of unsound mind, the partnership is placed in an extremely inconvenient position, worse than in the case of bankruptcy. Litigation is generally inevitable, and the capital of the lunatic partner has to be found and paid out. But the lunacy of a shareholder causes a company no material inconvenience. The committee retains or transfers the shares as the Court directs, and there is no room for litigation so far as the company is concerned.

4. As regards the Holding of Property.

In the case of a partnership the property of the firm is usually vested in the partners jointly, or in one or more in trust for all, and Lunacy.

Holding
property.

the admission, retirement, death, or bankruptcy of a member generally involves some dealing by conveyance or otherwise with the property: which is both troublesome and expensive. Moreover, where partnership property is to be dealt with, e.g., by sale or mortgage, it is very common to find that by reason of some slip or omission the legal estate is outstanding in the representatives of a deceased partner, or some release or conveyance is requisite, in order to complete the title of the partners. But in the case of a company this multiplicity of conveyances is avoided. The property is vested in the company as a body corporate with perpetual succession, and no changes of individual membership can affect the title (supra, p. 27). Shareholders may come and go, but the property remains vested in the company, and the directors for the time being can, in the name of the company, convey, assign, mortgage, or deal with it unaffected by these vicissitudes.

Contracts.

5. As regards Contracts.

Then, too, in respect of contracts a company has many advantages.

For example: Contracts with a partnership are in law regarded as contracts with the members of it, for the partnership has not in law any separate existence; accordingly, if a partner dies, retires, or becomes lunatic or bankrupt, or if a new partner is admitted, difficulties and inconveniences may ensue, and releases, assignments, powers of attorney, and indemnities may be requisite. But a company, being a body corporate, can sue and be sued on contracts made with it, notwithstanding any alterations among its shareholders (supra, p. 28). Again, where a continuing guarantee is given to a firm (e.g., that goods supplied shall be paid for), any alteration in the firm will primâ facie put an end to the guarantee as to goods subsequently supplied. Not so in the case of a company. Moreover, a company has the great advantage of being able to contract with its shareholders, and to sue and be sued on such contracts (supra, p. 29). Thus, if a shareholder is indebted to a company for money lent, or in respect of a call made on his shares, the company can sue for the recovery without difficulty. Conversely, if a shareholder lends money to the company, he can sue for it and enforce any security given him by the company, just as if he were not a shareholder (Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22); and if the company fails, he can prove for the money lent in competition with the outside creditors (supra, p. 29). But a firm has no such independent status, and great difficulties and inconveniences arise in seeking to enforce contracts between members of a partnership in connection with the business of the firm; while, should the firm become insolvent, a member of it (except under very special circumstances) cannot prove in competition with the outside creditors of the firm, who must first be paid in full before the creditor-partner can get anything.

6. *As regards Admission of New Members.*Admission of new members

The admission of a new partner generally involves the preparation of a special deed of covenant, and sometimes of an entirely new deed of partnership, besides accounts, valuations, &c. But in the case of a company the transaction is of the simplest character. If the new shareholder is to bring in capital (in ordinary parlance, subscribe for shares), he takes shares in the company to the amount agreed on, is entered in the register, and thereupon the transaction is complete. Where he is not to bring in new capital, but is to take the place of some existing member, the latter signs a transfer of his shares to the new member, who pays him the purchase-money; the transfer is registered, and the transaction is complete.

7. As regards Retirement.

Retirement

Where a member of a partnership retires, the concern is more or less dislocated, the capital pro tanto reduced, and the rights of all the parties affected. Moreover, the retiring partner still remains liable for the existing debts and obligations of the partnership, and must rely on the covenant of the continuing partners to indemnify him; and if that covenant is not performed, he may have to pay the creditors or become bankrupt, even though years have passed since his retirement. The retiring member may even become liable for subsequent debts of the firm, unless his retirement is advertised in the Gazette, and, as regards existing customers, notified by circular. But in the case of a company the retirement of a shareholder is effected without difficulty. He signs a transfer to the person who takes his place; this is registered, and the transaction is complete. There is no need to give notice in the Gazette, or by circular or otherwise; and the retiring member is entirely freed from the debts and liabilities of the company, with this qualification, that if within one year after his retirement the company is wound up, and any debts or liabilities, contracted before his retirement, remain, which the existing shareholders have not the means to pay, he may be called on to contribute to the payment of the same, but only to the extent (if any) of the capital remaining unpaid on the shares formerly held by him (see sect. 123 of the Companies Act, 1908, replacing sect. 38 of the Act of 1862). Accordingly, if his shares were fully paid up, he is not even for a year under any liability; and so, too, he is under no liability where his shares were not fully paid up when he transferred them, but were subsequently paid up by the transferee.

8. *As regards Sale, Mortgage, and Settlement of Shares.*Sale, mortgage, &c.

The sale of a share in an ordinary partnership dissolves it, and to mortgage or settle shares in such a partnership involves very serious difficulties, and is likely to give rise to litigation and dispute. But shares in a company can be readily sold, mortgaged, charged, settled, bequeathed, or otherwise dealt with. Thus, in the case of a mortgage, the shares can be transferred to the mortgagee subject to redemption, and with authority to sell, in certain events; or an equitable security can be created by signing a blank transfer of the shares and depositing the share certificates, accompanied by a memorandum, with the mortgagee, and giving notice to the company. In the case of a settlement the shares can be transferred to trustees, or the settlor can execute a declaration of trust.

It will thus be seen that the conversion of a trading concern into a company, while it gives protection to the partners by limited liability and permanence to the business by incorporation, supplies, also, a simple and effective machinery for dealing with all the interests of the partners, thereby rendering them more convertible and easy of realization, and proportionately enhancing their value and the value of the business.

Employés.

9. Admission of Employés to share Profits.

The appropriation of some share of the profits of a concern to the employés therein is well calculated to promote the success of the concern; but in the case of a partnership it is not easy to grant anything but a precarious right to share profits, unless the employés are admitted to the partnership, a thing which may be open to grave objection. In a company, however, there is no such difficulty or objection. The schemes commonly adopted are to give the employés a special class of "employés' shares," or to allow them to take up shares on favourable terms, or to vest shares in trustees, who are to receive the dividends and distribute them among the employés, or accumulate for their benefit. Another scheme is to establish a participation fund, and to notify that at the end of each year a certain percentage (either specified or communicated in confidence to the auditor) of the surplus profits will be carried thereto; and in such case the employés are given participation certificates conferring a right to equal or varying shares in the fund subject to conditions. Sometimes all the employés are admitted to participate; in other cases only those who have been employed for at least two years or more; in other cases only the managers or heads of departments. See Chap. XI., infra.

Government contracts.

10. As regards Government Contracts.

By the Act 22 Geo. 3, c. 45 (repealed in part, Statute Law Revision Act, 1871), it is provided that any person who shall directly or indirectly enter into a Government contract shall be incapable of being elected a member of Parliament, or if already a member, his seat becomes void; and there are severe penalties for violations of the Act. Hence a sole trader or member of a partnership cannot sit in Parliament if he or his firm is interested in any Government contract; but if the concern is converted into a private company this inconvenience is avoided, for the Act does not apply to an incorporated trading company contracting in its corporate capacity and for the general benefit of such company.

Looking, however, at the heavy penalties, it is not desirable to act in such a case without careful consideration and taking the best advice in view of all the circumstances.

11. As regards Simplicity of Arrangement.

Simplicity.

This affords another inducement.

In the case of a partnership, particularly if the arrangements are special, the preparation of the articles of partnership involves very careful consideration and, consequently, considerable delay, and in the result a document is produced in the most admired style of the conveyancer's cabalistic art, which, in all probability, if not bewildering, is barely intelligible to the partners; whereas, in the case of a private company, the memorandum and articles are comparatively short, simple, and readily understood by anyone. Matters which in a deed of partnership involve elaborate provisions can be easily dealt with in articles of association, and the reason is that a company being an independent entity the legal relations between the company and its creditors or the company and its shareholders are incomparably simpler and work more smoothly. Yet a company remains in substance, though not in point of law, simply a statutory partnership, and endowed with all the advantages of a partnership, but free from its disadvantages.

12. As regards Death Duties.

Death duties.

Conversion affords considerable facilities for the working out of plans if not for avoiding, at least for minimizing as far as practicable, the heavy estate duties imposed by the Finance Act, 1894, and subsequent Acts. Moreover, it has been held that in computing estate duty which, under the above Act, is to be paid upon the "principal value" of all property which passes on death (sect. 1), and under sect. 7 (5) is to be ascertained as if the property was sold in the open market at testator's death, the valuation of shares, which are subject to special restrictions [as in Forms 312 et seq.] as to transfer and fair value, must be made with due regard to those restrictions, and not as if the shares were freely transferable. Att.-Gen. v. Jameson, (1904) 2 Ir. Rep., K. B. D. 644.

Where Private Company Advisable.

Conversion of existing business.

At this stage it may be convenient to give some instances of the many cases in which private companies are commonly formed.

And, first, as to cases of conversion, that is to say, when an existing business is to be turned into a company.

1. A firm consists of several members, each of whom has laid by some private means which he is desirous of freeing from the risks of trade. To effect this partners convert the business into a private company, become the sole directors of the company, and receive paid-up shares in substitution for their interests in the business. Henceforth their assets outside the business are free from risk.

2. An individual, or a firm, is engaged in a business of a profitable but speculative character, out of the profits of which he or they can make savings. It is desired to place these savings beyond the risk of danger from the business collapsing. Accordingly the business is converted into a private company, and the savings are thus freed.

3. A firm consists of several members, one of whom is entitled to the greater part of the capital, and has, besides, private means. He is disposed to retire on the fortune he has accumulated. If his liability could be limited, he would be willing to leave part of his capital in the business, and to assume the position of a sleeping partner. The only way in which this can be effected is by converting the business into a company, and it is accordingly done.

4. A man desires to leave his business to trustees, in order that it may be carried on for the benefit of his family until his sons attain the age of twenty-one years. He finds that the persons whom he wishes to appoint as trustees object to undertake a trust which will involve them in unlimited liability, and may prove ruinous. Accordingly, he converts the concern into a private company, and the difficulty is removed.

5. The owner of a profitable business dies. There are competent managers, but the owner's sons are not inclined to devote themselves to the concern, and at the same time they are unwilling to incur the unlimited liability involved in carrying it on through managers. Accordingly, they convert it into a private company.

6. Another example is given by a very great lawyer (Sir G. Jessel).* "A man dies, leaving his property to three or four sons. He is the senior partner in a concern. If the capital were taken out the concern would be ruined. The junior partners cannot go on: they say to the children, who are not in the business and who have succeeded to large fortunes, 'If you shut up the business you will lose a great deal: let us form it into a limited company, which will enable you gradually to draw out of the concern, and, in the meantime, it can go on as usual." I have known that done with great success."

7. A capitalist is willing to supply a trader, or a trading firm, in whom he has confidence, with additional capital in consideration of a share of the profits, but does not wish to incur the liabilities of partnership. He therefore stipulates that the business shall be converted into a company. He will then bring in the additional capital by taking shares in the company to the amount agreed on, and paying for the same in cash. In such a case the capitalist very commonly stipulates that he or his nominee shall be one of the directors for a term of years, and sometimes that the shares to be allotted to him shall be preference shares.

8. A., B. and C. are trading in partnership as shipowners, and are entitled to several steamships or other vessels. By the negligence, misconduct, or imprudence of their servants they may be involved in litigation and personal responsibilities of the most onerous character, e.g., in respect of loss of life, of damage to other ships or to merchandise, caused by collision or otherwise. They desire to get rid of all personal liability, and to throw upon each vessel the liabilities incurred by or in respect thereof. Accordingly each ship, with the business connected therewith, is converted into a private company, and the members of the firm become managers of the company. Henceforth the assets of the company must bear the liabilities. Great numbers of such "single-ship" companies have been formed.

9. A., B. and C. are entitled to a valuable business. By reason of a temporary lock-up of funds, or otherwise, they find it necessary to consult their principal creditors. Bankruptcy, with its costly officialism and commercial discredit, would be disastrous to all concerned, and more especially to the creditors. Accordingly the concern is converted into a company. The smaller creditors are paid off in full, and the principal creditors all take debentures for their debts, and are given paramount control in the management of the company. The concern is thus placed on its legs, and as and when practicable the debentures are cleared off, and meantime the creditors have the fullest security that it is possible to give them, and are able in fact to manage their own affairs and protect their own interests as well as, if not better than, under that species of arrangement known as an inspectorship deed.

10. A. and B. have for many years had the exclusive sale in England of a commodity manufactured abroad by C. and D. Each firm has made large profits, and they are disposed to combine their interests. Accordingly they convert the two concerns into a company, and get shares in the company in proportion to their average profits during the last five years.

11. A. B. is a builder, and has taken land and erected large numbers of houses. Of these he has sold some, but the bulk he has let and then mortgaged. After paying the ground rents and interest on the mortgages, the property returns a considerable margin of income; but the builder's interest is not easily dealt with, and his profit, represented by the equities of redemption, is locked up. He wishes to facilitate the realization of his interest, and to get some marketable equivalent. Accordingly he vests the property in a private company, and receives in exchange debentures and paid-up shares. These he can sell or pledge as he may think fit, being securities much more readily, of course, dealt with than equities of redemption.

12. A. B. is a manufacturer. He has a profitable business, which is mainly worked by a number of experienced departmental managers. He wishes to be bought out by them, but they have little capital. Accordingly the concern is made over to a private company in consideration of the whole of the ordinary shares; and he enters into an agreement with the managers providing that, to the extent of the profits of each year in excess of, say, 5 per cent., he will make over a corresponding amount of his paid-up shares to the managers. Thus, in the course of some years they will, if the concern is worked successfully, obtain the whole or the greater part of the shares. Sometimes provision is made for annulling the agreement if the profits do not keep up to a minimum figure.

13. A., B. and C. are carrying on business in a foreign country of which they are subjects. They have, or want to have, a branch or agency in England to sell goods manufactured by them abroad, and to buy raw material and take orders. They find that they are, or will be, chargeable with English income tax on their profits whether made here or abroad. To avoid this they convert the English branch or agency into a private company, and by re-arrangement of system thenceforth only pay on the profits of that branch or agency.

14. A foreign company finds that in order to maintain its English patents it must manufacture goods in England, and build up or acquire works for that purpose, but it rather dreads the consequent risks, to say nothing of income tax. Accordingly it forms a private company here and works through that, and thus limits its risks and liabilities as much as it chooses.

The above are all cases of conversion, but great numbers of private companies are formed to establish some new business or carry out some special operation, or transaction, or adventure.

The following are examples:

Non-conversion cases.

15. A. is the tenant for life of a landed estate, and B. his son is the tenant in tail in remainder. B. has recently come of age. The estate is capable of being utilised for building purposes; it is subject to mortgages for large amounts carrying interest at different rates and liable to be called in on comparatively short notice. It is desirable to consolidate these and to facilitate future operations. Ac-

Accordingly the estate is vested in a company; the company issues debentures or debenture stock, with which, or with the proceeds of which, all the mortgages are cleared off and the requisite working capital is provided; and the father and the son receive paid-up shares in the company, which, as to part, are made over to the son absolutely, and, as to the residue, are settled on the father for life, and afterwards on the son absolutely. In the result the complication of a series of mortgages is got rid of. There is one permanent charge at a moderate rate of interest, and there is ample capital to develop the estate and turn it to the best account, and future dealings and operations are greatly facilitated.

16. A., B. and C. desire to start a newspaper, or to supply a village or town with waterworks, or to build a theatre or a town hall, or to acquire and work a building estate, or to provide a race-course or a cricket ground or swimming baths, or to erect some flats or workmen's dwellings; but they do not wish to incur unlimited liability. Accordingly they register a private company and take up shares thereof to the extent of the capital which they are disposed to embark. Each of the subscribers becomes a director, and further funds, if wanted, are raised by the issue of further shares or of debentures.

17. A., B. and C. desire to purchase and work a ship, and place it under the management of a particular firm in whom they have confidence; but they are not prepared to incur the serious responsibility attached to the ownership of a ship by individuals. Accordingly they form a private company, in which they take up shares so far as may be necessary to provide the purchase-money for the ship. The company then acquires the ship, and the firm are appointed to be agents for its management.

18. A., B. and C. desire to establish a manufacturing or commercial business. Each has some capital, but one of them does not relish the notion of unlimited liability. Accordingly it is agreed that instead of going into partnership they shall form a private company and carry on the business on that footing, each contributing his portion of the capital, and taking part in the management.

19. A. is a public contractor with great resources and reputation. B. and C. are competent and trustworthy contractors, but with limited means. They are anxious to undertake some contract, and apply to A. for assistance, offering him a large share in the profits if he will contribute a certain portion of the needed capital, and give his advice and assistance. A. is not prepared to go into partnership with those gentlemen, and thus place his great fortune at their mercy, and accordingly he stipulates for the formation of a private company to carry through the transaction, and offers to subscribe for share therein, B. and C. undertaking the whole management of the business.

20. A. has a patent for an invention, but no capital. The utility of the invention is fairly obvious; but it requires to be more thoroughly tested, and expense must be incurred in so testing it, and also in obtaining foreign patents, and perhaps in floating a company to purchase the patent rights. B., C. and D. agree to form a syndicate which shall find the requisite funds. The patent rights are made over to the syndicate, on the footing that A. shall have, say, one-third of the shares in the syndicate free, that is, fully paid, and that the other subscribers shall pay up their shares in cash. The capital of the syndicate is fixed accordingly, say, at 3,000*l.* in 100*l.* shares. The invention is tested, and, if found satisfactory, foreign patents are obtained, and the public company is formed and floated. The patents are re-sold to that company at a profit, and the net proceeds of sale are divided rateably amongst the members of the syndicate, which is then dissolved.

21. C. has obtained in America or in one of the Colonies an option or contract to purchase some mining property. Money is wanted to send out an independent expert, and, perhaps, to work the property to a limited extent, and thus prove its capabilities. C. places his option or contract and knowledge at the disposal of a syndicate in consideration of shares in the syndicate. The syndicate then obtains the necessary reports, works the property sufficiently to ascertain its value or practicability, and re-sells it at a profit, either to some company formed for the purpose of acquiring it or to anyone who is willing to buy it on satisfactory terms.

22. A. has a going business which requires immediate financial assistance. For certain reasons it is not practicable to convert the business at once into a company, and go to the public, and, accordingly, a private company is formed to find the requisite funds in consideration of a share in the business and the power to dispose of it. The syndicate takes over the business, sets the concern on its legs, and then, on a favourable opportunity, disposes of it on the best terms obtainable.

23. The prospects of some company are likely to be damaged by hostile attacks and fictitious sales of its shares. A., B. and C., and others who are interested in the company, and desire to resist these attacks, form a syndicate to buy up all shares offered for sale, and to hold the same for a limited period, and then re-sell on the best terms obtainable.

24. Some mercantile commodity is likely to rise in value. A syndicate is formed to acquire and hold a large stock of it and to re-sell when the rise has taken place.

25. A company is about to be brought out, but considerable preliminary expenses will have to be incurred in advertising, legal charges, fees to brokers, solicitors, and otherwise. A private company is formed to find the requisite funds, the vendor agreeing to repay them with a bonus out of the purchase consideration which he is to obtain from the company. The company is then floated, and in due course the vendor pays off the private company's advance and bonus.

26. It is desired by certain parties to apply to some government or authority for a concession, charter, or other special privilege. In order to obtain this, expense must be incurred, and the requisite funds can only be found by co-operation. Accordingly A., B. and C. and others form a private company.

27. A. and B. have carried on business for many years in South America as agents and consignees for a large number of English manufacturers. A. and B. have stopped payment and become insolvent, and their affairs are in confusion. They are largely indebted to the English manufacturers, and hold goods belonging to them which have been consigned for sale. A. and B. are also largely indebted to local creditors who claim priority, and who have attached not only the goods of A. and B., but also the goods consigned. The English manufacturers determine to co-operate for mutual protection and benefit. Accordingly they form a private company, make over their claims to such company, and receive in exchange shares and debentures, or a common stock of nominal amount, constituted by a trust deed, which pools all the claims and securities. The company then appoints a competent agent to protect and enforce the interests of all the English creditors, or of the company as their transferee, and to enforce their rights; and, further, to establish and work an agency for the further sale of goods to be consigned by the English manufacturers.

28. The members of a club wish to provide the club with suitable buildings. Accordingly a private company is formed, and the requisite funds are raised by the issue of shares and debentures, and the club pays a rent for the use of the buildings.

29. An American or foreign firm sells large quantities of its products in the United Kingdom. It desires to establish an agency here without incurring more than a limited liability. Accordingly it forms a private company here, and appoints its agents to be directors thereof.

30. A., B. and C. are members of a theatrical company, in receipt of a salary of 5*l.* a week. They wish to lease a theatre, manage it for themselves, and divide the profits. They form a private company, subscribe the capital as far as they are able in the ratio of their salaries, and raise the remainder on debentures.

31. A. is a market gardener and fruit grower; B. and C. experts at jam-making. A., B. and C. combine to form a private company, and work up a jam-making business, which may be sold at a large profit to a public company.

32. A few persons are interested in a project (e.g., the promotion of a public company, or the acquisition of a concession or patent), for which funds will be wanted for a time. They form a private company and subscribe for, say, 50,000*l.* of shares, paying up 5 per cent., and the company raises any further money required by mortgage to its bankers of the uncalled capital.

33. In the case of a private company it frequently happens that the parties, &c. who form it desire not to disclose at first its main purpose. Thus, suppose A., B. and C. wish to form a private company to send out an agent to acquire a concession for the construction of a particular railway, or for the purchase of mines in a particular district. If the objects clause of the company's memorandum were expressly to state this object, the result might be to raise up rivals, and wreck the scheme by premature disclosure. This danger or inconvenience can, however, be readily avoided by expressing the objects of the private company in general terms, e.g., to acquire any concessions for the construction of railways, tramways, docks, or harbours, &c. Or, again, if it is desired that the names of the capitalists who are finding the requisite funds should be kept in the background, their shares can be put in the names of trustees or nominees.

Procedure.

Where the ad valorem stamp duty would be heavy, a special course of procedure may be necessary to avoid or minimise it; but we shall now proceed to describe the ordinary procedure to be adopted in the establishment of private companies, whether of Class A. or Class B. (supra, p. 912). First as to Class A.:

1. Let us take a case of conversion. Where it is desired to convert a going business into a private company, the first step is to ascertain the value of the business. To arrive at this a valuation will be made of the assets of the firm, including the goodwill, the stock-in-trade, business premises, moneys, bills, notes, and book and other debts due to the firm; and an account will be taken of the debts and liabilities of the firm. The valuation and account are sometimes made and taken by the owner or owners, and sometimes by some person appointed by him or them. In most cases the valuation and account are not made or taken in a detailed manner, but the position is fairly estimated, regard being had to the last balance-sheet. In the present case we will suppose that the partners come to the conclusion that the assets are worth 200,000*l.*, and that the debts and liabilities amount to 42,000*l., so that the net value of the business is 158,000*l.*

The next point is to settle the limit of liability which the partners desire to fix, for on this depends the most important term of the agreement. In many cases of conversion the owners of business concerns, whether sole or in partnership, desire to incur no personal liability to the creditors of the company: they are willing to hand over the business with its assets and liabilities to the company, but they desire, should the company be unsuccessful, not to be under any personal liability to pay its debts; they wish the remedy of the creditors of the company to be exclusively against the assets of the company. Where this is the desire of the parties, the conversion, to give effect to it, must be on the footing that the owner or owners shall receive the value of the business in shares issued as fully paid and returned as such under sect. 88 of the Companies Act, 1908. Upon such shares there is no personal liability. They entitle the holder to votes and dividends, but no call can be made on him. Sometimes, however, a vendor may be willing to accept in payment for his business, or share of a business, shares not fully paid up, but with some liability attaching: for instance, a trader desirous of converting his business, valued at 10,000*l.*, into a company, may be willing to incur a liability to supply 2,000*l.* additional working capital if required; in such case the conversion will be effected on the footing that he shall receive 2,000 shares of 6*l.* each, with 5*l.* per share credited as paid up; he will then be liable to pay up the balance of 1*l.* per share (equal to 2,000*l.*) when required, but will be under no further liability.

* The vendors of the business of course remain personally liable to the creditors in respect of these debts and liabilities, unless the creditors novate, that is, accept the liability of the company in substitution for that of the vendors; but whether they do this or not the vendors are entitled to be indemnified by the company against all such debts and liabilities.

2. When the company is formed to take over and complete a single transaction, the preliminary steps are of a similar character. Thus, suppose that the transaction is a contract to erect an exhibition; the value of the contract will be ascertained, and the owners will receive paid-up or partly paid-up shares of equal value.

Secondly, as to private companies of Class B. (supra, p. 912), i.e., to establish or undertake some new business, transaction, or enterprise.

In such cases the persons interested fix the amount of the capital of the company, and the amount to be contributed by them respectively, and whether they are to pay up at once, or by instalments, and what property (if any) they are to make over to the company, and for what consideration, and what will be their duties; and having settled these matters they proceed to form the company accordingly.

The preliminaries having been settled, the further course of procedure will be as follows:—

1. Settle and sign a preliminary agreement defining the terms of conversion, if such agreement is considered expedient. (See Form 305.)
2. Settle and sign the memorandum and articles of association and the agreement for transfer to the company. (See pp. 956 et seq., infra.)
3. Apply for registration of the company as a "private company," one which does not invite the public to subscribe for its shares (infra, p. 997), and procure registration accordingly.

4. Then—on incorporation—let the company enter into an agreement with the vendors, and let that agreement be carried into effect. (See p. 956. infra.)

The agreement.

The formation of a private company or syndicate involves, in most cases, the execution of an agreement.

Form 306, infra, p. 956, will give the reader some idea of the form of such a document in the case of a conversion.

In reference to the agreement the following points should be noticed:—

1. The agreement, it will be observed, is made between the members of the firm and the company; accordingly it cannot be executed until after the company has been registered, because until then the company has no existence.

Sometimes, as in the case of other companies, it is deemed expedient to have an agreement before the memorandum and articles of association are prepared, e.g., where there is reason to apprehend that a member of a firm who has assented to the conversion may change his mind unless bound by agreement at once. In such case the agreement will be made between the vendors and some person "on behalf of the intended company," and will recite the intention to form the company, and provide that the memorandum and articles shall be in a form already approved, or in such form as the vendors, or the majority of them, shall approve, and will define the terms of sale as in the above agreement.

2. In the form of agreement given at p. 956, the business is supposed to belong to three persons; but the form can readily be adapted to a case where the business belongs to a single person, or to a firm consisting of a greater or less number of persons than three.

3. Sometimes, instead of specifying part of the property transferred in the body of the agreement (clause 1), it is found more convenient to specify it all in the schedule. In such case clause 1 will provide for the sale and purchase of "the property specified in the schedule hereunder written," and particulars will be given in the schedule.

4. In some cases the sale does not include all the property of the firm. Part of the ready money, for instance, may be excepted, or some branch of the business, or some other item; indeed, the sale sometimes includes scarcely any property except the goodwill of the business, and possibly some pending contracts, or the business premises. If the vendors are carrying two cognate businesses, e.g., bootmaking and saddlery, but converting only one of them, it may be desirable not to part with the exclusive right to the trade name.

5. The shares agreed to be taken by the vendors in the form at p. 957 are, it will be observed, to be deemed to be fully paid up.

the object being that the partners—A., B. and C.—may be free from all liability to creditors of the company. Such creditors have their remedy against the assets, but none against A., B. and C. personally. This freedom from liability, however, applies only to debts and liabilities incurred by the company subsequently to the conversion. As to the debts of the firm existing at the date of the sale, though as between the vendors and the company the latter is, by clause 3 of the agreement, bound to pay, yet the creditors who have nothing to do with the conversion still retain their right to call on A., B. and C. to pay, and would no doubt enforce this right if the company failed to pay in due time. It may fairly be assumed, however, that the debts and liabilities taken over will in ordinary course of business be soon discharged by the company, or, at all events, A., B. and C. be released by novation, that is, by the creditors accepting the company as their debtor in substitution.

6. Sometimes the vendors determine to accept part payment in fully paid-up shares and part in debentures or acceptances of the company. Or, again, it is sometimes provided that the share of one partner (e.g., the wealthy partner, who desires to withdraw) shall be paid for partly in shares and partly in cash payable by instalments. Special cases of this kind must, of course, be specially provided for by the agreement.

7. As to clause 6 of the agreement. Upon the conversion of a business into a private company it is almost always provided that the company shall accept the title of the vendors without investigation.

8. The agreement is expressed in the above form for the sake of simplicity, but modifications are generally desirable in order to avoid or minimise stamp duty.

9. As to fraudulent companies, see p. 946.

In the case of a private company of Class B. (supra, p. 912), the agreement (if any) will provide for the transfer to the company of the concession, patent, or property, or for the placing at the disposal of the company of the services of some expert, or otherwise as the circumstances may require.

Conversion commonly involves some ad valorem duty, but this may in some cases be avoided or minimised. And it is well settled that persons are perfectly free, provided they comply with the law, to adopt that course which will best enable them to avoid or minimise the duty. "It is no fraud on the Crown; it is a thing which they are perfectly entitled to do." Per Lord Esher, M. R., Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Angus, 23 Q. B. Div. 579; Simms v. Registrar of Probates, (1900) A. C. 323.

It must, however, be left to the practitioner to point out the various expedients open; for to specify them here would be to invite the Legislature to intervene with fresh taxation.

Where a business is converted into a company it is usual to send Notice of conversion.

out a notice to customers—and, in the case of an important concern, to procure the insertion of a paragraph in the money article of some of the leading newspapers—stating that the business has been converted into a company, with a capital of so much, and that the shares have all been taken up by the partners and their relations, or as the case may be.

circular.

The following is a specimen of a circular:

A., B. and C., Limited.

SIR,—We beg to inform you that we have converted our business into a limited company bearing the above name.

The object of the conversion is to secure the many advantages incident to incorporation, and more especially to avoid the dislocations and inconveniences which the death or retirement of any partner might cause.

The capital of the company has been fixed at 600,000*l.*, divided into 60,000 shares of 10*l.* each, the whole of which are appropriated to ourselves as fully paid up in substitution for our interests in the business.

The directors of the company are A., B., C. and D., and D. has been appointed to the office of managing director.

All debts and liabilities of the firm are undertaken by the company, and all debts due to the firm are to be paid to the company.

The conversion will not affect the general conduct of the business, which will be carried on as heretofore, and we trust that the satisfactory relations which have heretofore subsisted between you and the firm will continue to subsist between you and the company.

We have the honour to remain,

Yours faithfully,

A., B., C. & Co.

Companies Limited by Guarantee.

Companies
guarantee

When a private company or syndicate is to be formed for some temporary purpose, e.g., to acquire patent rights and as a preliminary thereto to test the invention, and in due time to sell and divide the proceeds, it is now not uncommon to register the concern as a company limited by guarantee and without a share capital. This is a mode of formation much more elastic than the ordinary mode. Though there is no capital divided into shares, it is possible to place the members in as secure and advantageous a position as if they held shares in a capital. The guarantee is no hindrance. It may be merely nominal, e.g., a liability on each member, in the event of a winding-up, to pay, say, 1*l.* Where this mode of incorporation is adopted, it is possible to enable the company to divide any of its assets (whether in the nature of capital or profits) by way of dividend among its members, and to do a variety of other things which, in the case of a company formed in the ordinary way, are not permissible. See further, supra, pp. 492 et seq., 795 et seq.

Cases as to Private Companies.

The following cases, as some of the most instructive relating to private companies, may here be mentioned. They are given mostly in chronological order:—

Trevor v. Whitworth (1887), 12 App. Cas. 409. This was a case in which the articles of association of a private company, limited by shares, contained power for the company to purchase its own shares. Acting on this power, the directors bought up the shares of one of the members, bonâ fide thinking that it was to the interest of the company so to do. Held, that the purchase involved in effect a reduction of the capital of the company, and was therefore ultra vires and illegal. In that case Lord Macnaghten said:

"It is said that the company was a family company; but a family company, whatever the expression means, does not limit its trading to the family circle. If it takes the benefit of the Act [of 1862], it is bound by the Act as much as any other company. It can have no special privilege or immunity. It was said that the board did not want Whitworth's shares to be sold to outsiders or put on the market. Unfortunately there was nothing special in that."

This decision is still good law—a primary principle for private and public companies alike that a company cannot purchase its own shares, but the Companies Act, 1908, while imposing many new and onerous obligations on companies, exempts private companies from many, although by no means all, of the obligations imposed on companies generally. See p. 911, supra.

Foster v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1894) 1 Q. B. 516. In this case it was held that an agreement in writing to transfer a business to a company in consideration of shares was, in effect, an agreement for sale within the Stamp Act, 1891. It was contended that in substance the vendors sold to themselves; but the Court held that the company, being a separate entity, was the purchaser, and that it was not possible to disregard the fact and treat the members as the company without disregarding the settled legal distinction between the members and the company of which they are corporators.

Newman & Co., (1895) 1 Ch. 685. In this case one Newman had converted his business into a private company, and had applied funds of the company to ultra vires purposes. This was done with the privity and consent of the other members, and it was contended that, as it was a private company, no objection should be made to such transactions; but it was held otherwise. The following extracts from the judgment of Lindley, L. J., are in point:

"It is true that this company was a small one, and is what is called a private company, but its corporate capacity cannot be ignored. Those who form such companies obtain special advantages, but accompanied by some disadvantages. A registered company cannot do anything which all its members think expedient, and which, apart from the law relating to incorporated companies, they might lawfully do as incorporated. A company's assets are its property, and not the property of the shareholders for the time being; . . . Mr. G. Newman and his co-directors evidently ignored their legal position entirely. They regarded Mr. G. Newman as the company, and it never seems to have occurred to them that he and his brothers could not do as they liked with what they regarded as their own property, or, rather, as his, for he and his children held the bulk of the shares. If this view were correct in point of law—if the body corporate could be disregarded—it would follow that Mr. G. Newman and his brothers would be liable without limit for the debts which were contracted in the name of the company. This would be a just and proper result to arrive at; but the Court is precluded by the terms of the Companies Act, 1862, ss. 191, 192, from adopting it. The Court is bound to recognize the company as incorporated, and to give effect to all the consequences of such incorporation."

Trevor v. Whitworth.

It was a pity the principles so clearly expounded here were not adhered to by the Court of Appeal.

Salomon v. Salomon & Co.
(One-man company legal.)

Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22, dealing with one-man and other small companies. In common parlance, a "one-man company" is a company in which all, or practically all, the shares belong to one man, e.g., where the capital is divided into 100,000 shares and 99,994 of them are held by one man, whilst the remaining six belong to other persons more or less subject to his influence, as his clerks or relatives. A "two-man company" has a corresponding meaning.

Thousands of private companies have been formed within the last quarter of a century having the great bulk of their share capital in the names of one, two, three, four, or five principal shareholders; the other members holding only one share apiece, and being mere nominees of the principal shareholders or shareholder; and until the year 1894 no doubt was openly expressed as to the regularity of the constitution of such companies.

In that year, however, in the case of Broderip v. Salomon, (1895) 2 Ch. 323, the question was for the first time raised, and the regularity of the constitution of a so-called "one-man company" was challenged in the High Court of Justice.

The facts of that case, shortly stated, were as follows: Salomon, a solvent leather merchant, owned a profitable business, and in order to obtain the advantages of limited liability (supra, p. 912 et seq.), he determined to convert his business into a private company. Of the shares in the capital he took 20,000, and his wife and sons and daughter each took one. No one else ever had a share in the company. He also received mortgage debentures for 10,000*l.* as part of the consideration payable to him for the transfer of the business. These debentures he mortgaged to one Broderip as security for a loan. The boot trade later on became unexpectedly depressed, and at the end of the year the company got into difficulties. Broderip then brought an action to enforce the debentures, and a winding-up order was shortly afterwards made against the company on another creditor's petition. There were unsecured creditors to the extent of several thousands of pounds. The learned judge before whom the action came conceived the singular notion that the company, although duly incorporated, was a sham, and that, although it was a distinct entity, it was a mere alias for Salomon, and he decided in effect that, in the circumstances, Salomon was bound to pay the unsecured creditors out of his own pocket, although his shares had already been paid up in full.

The case then went to the Court of Appeal, and was re-heard by the Lords Justices Lindley, Lopes, and Kay, who, strange to say, affirmed the decision, and in doing so expressed views of a still more remarkable character. Lindley, L. J., said: "The Legislature never contemplated an extension of limited liability to sole traders or to a fewer number than seven. . . . Although in the present case there were, and are, seven members, yet it is manifest that six of them are members simply in order to enable the seventh himself to carry on business with limited liability. The object of the whole arrangement is to do the very thing which the Legislature intended not to be done."

And Lopes, L. J., said: "It was never intended that the company to be constituted should consist of one substantial person and six mere dummies, nominees of that person without any real interest in the company. The Act contemplated the incorporation of seven independent bonâ fide members who had a mind and will of their own, and were not the mere puppets of an individual who, adopting the machinery of the Act, carried on the whole business in the same way as before, when he was a sole trader."

And Kay, L. J., said: "The statutes were intended to allow seven or more persons, bonâ fide associated for the purposes of trade, to limit their liability under certain conditions and become a corporation, but they were not intended to legalize a pretended association for the purpose of enabling an individual to carry on his own business with limited liability in the name of a joint stock company."

The views thus expressed naturally created great uneasiness, not to say [doubt and anxiety, and some] consternation, in the minds of those who were interested in private companies, and well they might, for their effect would have been to disincorporate and wreck thousands of flourishing concerns.

However, experts in company law soon arrived at the conclusion that the decisions of both Courts were erroneous, and that the views expressed by them were unsound, and in the next edition of his work "Private Companies" the author ventured to make the following observations:

"Grave doubts exist whether the views expressed in these dicta are well founded. It is pointed out that there is not a syllable in the Act to show that it was intended to enact that limited liability should be conditional on there being, and continuing to be, seven members 'beneficially' or 'substantially' interested in the company; and it is argued, with some reason, that if the Legislature had intended to impose such a condition it would have said so in plain terms. Again, it is said that, if this was the intention, it is very singular that sect. 48 of the Act says not a word on the subject. That section provides that if any company under the Act carries on business when the number of its members is less than seven for a period of six months after the number has been so reduced, any person who is a member of such company during the time that it so carries on business after such period of six months, and is cognizant of the fact that it is so carrying on business with fewer than seven members, shall be severally liable for the payment of the whole of the debts of the company contracted during such time.

"If the intention was as suggested, it would have been easy to deal with the matter in this section, and use the phrase, 'members beneficially and substantially interested,' with a proper definition of the word 'substantially,' but the section observes a significant silence.

"Further, it is said that if the law be as suggested, the Legislature has, in effect, laid a trap for the unwary, for it offers limited liability conditionally on there being seven members, without a word as to 'beneficial' or 'substantial' holding; and yet, if the dicta be good law, a shareholder may find that he is under unlimited liability, because his interest, compared with that of the other members, is too large.

"Again, it is said that it is a well-settled rule in the interpretation of Acts of Parliament that what an Act does not prohibit may be done, or, rather, that a thing is either prohibited by the Act or is not prohibited, and that in the latter case there is no obligation not to do what the Legislature has not really prohibited (6 H. L. C. 338; L. R. 8 C. P. 64); and that it is the duty of the judges to interpret, and not to legislate or to provide for cases which the Legislature has not thought fit to provide for (1 C. D. 161); and it is said that the dicta in Broderip v. Salomon in effect go beyond the Act, and depart from this rule, and are therefore to be disregarded.

"Nor is it easy to answer these objections and arguments."

The event justified the author's criticisms, for the House of Lords, in November, 1896, reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal, and determined that the views expressed by the learned judges there were entirely erroneous and unsound. Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22. The noble and learned lords who heard the case were the Lord Chancellor (Lord Halsbury), Lord Watson, Lord Herschell, Lord Macnaghten, Lord Morris, and Lord Davey, and they were unanimously of opinion that a one-man company was not an abuse of the Act, and à fortiori, that two-men, three-men, or four-men companies were not open to objection.

In arriving at this conclusion, the law lords all laid stress on the well-settled rule of the common law, that the intention of Parliament is to be sought for in the words of the enactment. "I can only," said the Lord Chancellor, "find the true intent and meaning of the Act from the Act itself." "In a Court of Law or Equity," said Lord Watson, "what the Legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legally ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication." "I know," said Lord Herschell, "of no means of ascertaining what is the intent and meaning of the Companies Act, except by examining its provisions and finding what regulations it has imposed as a condition of trading with limited liability.

And applying this elementary and time-honoured rule, the Lords held that all the Act required was that there should be seven members, each of whom should hold one share at least; that this was the condition imposed by the statute, and that there was no foundation for the suggestion that such a company was irregular because some or one of the seven members happened to hold a relatively small or a relatively large number of shares, or held them in trust for another member or members.

The statute," said the Lord Chancellor, "enacts nothing as to the extent or degree of interest which may be held by each of the seven, or as to the proportion of interest or influence possessed by one or the majority of the shareholders over the others. One share is enough

If they are shareholders, they are shareholders for all purposes, and even if the statute was silent as to the recognition of trusts, I should be prepared to hold that if six of the seven were cestuis que trust of the seventh, whatever might be their rights inter se, the statute would have made them shareholders to all intents and purposes with their respective rights and liabilities."

As to the objection that the formation of the company was a mere scheme to enable the founder to carry on business in the name of the company, the Lord Chancellor said: "I am wholly unable to follow the proposition that this was contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act. I can only find the true intent and meaning of the Act from the Act itself, and the Act appears to me to give the company a legal existence, whatever may have been the ideas or schemes of those who brought it into existence"; and as to the suggestion that the whole arrangement was, in the words of Lindley, L. J., "to do the very thing which the Legislature intended not to be done," the Lord Chancellor said: "It is obvious to inquire 'Where is that intention of the Legislature manifested in the statute?' It is, of course, easy to say that it was contrary to the intention of the Legislature—a proposition which, by means of its generality, it is difficult to bring to the test. . . . If the Legislature intended to prohibit something, you ought to know what that something is. All it has said is that one share is sufficient to constitute a shareholder, although the shares may be one hundred thousand in number. Where am I to get from the statute itself a limitation of that provision, that the shareholder must be an independent and beneficially interested person? . . . I must decline to insert in the Act of Parliament limitations which are not to be found there."

Lord Herschell said: "It was said that in the present case the six shareholders other than the appellant were mere dummies, his nominees, and held shares in trust for him. I will assume that this was so. In my opinion it makes no difference. The statute forbids entry in the register of any trust, and it certainly contains no enactment that each of the seven persons subscribing the memorandum must be beneficially entitled to the share or shares for which he subscribes. . . . We have to interpret the law, not to make it; and it must be remembered that no one need trust a limited company unless he so pleases, and that before he does so he can ascertain, if he so please, what is the capital of the company and how it is held.

Many industrial and banking companies of the highest standing and credit have in recent years been, to use a common expression, 'converted' into joint stock companies, and often into what are called private companies, where the whole of the shares are held by the former partners. It appears to me that all these might be pronounced schemes to enable them 'to carry on business in the name of the company and with limited liability' in the very sense in which these words are used in the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The profits of the concern carried on by the company will go to the persons whose business it was before the transfer, and in the same proportions as before, the only difference being that the liability of those who take the profits will no longer be unlimited. The very object of the creation of the company and the transfer to it of the business is that whereas the liability of the partners for debts incurred was without limit, the liability of the members for the debts incurred by the company shall be limited. . . . It is said that the respondent company is a 'one-man company,' and that in this respect it differs from such companies as those to which I have alluded; but it has often happened that a business transferred to a joint stock company has been the property of three or four persons only, and that the other subscribers of the memorandum have been clerks or other persons who possessed little or no interest in the concern. I am unable to see how it can be lawful for three or four or six to form a company for the purpose of employing their capital in trading with the benefit of limited liability, and not for one person to do so, provided in each case the requirements of the statute have been complied with, and the company has been validly constituted."

Lord Macnaghten was equally clear, and said: "There is nothing in the Act requiring that the subscribers to the memorandum should be independent or unconnected, or that they or any of them should take a substantial interest in the undertaking, or that they should have a mind and will of their own, as one of the learned judges seems to think (Kay, L. J.), or that there should be anything like a balance of power in the constitution of the company. In almost every company that is formed the statutory number is eked out by clerks or friends, who sign their names at the request of the promoter or promoters, without intending to take any further part or interest in the matter." And with reference to the suggestion that the promotion of the company, with a view to obtaining limited liability and to the issue of debentures, was objectionable, his Lordship expressed his dissent, and said that "Among the principal reasons which induce persons to form private companies, as is stated very clearly by Mr Palmer, in his treatise* on the subject, are the desire to avoid the risk of bankruptcy and the increased facility afforded for borrowing money. By means of a private company, as Mr. Palmer observes, a trade can be carried on with limited liability, and without exposing the persons interested in it, in the event of failure, to the harsh provisions of the bankruptcy law. A company, too, can raise money on debentures which an ordinary trader cannot do. Any member of a company acting in good faith is as much entitled to take and hold the company's debentures as any outside creditor. Every creditor is entitled to get and hold the best security the law allows him to take."

The Supreme Court of Appeal has thus happily removed what threatened to be a serious obstacle to the formation and working of private companies, as well as a danger to existing private companies, and has once for all disposed of the erroneous and impracticable views enunciated in the Courts below.

Wragg, Limited, (1897) 1 Ch. 796, dealt with the payment for shares. It was a case in which it was held that, where a private company without any independent executive had been formed to acquire a particular business on the terms of a specified agreement, and had acquired the same in part consideration of shares credited as fully paid up, such shares were to be treated as fully paid up accordingly; "provided," said Lord Justice Lindley, "in that case a limited company does so honestly and not colourably, and provided that it has not been so imposed upon as to be entitled to be relieved from its bargain. It appears to be settled by Pell's case, 5 Ch. 11, and the others to which I have referred, . . . that agreements by limited companies to pay for property or services in paid-up shares are valid and binding on the companies and their creditors. . . . Value paid to the company is measured by the price at which the company agrees to buy what it thinks it worth its while to acquire. Whilst the transaction is unimpeached, this is the only value to be considered."

And Rigby, L. J., says (at p. 841) in the same case: "I think that the series of authorities cited by Lindley, L. J., beginning with Pell's case (see supra, p. 61), have made it impossible, in such a case as above indicated, to inquire effectually into the value of the property taken in exchange for shares where the contract itself is not impeached. If those authorities are to be overruled, that must be done by the House of Lords."

Felix Hadley & Co. v. Hadley (1897), 77 L. T. 131 (Goodwill). In this case the defendant had converted his business into a private company. He held the bulk of the shares. Later on he parted with some of the shares to friends and others, and he gradually reduced his holding until finally only 200 shares stood in his name; the management fell into other hands, and later on the action was brought against the defendant claiming damage for excessive price paid for goodwill and repayment of sums taken by way of remuneration. The action was heard by Byrne, J., and that learned judge held that as the conversion was honestly effected there was no foundation for the action, which accordingly he dismissed with costs. It was contended that the price paid for the goodwill was excessive, and that as the vendor stood in a fiduciary position to the company he must be considered as having acted recklessly and improvidently in allowing the company to purchase at a price ascertained upon the footing of there being any value in goodwill; but the learned judge was not satisfied that an excessive price was paid for the goodwill, and observed that "goodwill is a property as to the value of which opinions may materially and honestly differ. It is worth more, if the old management is to be kept up, if the old servants are to be retained—assuming that the business has been well managed and well served—than if the management is to be new, and untried men are to be employed. But it is material to the value if the old manager and servants retain a substantial interest in the concern, and especially if the expenses of the management are to depend upon the will of the purchaser. It depends upon the nature of the business, the expenditure already made in advertisement and establishing the business, the reputation existing, and the probabilities of the market. It depends upon a hundred circumstances. It is worth more to one man than to another. As a matter of fact, in the present case, I am not satisfied that too large a value was put upon it."

Hirth, In re.
Vendor's early bankruptcy after sale to
company.)

Hirth, In re. (1899) 1 Q. B. 612 (Effect of vendor's bankruptcy). A trader, who was liable under a judgment for the costs of an action, purported to sell his business to a company, which he had formed for the purpose, in consideration of fully paid-up shares and of the company undertaking to pay his debts. He was the chairman, managing director, and secretary of the company; he or his nominee held substantially the whole of the shares in it, and he had the complete control of it, including the power to draw cheques, which he exercised in his own favour. Within three months of this transaction a bankruptcy petition was presented against him, grounded on his non-compliance with a bankruptcy notice in respect of the costs in question, and a receiving order was made upon it. His liabilities exceeded 2,000*l.*, with assets nil. Between the presentation of the petition and the making of the order a resolution was passed for the voluntary winding-up of the company, and a liquidator was appointed. Upon a motion by the trustee in bankruptcy against the liquidator impeaching the validity of the transfer of the business, the Court of Appeal, reversing Wright, J., held that the transfer was fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy; that the title of the trustee to the business related back to the date of the transfer, and overrode the claims of the creditors of the company in the winding-up; and that the liquidator was bound to hand over to the trustee the assets representing the business at the time of the transfer.

Lindley, L. J., at p. 620, said:—

"Solomon's case has decided a great deal, and people have not been slow to take advantage of it: it has decided that a company can be legitimately formed under the Companies Acts by one person, or one or two persons, with all the rest men of straw, and that there is at present no machinery except winding-up by which it can be extinguished. . . . But the question was never raised there whether the creditors of a sole trader who had converted himself into a company, and transferred all his assets to the company, could not impeach the transaction either as a fraud upon the creditors under the Statute of Elizabeth, or as an act of bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. . . . To reach the transaction under the Statute of Elizabeth it must be shown that the sale was of the whole, or substantially the whole, of [the vendor's] property; and it must be shown that the company had notice that he was cheating his creditors." But sect. 4, sub-sect. 1 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "extends the Statute of Elizabeth enormously, because here the Court has not to consider whether the person who takes the property knows anything about the fraud, nor whether that which is transferred is the whole, or substantially the whole, of the debtor's property. It has to consider the debtor and what he has done; and if he has made a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of his property, or any part thereof, he has committed an act of bankruptcy. . . . So far as Hirth was concerned, he had recourse to this scheme to defeat the people who were suing him, and who ultimately got an order against him for more costs than he could pay. . . . Having been adjudicated bankrupt upon a petition which was presented on May 12, 1898, his bankruptcy relates back to the transaction of March 7, 1898, if that was, as it clearly was, a fraudulent conveyance [to the company] within the meaning of the 4th section of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. . . . Supposing that this company were an ordinary person, the title of the trustee would, in my opinion, be perfectly plain. What effect has the winding-up of the company? It appears to me that it really has none at all."

The essence of this case is that the transfer of the business to the company was a fraud on the vendor's creditors, and so an act of bankruptcy. The rights of the company in such a case are considered in Re Slobodinsky, p. 948, infra; and see In re Goldberg; Ex parte Silverstone, (1912) 1 K. B. 384, p. 954, infra.

In re Ely, Ex parte The Trustee (1900), 48 W. R. 693, C. A. In this case one, Ely, converted his business into a company. Subsequently he became bankrupt, and the sale to the company was set aside on the ground that the same was a fraudulent conveyance under sect. 4, sub-sect. 1 (b), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and the company and the directors were ordered to account; but the Court of Appeal held that the judgment against the directors could not be supported. "The company," said Collins, L. J., "has been carrying on a business which belonged to the trustee which was not their own at all. That being so, the trustee is at liberty to say, 'I am in a position to sue in tort, or, in the alternative, to call you to account for the proceeds as money had to my use.' If he chose to proceed in tort the facts would justify judgment against the company and its directors alike. If he chose to proceed by way of account, dealings which without his consent would be unlawful are not unlawful now. He has chosen to proceed by the latter course but at this point another fact is introduced into the discussion. It is admitted that the directors have paid over everything that they have received. To ask them to account for this now would be inconsistent with the alternative that the trustee has adopted: the two states of things cannot co-exist."

Re Slobodinsky, Ex parte Moore, (1903) 2 K. B. 517. In this case S., who was an insolvent trader, through the agency of N., in December, 1902, sold and transferred his business and book debts, the business of M. (which he had contracted to purchase), and stock bought on credit and not in the ordinary course of business, to a company which he promoted for that purpose. The purchase-money (35,539*l.*) was paid, as to 400*l.* in cash, as to 10,000*l.* in 100 debentures of 100*l.* each, and as to the balance in fully paid shares. The debentures, at the request of N., were issued as follows: seven to B., fifteen to Z., thirty to N., thirty to M., and eighteen to S. The fully paid shares were allotted to S., who had been appointed chairman of directors. The debentures issued to N. were the remuneration for his services to S. in the matter, and B. and Z. were cash creditors of S. The first acting directors of the company and N. were the mere instruments of S. in carrying through this transaction, which divested S. of substantially all his property, and left him with trade creditors to a large amount and some cash creditors totally unprovided for. M.'s business was genuine: he acted in good faith and without notice of any fraud, and accepted the 400*l.* in cash and his debentures in payment for his business. There were some bona fide shareholders of the company. Within three months S. was adjudicated bankrupt, and Wright, J., held (1) that the transfer of S.'s property to the company was fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy within sub-sect. 1 (b) of sect. 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; that the company had notice of the fraud; and that under sects. 43 and 44 of the Act the trustee in bankruptcy, as against the company, was entitled to the property of S.; (2) that N. was a party to the fraud, and that his debentures were not a charge upon the property of S. in the hands of the trustee; but (3) that M. was protected by sect. 49 of the Act, and that his debentures were a charge upon the property of S. in the hands of the trustee so far as the assets of the company might prove insufficient to satisfy the same. The point in this case was that the company, having notice that the transfer was fraudulent, could not claim to have it treated as a "protected transaction" under sect. 49 of the Act. See also Wheatley's Trustee v. H. Wheatley, Ltd. (1901), 85 L. T. 491.

Re A. B., W. N. (1899) 233, dealt with the conversion of a lunatic's business. Borland's Trustees v. Steel Bros. & Co., Ltd., (1901) 1 Ch. 279. In this case the validity of a provision for compulsory retirement was impeached. The impeached article had been adopted by special resolution, with a view to ensure that the ordinary shareholders should be actively engaged in the business either as managers or assistants. The article empowered the directors to compel any person holding shares who was not engaged in the management to sell and transfer to a person so engaged at the fair value not exceeding par, to be ascertained as therein mentioned. The plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of a shareholder, became entitled to certain ordinary shares and was served with the requisite notice to sell at par. The par value, calculated according to the articles, would be about 8,650l., whereas the real value, as the plaintiff alleged, would be about 34,000l. The plaintiff—the trustee—claimed an injunction to restrain the company from enforcing the transfer, and relied principally on three objections: first, that the provisions of the articles were repugnant to the legal conception of the nature of personal property, and were consequently invalid; secondly, that the provisions were invalid as transgressing the rule against perpetuity; and, thirdly, on the ground that the articles constituted a fraud upon the bankruptcy law; but Farwell, J., in a luminous judgment, disposed of all these objections. As to the two first objections, the learned judge considered that they involved an attempt to apply to company law a principle which is wholly inapplicable thereto.

"It is the first time that any suggestion has been made, and it rests, I think, on a misconception of what a share in a company really is. A share according to the plaintiff's argument is a sum of money which is dealt with in a particular manner by what are called, for the purpose of argument, executory limitations. To my mind it is nothing of the sort. A share is the interest of a shareholder in the company measured by a sum of money for the purpose of liability in the first place, and of interest in the second, but also consisting of a series of mutual covenants entered into by all the shareholders inter se in accordance with sect. 16 of the Companies Act, 1862. The contract contained in the articles of association is one of the original incidents of the share. A share is not a sum of money settled in the way suggested, but it is an interest measured by a sum of money made up of various rights contained in the contract, including the right to a sum of money of a more or less amount. That view seems to me to be supported by the authority of New London and Brazilian Bank v. Bank of England, 21 C. D. 302. . . . Then it is said that is contrary to the rule against perpetuity. Now, in my opinion, the rule against perpetuity has no application whatever to personal contracts. If authority is necessary for that the case of Witham v. Vane, Challis, 2nd ed. 401, is a direct authority of the House of Lords, and to my mind an even stronger case is that of Walsh v. Secretary of State for India, 10 H. L. C. 367. . . . I have said that these articles are nothing more or less than a personal contract between Mr. Borland and the other shareholders in the company under the 16th section of the Companies Act, 1862. Mr. Borland was one of the original shareholders, and he and his trustee in bankruptcy are bound by his own contract. I do not know that I am concerned to consider the case of other shareholders who come in afterwards but if I am, the answer, so far as they are concerned is, that each of them in coming in executes a deed of transfer which, in the terms in which it is executed makes him liable to all the provisions of the original articles. Mr. Borland cannot be heard to say there is any repugnancy or perpetuity in the covenant he has entered into, and his trustee in bankruptcy stands in no better position."

As to the third objection, the learned judge found, as a fact, that the articles were made bonâ fide, and constituted a fair agreement for the purpose of the business of the company; and that they were not obnoxious to the bankruptcy laws, or a fraud thereon

The validity of these special transfer clauses was also upheld in Att.-G. Ireland v. Jameson, (1904) 2 Ir. Rep. K. B. D. 644.

Morrison v. Morrison.
Conversion
by executors.

Re Morrison. Morrison v. Morrison, (1901) 1 Ch. 701. In that case it was proposed that the executors of one Morrison, deceased, should concur with the other partners of the deceased in converting into a limited company a business in which the deceased was interested as a partner. It was proposed that the partners and the executors of the deceased partner should receive shares and debenture stock in satisfaction of their interests. The will did not contain any special power. The executors applied to the Court to sanction the agreement, and for liberty to take the shares and debenture stock. They referred to the seventh edition of this work and the various cases therein referred to in which the Court had exercised jurisdiction; but, strange to say, Buckley, J., held that the Court had no jurisdiction, and that, although orders on the footing that there was jurisdiction had no doubt been made from time to time, they were to be considered "benevolent orders," in other words, that a jurisdiction which had, undoubtedly, been exercised in hundreds of cases by the most eminent judges was non-existent. This was indeed a startling conclusion. See, however, the next following case, in which this unfortunate decision was distinguished, if not in effect overruled.

Re New.
Reconstruction.
Sanction of Court as to Re New; Re Leavers; Re Morley, (1901) 2 Ch. 534. In this case shares in a limited company had been settled. The company had proved a great success, and the shares were at a premium of more than 100 per cent. It was proposed to reconstruct the company, and to give to the shareholders largely increased holdings, partly in debenture stock, partly in preference shares, and partly in ordinary shares; but the will did not contain the requisite power. The trustees of the settlement applied to the Court for sanction and concurrence in the reconstruction; but Cozens-Hardy, J., in reliance on the decision in Morrison, above referred to, declined to sanction the same, holding that the Court had no jurisdiction. The case, however, was carried to the Court of Appeal, and the decision was reversed; and, indirectly, the views expressed by Buckley, J., in Morrison were dissented from. The judgment of the Court was delivered by Lord Justice Romer, and was in the terms following:—

trustees of
concurring.)

"As a rule, the Court has no jurisdiction to give, and will not give, its sanction to the performance by the trustees of acts with reference to the trust estate which are not, on the face of the instrument creating the trust, authorized by its terms. The cases of Crawshaw (60 L. T. 537), decided by North, J., and Morrison, decided by Mr. Justice Buckley, are instances where the Court was asked to sanction steps to be taken by trustees which it thought unjustifiable, and which it declared it had no jurisdiction to authorize. But in the management of a trust estate, and especially where that estate consists of a business or shares in a mercantile company, it not infrequently happens that some peculiar state of circumstances arises for which provision is not expressly made by the trust instrument, and which renders it most desirable, and it may be even essential, for the benefit of the estate, and in the interest of all the cestuis qui touchent, that certain acts should be done by the trustees which, in ordinary circumstances, they would have no power to do. In a case of this kind, which may reasonably be supposed to be one not foreseen or anticipated by the author of the trust, where the trustees are embarrassed by the emergency that has arisen, and the duty cast upon them to do what is best for the estate, and the consent of all the beneficiaries cannot be obtained by reason of some of them not being en l'age, or in existence, then it may be right for the Court, and the Court in a proper case would have jurisdiction, to sanction, on behalf of all concerned, such acts on behalf of the trustees as we have above referred to. By way merely of illustration, we may take the case where a testator has declared that some property of his shall be sold at a particular time after his death; and then, owing to unforeseen change of circumstances since the testator's death, when the time for sale arrives it is found that to sell at that precise time would be ruinous to the estate, and that it is necessary or right to postpone the sale for a short time in order to effect a proper sale; in such a case the Court would have jurisdiction, and would authorize the trustees to postpone the sale for a reasonable time. It is a matter of common knowledge that the jurisdiction we have been referring to, which is only part of the general administrative jurisdiction of the Court, has been constantly exercised, chiefly in Chambers. Of course, the jurisdiction is one to be exercised with great caution, and the Court will take care not to strain its powers. It is impossible, and no attempt ought to be made, to state or define all the circumstances under which, or the extent to which, the Court will exercise the jurisdiction; but it need scarcely be said that the Court will not be justified in sanctioning every act desired by trustees and the beneficiaries merely because it may appear beneficial to the estate; and certainly the Court will not be disposed to sanction transactions of a speculative or risky character. But each case brought before the Court must be considered and dealt with according to its special circumstances. As a rule, these circumstances are better investigated and dealt with in Chambers. Very often they involve matters of a delicate and private nature, the publication of which is not requisite on any good ground, and might cause great injury to the trust estate.

"With these general observations we pass to the cases now before us. The circumstances and the evidence have been considered by us. We do not think it is necessary to refer to them in detail. We need only say that they relate to a prosperous limited company whose shares are fully paid up, and to a condition of affairs that has arisen which makes it desirable in the interests of the shareholders that by their consent the company should be reconstituted by the company being wound up and a new company formed to take over its assets. The new company is to be like the old company, except that the capital is larger and that the new company will have power to issue debentures. The shares in the old company will be represented by fully paid-up shares and debentures in the new company. Every shareholder who is sui juris agrees to the scheme, but some shares are held by trustees who wish the sanction of the Court to their assenting on behalf of beneficiaries not sui juris or not in existence, the other beneficiaries agreeing. We understand that Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy was himself satisfied that the course proposed to be adopted by the trustees was one which, if it could be, should be sanctioned by the Court. We think, under the circumstances of the case, that the Court has jurisdiction to sanction, and ought to sanction, the proposed acts of the trustees. But the evidence should be supplemented so as to make clearer the points urged in the course of the argument before us as to the importance of further capital being provided by the proposed reconstruction of the company, the issue of debentures by the new company, and the difficulties that will arise if the trustees are obliged to stand aloof and to take no part in any reconstruction. Then, in the cases where the trustees are not by the terms of the trust instrument authorized to invest in the shares or debentures of such a company as the proposed new company, they must undertake to apply to the Court for leave to further retain the shares and debentures they will obtain under the scheme of reconstruction if they desire to retain them beyond one year from the time the reconstruction is carried out."

Accordingly the Court reversed the order in the Court below and sanctioned the agreement. In Re Tollemache, (1903) 1 Ch. 955, Cozens-Hardy, L. J., considered the above case the high-water mark of the exercise by the Court of its extraordinary jurisdiction in relation to trusts.

Smith v. Lewis,

(Trustees concurring in a reconstruction.)

Re Smith, Smith v. Lewis, (1902) 2 Ch. 667. In this case the testator held fully paid-up ordinary shares in a company which had no power to issue preference shares. By his will the testator authorized his trustee to retain any part of his estate in its present form of investment. After the testator's death the company was reconstructed, and each shareholder was given fully paid-up preference shares and fully paid-up ordinary shares. The trustees accepted the shares allotted to them in respect of their shares in the old company. The preference shares were within the terms of the investment clause in the will, and the question was whether the trustees had power to retain the ordinary shares in the new company. It was held by Buckley, J., that the ordinary shares in the new company came within the words "in its present form of investment," and that the trustees were justified in retaining them. "The new shares," said his Lordship, "came to the trustees because the testator held the old shares, and for no other reason. The shares in the new company resulted from the shares in the old company without any act on the part of the trustees, simply because they held the testator's shares. To get anything else they would have had actively to do something, namely, to dissent under sect. 161. The trustees, therefore, have not made the investment in the new shares. The altered thing they have is the same investment in an altered form, resulting from qualities inherent in the investment which their testator had."

Re Sar, Barnard v. Sar (1893), 68 L. T. 849. The testator in this case bequeathed his business and the assets thereof to his three sons, on condition that they paid his wife during widowhood an annuity; and the will provided that if the testator's sons should cease to carry on the said business, the messuage or factory in which it was carried on should fall into and form part of his residuary estate. After the testator's death one of the sons retired, and assigned his interest to his brothers. Subsequently the two continuing sons converted the business into a company and became the managing directors thereof for life, and all the shares were issued to the sons or their nominees, but some debentures were issued to outsiders. The question arose whether the factory had or had not in the circumstances fallen into the residue. It was held by North, J., that the premises had fallen into the residue; that the assignment by the one son to the other two did not involve a ceasing to carry on the business, but that the assignment to the company did so. "The question," said his Lordship, "is whether, under these circumstances, the sons have ceased to carry on the business. I think they have. They have sold the business, and the agreement was that the company were to purchase it and carry on the business as their successors."

Barnard v. Sar.

Conversion into a company ceasing to carry on.

The Capital and Counties Bank v. The Governor and Company of the Bank of England (1889), 61 L. T. 516. In this case a company, originally formed and registered as a common law partnership under 7 Geo. 4, had gone through great changes—increased its capital enormously, changed its name more than once, become a body corporate by registration under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862, and none the less claimed payment of an annual composition under sect. 23 of the Bank Charter Act, 1844, payable by the defendants to the Hampshire Banking Company. It was held that, having regard to sect. 193 of the Companies Act, 1862, the company had not lost its identity, and, notwithstanding all its transformations and change of name, it still was in law the successor of the original bank, and therefore continued entitled to the composition.

Capital and Counties v. Bank of England.
(Continuing of company.)

Prescott, Dimsdale, Cave, Tugwell & Co. v. Bank of England, 1893) 1 Q. B. 351. This case is to be distinguished from the preceding case. Four firms of bankers by agreement transferred their business to a new company. That company claimed payment of the compositions due to the constituting firms, but it was held that the compositions ceased to be payable when such firms ceased to carry on business, and that, in selling their businesses to the new company, they had in fact ceased to carry on their businesses.

Silverstone.
(Private
fraud.)

In re Goldburg, Ex parte Silverstone, (1912) 1 K. B. 384. In this case an insolvent trader registered a private company called "Rita Limited," with a capital of 2,000*l.*, divided into shares of 1*l.* each. It was practically a one-man company. The trader assigned his business to the company for shares and debentures, and induced a bonâ fide mortgagee of his business, who was no party to the formation of the company, to accept some of the debentures in substitution for his mortgage. Shortly afterwards the trader became bankrupt, and his assignment to the company was set aside as fraudulent under 13 Eliz. c. 5, and as an act of bankruptcy under sub-sect. (1) (b) of sect. 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The company's debentures were worthless. The question thereupon arose, what was the position of the mortgagee? And it was held that he was not remitted by the avoidance of the assignment to his original position, and had no charge on the assets of the bankrupt, and that his only right was to prove in the bankruptcy of the trader for the damages he had sustained by reason of the trader's fraud in inducing him to accept worthless debentures in substitution for his security.

In re Darby. Ex parte Brougham, (1911) 1 K. B. 95. In this case company A. was formed by D. and B., who promoted another company (C.), and made by the promotion illegitimate profits. For the rest, Form 31 can be adopted with suitable modifications

As to stamp duty, sect. 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891, applies, on the footing that the agreement is for sale. See supra, p. 338; Foster v. Inland Revenue, (1894) 1 Q. B. 516.

Form 307.

Another.

AN AGREEMENT made the — day of —, 1912, between A., B., & C., all of — (hnfr called "the vendors"), of the one pt, and A., B. & Co., Limtd (hnfr called "the coy"), of the other pt. WHEREAS the vendors are the joint proprietors of an ironmongery business, now carried on by them in partnership, under the firm name of A., B., & Co., at —. AND WHEREAS the coy has been formed with a capital of 160,000L. divided into 16,000 shares of 10L. each to take over the sd business. NOW THEREFORE IT IS HBY AGREED as follows:—

1. The vendors shall sell, and the coy shall purchase—

Firstly, the leasehold hereditaments specified in the schedule hto, upon which the sd business is now carried on, and the goodwill of the sd business. Form 307.

Secondly, the moneys, bills, notes, and other negotiable instruments and securities for money, and the book and other debts and choses in action of the sd partnership, and the full benefit of all contracts and agreements to which the vendors are enttd in relation to the sd business.

Thirdly, the plant, machinery, furniture, stock-in-trade and effects of the sd partnership in or about the sd leasehold hereditaments.

2. As part of the consen for the sd sale the coy shall allot to the vendors, or to such persons as they shall resply direct, 15,800 of its shares, to be numbered 8 to 15,807 inclusive, and such shares shall be deemed to be fully pd up, and shall be apportioned as follows, namely, to A. 7,900, and to B. & C. each 3,950.

3. As the residue of the consen for the sd sale the coy shall undertake pay, satisfy, and discharge all the debts and liabilities of the vendors in relation to the sd business, and shall indemnify the vendors and their respive heirs, exors, and admors, estates and effects against all actions, claims, and demands in respect thof.

4. The sd sale shall be completed on the ---- day of ---- next, when the sd shares shall be issued to the vendors. On or at any time after that day the vendors resply will, upon the request and at the cost of the coy, execute and do all such assurances and things as shall reasonably be required by the coy for vesting in it the ppty agreed to be hby sold, and giving to it the full benefit of this agreemnt.

5. Subject as aforesaid the vendors shall, as from the date hof, be deemed to be carrying on the business on the coy's behalf, and shall account to and be indemnified by the coy accordingly.

6. The coy shall accept, without investigation, such title as the vendors have to the ppty hby agreed to be sold.

As witness the hands of the vendors and the common seal of the coy, the day and year first above written.

THE SCHEDULE.

This will contain particulars of the leasehold hereditaments.

The Memorandum of Association.

This agreement, on allotment of the shares, will have to be registered under Memorandum of association sect. 88 (1) (b) of the Act.

See supra, pp. 447, 504 et seq. Contemporaneously with the preparation of the draft agreement, the memorandum and articles of association must be settled for the intended company.

The memorandum of association of a private company needs only two subscribers (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 2), otherwise it does not differ from that of a public company; but where the company is to be formed for the purpose of converting an existing business, the acquisition of that business is usually specified as the first object. See supra, Form 85.

As to the Name. Upon the conversion of a business into a private company, the style under which the business, prior to the conversion, has been carried on is usually adopted, with the addition of the word "limited," in order to retain the goodwill attaching to the trade name.

Thus, J. Smith and Company becomes J. Smith and Company, Limited, and Brown and Jones becomes Brown and Jones, Limited. But, of course, the name can be altered if thought fit. Sometimes the company is called by the name of the principal works of the owner of the business, e.g., the Padworth Ironworks, Limited.

The following show some of the different classes of names which may be adopted:—Barber's Patents, Limited; The Burnham Club Buildings, Limited; The Alpha Mining Syndicate, Limited; The Northern and Southern Corporation, Limited; The — — Association, Limited; The Sailing Ship Carmen, Limited; The Steamship Mogul, Limited; The Suburban News, Limited; Peter Robinson's, Limited; "Chic," Limited; The Wallpaper Manufacturers, Limited.

As to the Capital.—This is generally, in the case of a private company, fixed at a sum slightly exceeding the aggregate amount of the shares which under the agreement are to be issued to the vendors. It is generally, for convenience, fixed in round numbers. In the above case, for instance (p. 957), the vendors are to take 15,800 shares—158,000*l.*, and the capital is accordingly fixed at 160,000*l.*

If the members of the firm are seven or more in number, the capital can, if desired, be fixed at the exact amount of the shares which they are to have, and then they may either subscribe the memorandum for or agree to take from the company the shares in the usual way; but if they subscribe the memorandum for the shares, it will be necessary to express the agreement somewhat differently, e.g., by providing that the sale shall be for cash, which shall be satisfied by crediting as paid up the shares subscribed for in the memorandum. If the vendors are less than seven in number there must be some extra shares for the persons who subscribe the memorandum other than the vendor or vendors.

These extra subscribers are only obliged to take one share apiece, but of course they may, if the vendors consent, subscribe for a greater number. However, they are rarely given many shares, lest they should interfere in the management. Sometimes the capital is divided into preference and ordinary shares. The following are cases in which such a division is sometimes stipulated for:—(1) A wealthy member of a firm is desirous of retiring, but at the request of his partners agrees to leave part of his capital in the business. He, however, stipulates that the business shall be converted into a company, and that his share in the assets of the firm shall be paid for in preference shares. (2) A capitalist is willing to bring additional capital into a business. It is agreed that the business shall, in the first place, be converted into a company, and that he shall bring in the additional capital by subscribing for preference shares. The rights of the preference shareholders will be defined by the articles of association. Ordinarily their right is, to receive out of the profits a fixed dividend, e.g., 5*l.* per cent. per annum, before any dividend is paid to the other shareholders. Sometimes, in addition to this, it is provided that if the company is wound up the preference share capital shall be returned before any return of capital is made to the holders of ordinary shares. See supra, p. 820.

Sometimes the amount of the share is made a present to the extra subscribers by the owner or owners of the business; sometimes the shares of the extra subscribers are held in trust for the principal shareholders.

Articles of Association.

Framing of the articles of association.

In the case of a private company, Form 251 will generally serve as a basis for the articles of association.

The articles must, however, contain a clause as follows:

The company is to be a private company, and accordingly the following provisions shall have effect, namely:—

Form 307a.
Limiting number of members

- (a) The number of members for the time being of the company (exclusive of persons who are for the time being in the employment of the company) is not to exceed fifty, but where two or more persons hold one or more shares in the company jointly, they shall, for the purposes of this paragraph, be treated as a single member.
- (b) Any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures or debenture stock of the company is hereby prohibited.
- (c) The right of transfer of shares shall be restricted as hereinafter provided.

The above clause is based on sect. 121 (1) of the Act of 1908. It is necessary to insert in paragraph (b) the words "or debenture stock" unless, indeed, the articles, like the Act of 1908, provide that the term "debenture" shall include debenture stock. Then the words of paragraph (a) follow the terms of sect. 121; but experience has shown that the presence of these words may be inconvenient, for, assuming the number of members to be fifty, plus some employees, and one of the employees ceases to be an employé without ceasing to be a member, the number of members would exceed the statutory maximum. It is, therefore, not uncommon to substitute the word "inclusive" for the word "exclusive," or to insert a clause enabling the directors to find a purchaser for the shares of an employé member who ceases to be employed.

Sometimes, where it is difficult to keep within the number fifty, several shareholders place their shares in their own names jointly on the trusts of a deed, and thus are to be treated as a single member. In such case it is desirable to alter the articles so as to enable each of the joint holders to vote in respect of his specified proportion of the joint holding as if he were the sole owner thereof.

All clauses in its articles inconsistent with the character of a private company must be omitted, e.g., 39 and 40 (supra, pp. 680, 681), as to share warrants, and the right of transfer of shares must be restricted.

Various sections of the Act which do not apply to private companies will become applicable if the company should determine to abandon its character as a private company. See sect. 121 (2), and for example, sects. 80, 82, which provide for the filing of a copy of any prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for shares, debentures, or debenture stock, or if no prospectus is issued, of a statement in lieu of prospectus; and sect. 81, which provides for a number of matters which must be set forth in any such prospectus; and sect. 85, which renders it necessary, in the event of a prospectus offering shares for subscription being issued, that the company shall not proceed to allotment unless the minimum subscription specified in the articles and prospectus, or, if none be so specified, then the whole amount of the share capital offered, is subscribed and the application money paid.

So long as the articles contain the prescribed provisions (sect. 121 of the Act), the company will continue to be a private company, although it does not act in conformity therewith, e.g., allows the number of members to exceed fifty. Park v. Royalties Syndicate. So held by King's Bench Division (Lord Alverstone, Hamilton and Bankes, JJ.), (1912) 107 T. 111.

The following clauses will afford some indication of the modifications of Form 251 which are commonly required in the case of private companies, even without reference to the Act of 1908.

Introductory Note.

Form 308.

Introductory note to.

Where an established business is converted into a private company the founders sometimes desire the insertion of a brief introductory note stating the circumstances under which the company is formed, e.g.—

"The business which the above-named coy is formed to take over was established by B. in the year 1870. On his death, in the year 1885, the business passed to his two sons, B. and C., and was carried on by them in partnership until the year 1895, when D. and E. were admitted to the partnership. Since then B., C., D. and E. have carried on the business, and, having regard to its present magnitude they have determined to convert it into a private coy. and these articles have been prepared with a view thereto."

Table A. is commonly excluded as unsuitable to a private company.

Allotment of Shares.

A private company is subject to sect. 88 of the Act of 1908, and accordingly whenever it makes any allotment of shares, it must, within one month thereafter, file with the Registrar of Companies proper returns, &c.

RESTRICTIONS ON ALLOTMENT OF SHARES.

Form 309.

Restriction on issue of shares.

1. The shares taken by the subscribers to the memorandum of association and those to be allotted pursuant to the preliminary agreement, shall be duly issued by the directors, but no further shares shall be issued without the authority of the company in general meeting.

2. Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the meeting that authorizes the issue of further shares, all further shares authorized to be issued shall be offered to the members in proportion to the existing shares held by them, and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of the shares to which the member is entitled and limiting a time within which the offer if not accepted will be deemed to be declined, and after the expiration of such time, or on the receipt of an intimation from the member to whom such notice is given that he declines to accept the shares offered, the directors may allot or otherwise dispose of the same to such persons and upon such terms as they think fit.

A clause as above, or like the following, is not uncommonly inserted, in order to give the existing members the option of taking up the shares. It will be seen that the above clause does, but the following does not, confine the option to a member's proportion. Sometimes the option is only given to the principal shareholders, e.g., those holding more than 500% capital. Not uncommonly the following clause is preferred:

After the issue of — shares in the coy's capital, any further issue of shares shall be made on such terms and conditions, and either at a premium or otherwise as shall be determined by extraordinary resolution, and, unless otherwise determined by extraordinary resolution, all further shares authorized to be issued must in the first instance be offered to all the existing members for the time being. Such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares authorized to be issued, and the terms of issue, and stating that the members are at liberty to tender for the same during a period to be specified in the notice, and not being less than seven days from the date thof. Each member shall be at liberty to make a tender in writing, delivered at the office within the period aforesaid, for such shares or any of them on the terms specified, and the directors shall allot the shares to the members who so tender; and in the event of more shares being tendered for than are authorized to be issued, the shares shall (as nearly as may be) be allotted to the tendering members in proportion to the capital already held by them resp'y. The directors shall decide by lot or otherwise any difficulty as to such allotment.

Form 310.

Another form

Classes of Shares.

Sometimes the capital of a private company is divided into several classes of shares. See forms, supra, pp. 820 et seq.; for cases in which preference shares may be desirable, see supra, p. 812.

Classes of shares.

Conversion of Shares into Stock, and Re-conversion into Shares.

These clauses are commonly omitted: in the case of a private company they are of little practical use.

Increase and Reduction of Capital.

See Form 252, cl. 33 et seq. Where the issue of shares is restricted, as in Forms 309, 310, supra, the new shares are usually made subject to the like restrictions.

Proceedings at General Meetings.

Sometimes it is provided that a poll may be demanded by any member, and that every poll shall be taken at the meeting without adjournment—which is quite practicable in the case of a private company—and occasionally that the chairman shall not have a casting vote.

Usually the quorum is small.

CLAUSE IN ARTICLES AS TO EXECUTION OF A DEED OF COVENANT BY MEMBERS.

Form 311.

Clause in articles as to deed of covenant to make certain clauses in articles
unalterable.

The subscribers hto shall forthwith execute an indenture, which has already been prepared, and is expressed to be made between the coy of the one pt, and the sd subscribers and the several other persons who shall hereafter sign their names and affix their seals thereto of the other pt, and no person shall at any time hereafter be registered as a member of the coy unless and until he shall have executed the sd indenture; and if at any time hereafter, by oversight or otherwise, any person shall be permitted to become a member before executing the sd indenture, such person shall be deemed to have agreed to execute such indenture forthwith, and unless he executes the same within seven days after he is registered as a member the coy shall be at liberty to authorize its secretary, or any other officer, to execute such indenture in the name and on behalf and as the attorney of such person, and execution by the person so authorized shall be effective for all purposes.

Sometimes it is desired to make certain arrangements between the shareholders which it is not necessary or expedient to set forth in the articles, e.g., options to purchase shares; restrictions on the power to alter articles without specified covenants. In such cases a deed of covenant may be desirable as above.

Transfer and Transmission.

A restriction on the right to transfer the shares is now an incident of a private company, as defined by sect. 121 (1) (a) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. The clause runs thus:—"For the purposes of this Act, the expression 'private company' means a company which by its articles (a) restricts the right to transfer its shares."

The restriction—to comply with the section—must be general: some shares must not be exempt from the restriction. It is sufficient for the purpose of the section to provide—in the terms of the common clause—that "the directors may refuse to register any transfer of shares," but usually the clause is supplemented.

In Borland's Trustee v. Steel Brothers & Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 279, it was held that provisions in a company's articles compelling a shareholder, at any time during the continuance of the company, to transfer his shares to particular persons at a particular price was not void, either as being repugnant to absolute ownership or as tending to a perpetuity. See p. 949, supra.

Form 312.

Restricted
transfer.

1. A share may be transferred by a member or other person entitled to transfer to any member selected by the transferor; but save as aforesaid, and save as provided by clause 6 or 8 *h*of, no share shall be transferred to a person who is not a member so long as any member [or any person selected by the directors as one whom it is desirable in the interests of the coy to admit to membership] is willing to purchase the same at the fair value.

Sometimes it is provided that these restrictive clauses shall not apply to certain shareholders, e.g., the founders of the concern, or to part only of the shares held by them, or only to a certain class of shares, e.g., those which are to be issued to the employés or the ordinary shares. In such cases the wording must be modified accordingly, e.g., "An ordinary share may be transferred, &c. to any member holding ordinary shares selected by the transferor," &c.

2. Except where the transfer is made pursuant to clause 6 or 8 Notice, the person proposing to transfer any shares (hnftr called the proposing transferor) shall give notice in writing (hnftr called the transfer notice) to the coy that he desires to transfer the same. Such notice shall specify the sum he fixes as the fair value, and shall constitute the coy his agent for the sale of the share to any member of the coy [or person selected as afsd] at the price so fixed, or, at the option of the purchaser, at the fair value to be fixed by the auditor in accordance with these articles. The transfer notice may include several shares and in such case shall operate as if it were a separate notice of each. The transfer notice shall not be revocable except with the sanction of the directors.

The words "proposing transferor" cover the shareholders and also executors and other persons taking by transmission and having power to transfer. Sometimes, instead of providing as above, it is provided that a member who desires to transfer to a stranger must send in the name and address of the proposed transferee, and that the directors may approve or disapprove; and, if they disapprove, the member may require them to find a purchaser, and if they do not within a given time he is to be free to transfer.

3. If the coy shall, within the space of twenty-eight days after being served with such notice, find a member [or person selected as afsd] willing to purchase the share (hnftr called the purchasing member), and shall give notice thof to the proposing transferor, he shall be bound, upon payment of the fair value, to transfer the share to the purchasing member. Company's power.

Sometimes it is desired to provide that the company itself shall purchase the share, but in the case of a company limited by shares this is not allowable. Treor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409. See supra, pp. 477, 478. Sometimes the foregoing provisions are modified, thus:-

"A person, whether a member of the company or not (hereinafter called the proposing transferor), who desires to transfer any share to a person who is not a member of the company must serve the company with notice in writing (hereinafter called the transfer notice) that he desires to make such transfer. The transfer notice must specify the name and address of the proposed transferee, and the sum at which the proposing transferor fixes the fair value of the shares, and within fourteen days after the service of such notice the directors shall give the proposing transferor notice of their approval or disapproval of the transfer, and if they approve, the proposed transfer may be forthwith carried out (subject only to clauses -- hereof). But if they disapprove, the transfer notice shall be deemed to constitute the company the agent of the proposing transferor for the sale of the share to any member of the company or person selected by the directors as aforesaid at the fair value, and such authority shall not be revocable and if the company shall, within the space of twenty-eight days," &c.

Auditor's certificate

1. In case any difference arises between the proposing transferor and the purchasing member as to the fair value of a share, the auditor shall, on the application of either party, certify in writing the sum which, in his opinion, is the fair value, and such sum shall be deemed to be the fair value, and in so certifying the auditor shall be considered to be acting as an expert, and not as an arbitrator; and accordingly the Arbitration Act, 1889, shall not apply.

Sometimes it is provided that "the fair value," or "the current transfer price," shall be a sum equal to the amount paid up on the share, or a sum to be fixed at the ordinary general meeting in each year, e.g.:

"At the ordinary general meeting in each year the company shall, by resolution, declare what is the fair value of a share, and upon any sale pursuant to clause -- hereof the amount so declared, with the addition thereto of five per cent. per annum from the date of the meeting to the date of the completion of such sale (less any dividend in the meantime paid), shall be deemed to be the fair value for the purpose of clause -- hereof."

Another form is to strike out of the above clause the words "the auditor," and all subsequent words, and to substitute for the same the words "the difference shall be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each of the parties in difference."

But there is this objection to such a form, that it commits the parties to an arbitration which may involve full discovery of all books and documents and not a little worry and inconvenience.

Sometimes the clauses are framed so that a member must offer at a price to be fixed by him, with a provision that, if the price is not agreed to, he shall not sell to any one at a lower price. If this is desired, alter clause 1 by substituting for "at the fair value" the words "at a price to be fixed as hereinafter provided"; and in clause 2 substitute "price he fixes" for "fair value", and in clause 3 "price so fixed" for "fair value," and omit clause 4; and in clause 6 1, the last four words substitute the words "but so that the price paid shall not be less than the price fixed by the retiring member in his notice to the company under clause 2 hereof. Before passing any transfer under this clause, the directors may require the transferor and transferee respectively to make declarations pursuant to the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835, that the consideration mentioned in the transfer is the true consideration paid by the transferee for the transfer of the share, and is not subject to any deduction or rebate. When the retiring member cannot find a purchaser at the price so fixed, he may give a fresh notice under clause 2 hereof."

For other alternative forms as to fair value, see Forms 313 and 313a, infra.

Default by proposing transferor.

5. If in any case the proposing transferor, after having become bound as aforesaid, makes default in transferring the share, the coy may receive the purchase-money, and shall thereupon cause the name of the purchasing member to be entered in the register as the holder of the share, and shall hold the purchase-money in trust for the proposing transferor. The receipt of the coy for the purchase-money shall be a good discharge to the purchasing member, and after his name has been entered in the register in purported exercise of the aforesaid power the validity of the proceedings shall not be questioned by any person.

Form 312.

6. If the coy shall not, within the space of twenty-eight days after being served with the transfer notice, find a member willing to purchase the shares, and give notice in manner aforesaid, the proposing transferor shall at any time within three calendar months afterwards be at liberty, subject to clause 9 hof, to sell and transfer the shares (or those not placed) to any person and at any price.

Default by company.

7. The coy in general meeting may make and from time to time vary rules as to the mode in which any shares specified in any transfer notice given to the coy pursuant to clause 2 hof shall be offered to the members, and as to their rights in regard to the purchase thof, and in particular may give any member or class of members a preferential right to purchase the same. Until otherwise determined, every such share shall be offered to the members in such order as shall be determined by lots drawn in regard thereto, and the lots shall be drawn in such manner as the directors think fit.

How shares to be offered to members.

Sometimes it is provided that the shares shall be offered (a) as in Form 321, or (b) to the shareholders successively, according to the number of shares held by them, or (c) to some particular shareholder, e.g., the founder, or (d) to the members whose names are entered in a register of applicants in rotation. See for example Forms 317, 318, infra.

8. Any share may be transferred by a member to any child or other issue, son-in-law, daughter-in-law, father, mother, brother, sister, nephew, niece, wife, or husband of member, and any share of a deceased member may be transferred by his executors or administrators to any child, or other issue, son-in-law, daughter-in-law, father, mother, brother, sister, nephew, niece, widow, or widower of such deceased member [to whom such deceased member may have specifically bequeathed the same], and shares standing in the name of the trees of the will of any deceased member may be transferred upon any change of trees to the trees for the time being of such will and the restrictions in clause 1 hof shall not apply to any transfer authorized by this clause.

Right to transfer to son, &c.

Sometimes power is also given to transfer, with the approval of the board, to the trustees of any settlement made by a member, or to any person who has been appointed or elected a director.

9. The directors may refuse to register any transfer of a share, (a) where the coy has a lien on the share; or (b) where the directors are not of an opinion that it is desirable to admit the proposed trans-

Sometimes the words in brackets are inserted so as to exclude small share holders from the benefit of the exception. But in such cases clause 1 will require modification.

Form 313. The fair value asfd shall be ascertained as follows:

Fair value of ordinary shares to be declared by general
meetings.

- (a) The coy in general meeting may from time to time, by resolution passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths in value of the holders of ordinary shares, declare the fair value of ordinary shares to be thereafter dealt with in accordance with clause 31 hof.
- (b) Such resolution shall remain in force until the expiration of one year after the passing thof, or for such less period as shall be specified therein, or until by simple resolution of a general meeting it shall be annulled.
- (c) If at the time when a transfer notice is given as asfd, any such resolution fixing the fair value is in force, the fair value fixed thereby shall be deemed to be the fair value of the shares comprised in such transfer notice.
- (d) If at the time when a transfer notice is given as asfd, no such resolution is in force, it shall rest with the proposing transferor and the purchasing member to fix by agreement the fair value of the shares comprised in the transfer notice, and any difference in regard thereto shall be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each of the parties in difference, and the Arbitration Act, 1889 shall apply.

See clause 4 of Form 312, supra, p. 964, and notes thereon.

Form 313a. The following is another form:

Fair value of share estimated by reference to amount paid up and to past dividends.

For the purposes of these clauses the fair value of a share shall be the amount for the time being pd up thereon plus a premium (if any), regulated as follows:—I.e., if the dividend and bonus for the financial year immediately preceding shall not exceed $7\frac{1}{2}$ p.c.p.a., the shares shall be offered at the amount for the time being pd up thereon; if such dividend and bonus shall exceed $7\frac{1}{2}$ p.c.p.a., but not exceed 10 p.c.p.a., the premium shall be 10 p.c. on the amount pd up, and if such dividend and bonus shall exceed 10 p.c.p.a., but not exceed 15 p.c.p.a., a premium of 20 p.c. on the amount pd up, and if such dividend and bonus shall exceed 15 p.c.p.a., &c., &c.

See clause 4 of Form 312, supra, and notes thereon

All shares comprised in a transfer notice shall, unless the directors think fit to offer them to any person selected as aforesaid, be first offered by the company to the directors themselves, and so that in case of any difference between them as to the disposal or distribution of a share or shares, the mode of disposal or distribution shall be determined by lot, and any shares not taken by the directors, or some or one of them, shall then be offered to the other members in such order as shall be determined by lot. And in each case the person to whom the offer is made (whether a director or not) shall have the option of buying at the price fixed in the transfer notice, or, at his option, at the fair value, to be fixed by the auditors as aforesaid, such option to be declared in accepting the offer. Where the shares comprised in a transfer notice stand in the name of a deceased member, the directors shall have three calendar months from the service of the transfer notice within which to determine whether they will themselves purchase them or not.

Sometimes provision is made for placing the shares with the highest bidders. Thus:—

"Where the company is served with a transfer notice as aforesaid, the company shall forthwith give notice thereof to all the members (other than the party giving the transfer notice), and the notice shall specify the price fixed by the intending transferor, and each member shall be at liberty, within fourteen days from the time such notice is served on him, to deliver to the company an offer in writing bidding for all or some of the shares comprised in the transfer notice, and agreeing to take, at the price he bids, the whole or any of the shares he bids for; and as between those who so bid the highest bidders shall be selected as purchasers in the order in which their bids stand as regards magnitude; and as between those who bid the same figure the selection shall be determined by lots, which shall be drawn in such manner as the directors determine. Nevertheless, if the selected bidders include any who bid less than the price specified in the transfer notice, the company shall call on the auditor to certify what sum is, in his opinion, the fair value per share, and shall notify the same to such last-mentioned bidders, and unless they forthwith bid such price, their bids shall be disregarded."

See note to clause 7 of Form 312, p. 965, and next form.

Shares comprised in any transfer notice shall be dealt with as follows:— Form 315.

- (a) Where the transfer notice is given in respect of shares standing in the name of the sd A., the shares comprised therein shall in the first place be offered to the sd B.
- (b) Where the transfer notice is given in respect of shares standing in the name of the sd B., the shares comprised therein shall in the first place be offered to the sd A.
- (c) In every other case the shares comprised in any transfer notice shall be offered in the first instance to the directors, and if and so far as the same shall not be accepted by the directors, or some or one of them, such shares or those not accepted shall be offered to the other members in such order as shall be determined by lots drawn in regard thereto, and the lots shall be drawn in such manner as the directors think fit.

- (d) Shares offered to the directors as aforesaid shall be offered to them collectively and individually, but so that in case of competition they shall rank pari passu for acceptance, and any difference shall be settled by lot.

See last form and notes, and also clause 7 and note thereto of Form 312, supra, p. 965.

Form 316.

The following is another form:—

Another form.

"Until otherwise determined, every such share shall be offered in the first place to the sd A., and any not accepted by him shall then be offered to the sd B., and any not accepted by him shall be offered to the other members in such order as shall be determined by lots drawn in regard thereto under the supervision of the governing directors."

Form 317.

Preferential offer of shares to larger holders and then to other holders.

Until otherwise determined by extraordinary resolution of the coy, the shares comprised in any transfer notice shall be offered in the first place to the principal shareholders (which expression in this clause means and includes those members who resply hold at least 10 p.c. of the issued capital), and such offer shall be made to them collectively and individually, but so that in case of competition they shall rank for acceptance pari passu in proportion to the shares held by them, and so that if any shares cannot be so apportioned, such shares shall be offered to them in order determined by lot, and the directors shall cause lots to be drawn accordingly, and any shares not taken up by the ppal shareholders as aforesaid shall be offered to the other members in such order as shall, &c

See also clause 7, and note thereto, of Form 312, supra, p. 965. and also Forms 314, 315 and 316, supra.

Form 318.

How shares to be offered.

The shares specified in any transfer notice given to the coy as aforesaid shall be offered by the coy in the first place to the members, other than the proposing transferor, as nearly as may be in proportion to the existing shares held by them resply, and the offer shall in each case limit the time within which the same, if not accepted, will be deemed to be declined, and may notify to the members that any member who desires an allotment of shares in excess of his proportion should in his reply state how many excess shares he desires to have; and if all the members do not claim their proportions the unclaimed shares shall be used for satisfying the claims in excess. If any shares shall not be capable, without fractions, of being offered to the members in proportion to their existing holdings, the same shall be offered to the members, or some of them, in such proportions or in such manner as may be determined by lots to be drawn under the direction of the directors.

Form 318.

Any shares in the coy may be transferred by the holders thereof to any privileged connections of such holder or to trees upon trust for the benefit exclusively or otherwise of any privileged connections of such holder, and any shares standing in the name of a deed member may be transferred by his legal personal representatives to any privileged connections of the deed or to any trees upon trust for the benefit exclusively or otherwise of any privileged connections of the deed, and any shares standing in the names of the trees for the time being of the will of a deed member may be transferred upon any change of trees to the trees for the time being of such will, whether they be members of the coy or not, and para. (1) c' of this clause shall not apply to any such transfer or to a transfer by any director to any employe of the coy approved by the directors. In this clause the expression "privileged connection," when used in relation to any member or deceased member, means any ancestor, issue, son-in-law, daughter-in-law, brother, sister, half-brother, half-sister, step-brother, step-sister, brother-in-law, sister-in-law, wife or husband, widow or widower.

Special
transfer clauses.

Sometimes certain shares are transferable only to the descendants and connections of A. B., and the rest to the descendants and connections of C. D.

Transmission.

The transmission clauses are usually framed as above (p. 677), and, where the right of transfer to strangers is restricted, as in Form 312, the executors and others claiming by transmission will be bound thereby. See Borland's Trustee v. Steel Bros. & Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 279, 290. Sometimes it is desired, in the event of death, to provide for paying out part of the capital of the deceased. This cannot be effectually provided for in the case of a limited company, since it would amount to a reduction of capital. To meet this difficulty it is not uncommon, where a business is converted into a company, to provide that the vendors shall take part of the consideration in debentures, which can, if desired, be framed so that the interest shall only be payable out of profits (see Part III.), and so that the principal shall not be called in till the death of the person to whom they are issued.

As regards lunacy, see supra, p. 667.

As regards marriage, it is sometimes provided that on the marriage of a female shareholder the company may compel the transfer of her shares to its nominee at the fair value.

trators to notice.

The directors may call on the executors or administrators of a deceased member to transfer the shares of the deceased to some person to be selected by such executors and administrators and approved by the directors, and if the executors or administrators do not comply forthwith with such call they shall be deemed to have served the company with a transfer notice, under paragraph 3 of Art. 17, and to have specified therein a sum equal to the amount paid up on the shares as the fair value, and the subsequent provisions of that clause shall take effect.

Compulsory Retirement.

Provisions for compulsory retirement are becoming very common. Such a power is convenient, for example, where a member ceases to be employed by the company or becomes interested in some rival concern. And it is frequently deemed desirable to enable a large majority of the shareholders (e.g. ten tenths in value) to exercise the power without assigning any reason. Such a power seems peculiarly desirable where the great mass of the capital is likely to be vested in a few persons.

Suppose, for example, that a shareholder who has been brought into a company merely to keep the number up to seven, or because he appeared to be a deserving employé, is found to be objectionable, he cannot, in the absence of such a power, be got rid of against his will except by winding up the company.

The power is commonly vested in the directors, see Form 320 et seq.

Sometimes, however, the power is vested in the original owner of the company's business and his executors, so long as a specified number of shares stand in his name, and is so framed that he or they may take the shares at a fair value or at a specified price, e.g., par.

Retirement
employé.

Whenever any member of the company holding less than ——— shares, who is employed by the company in any capacity, is dismissed from such employment for breach of faith, misconduct, or other offence which the directors [deem prejudicial to the interests of the company, they] may at any time within ——— days after his dismissal, resolve that such member do retire, and thereupon he shall be deemed to have served the company with a transfer notice pursuant to clause ——— of Art. 17, and to have specified therein the amount paid up on his shares as the fair value. Notice of the passing of any such resolution shall be given to the member affected thereby.

The transfer notice is intended to be a notice to the company in accordance with para. 2 of Form 312, supra, p. 963.

Form 321.

Another.

Whenever any holder of any U shares ceases to be employed by the company, the directors may at any time within ——— days afterwards resolve that, &c. See last preceding form.

Sometimes the power is not confined, as in Form 320, to dismissal, but is framed as above, or is exercisable only as regards a particular class of shares. Occasionally the holder is given a limited time to retire, and only in default of his doing so is deemed to have given the notice.

No member of this coy shall, without the consent in writing of all the members for the time being of this coy, be interested as a shareholder, partner, director, manager, lender, or otherwise, in any concern carrying on any business in competition with the coy, or having interests opposed to those of this coy; and if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the directors that any member has committed a breach of this clause, they may serve him with notice in writing requiring him to retire from or otherwise determine his interest in such concern, and stating that, in the event of non-compliance with such requisition within twenty-eight days, his shares will be liable to forfeiture, and unless within twenty-eight days after the service of such notice it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the directors that the requisitions that have been complied with, the whole or any of the shares of such member may be forfeited by resolution of the directors to that effect. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any member from holding stock or shares in a railway or canal coy.

Form 322.

Forfeiture where member interested in competing concern.

In a private company a clause as above is not usual. Sometimes it is confined to directors, and occasionally provision is made for notice before forfeiture. Sometimes provision for liquidated damages for breach is inserted.

1 The majority of the directors may at any time serve the coy with a requisition to enforce the transfer of any particular shares not held by the requisitionists, and when a member dies the majority of the directors may serve the coy with a requisition to enforce the transfer of the shares of the deceased.

Form 323.

Another variation of last form.

2 The coy shall forthwith give to the holder of such shares, or where the holder is dead, to his exors or admors, notice in writing of the requisition (with a copy of this clause subjoined), and unless within fourteen days afterwards the holder, or, as the case may be, the exors or admors, shall give to the coy a transfer notice in respect of the said shares, in accordance with paragraph (2) of clause — hereof, such holder, or such exors or admors, as the case may be, shall be deemed, at the expiration of that period, to have given to the company such a transfer notice, and to have specified therein the amount of the capital paid up on the shares as the sum he fixes as the fair value thereof, and the subsequent proceedings may be taken on that footing. For the purposes of this clause any person entitled under this transmission clause to transfer shall be deemed to be the holder.

See p. 967.

The holders for the time being of nine-tenths of the issued capital may at any time serve the coy with a requisition to enforce the transfer of any particular shares not held by the requisitionists. The coy shall forthwith give to the holder of such shares notice in writing

Form 324. of the requisition (with a copy of this clause subjoined), and unless within fourteen days afterwards the holder shall give to the coo a transfer notice in respect of his shares in accordance with clause hof, he shall be deemed, at the expiration of that period, to have actually given such notice, and to have specified therein the amount of capital pd up on the shares as the sum he fixes as the fair value. For the purposes of this clause any person entd under the transmiss-ion clause to transfer shall be deemed the holder of such share.

Form 325. Another. A member who holds less than 50% nominal of the capital shall be bound, upon the request in writing of the holders or holder of nine-tenths of the issued shares, to sell and transfer his shares to the nominee of such holders or holder in conson of the payment of a s equal to the capital pd up on his sd shares, and the sale shall be carried into effect at the coo's office on a day appointed by the part or parties making such request, and if the member makes default the coo may receive the amount on his behalf and may authorize some director of the coo, on his behalf, to transfer the shares to such nominee, and such transfer shall be effective.

Form 326. 1. The founder or the founder's directors shall have the option, to be exercised at any time, by notice in writing to the coo (here called the optional notice), of purchasing, at the fair value, the whole of the outstanding shares in the coo's capital not held by the persons exercising such option, provided that the persons who give the optional notice at the time of giving the same are entd, as the registered holders thof, to more than one-half of the issued capital.

Option in founder or his directors to purchase outstanding shares.

Fair value, how estimated.

2. The fair value afd shall, for the purposes of this clause, be deemed to be the capital pd up on the shares to be purchased respd with a bonus equal to 10% p.c.p.a. since the last preceding dividend thereon was declared, and with interest at the rate of 5% p.c.p.a. on such capital and bonus as from the giving of the optional notice to the payment of such fair value.

Notice to owners of shares.

3. Notice of the giving of the optional notice shall be given by the coo to the respive owners of the shares there referred to, and such owner shall, as from the giving of the optional notice, be deemed to have agreed to sell, and the persons who gave the optional notice shall be deemed to have agreed to purchase, the shares of such member at the fair value.

Sale, how effected.

4. Every such sale shall be carried into effect: the owner of the shares in each case shall transfer the same to the nominees of the persons giving the optional notice, who shall upon pay the fair value ascertained as afd; and if the owner makes default, &c. [Form 325.]

The following provisions shall have effect:

Form 327

- (a) In the event of the death of A or B, any of the subscribers hereto, or either of them, the said C shall have the option of purchasing the shares of the deceased and no transfer of such shares shall be registered until such option has been exercised or waived.

Option in favour of surviving partner to purchase shares of deceased partner.

- (b) The executors or administrators of the deceased must give notice to the said C, if their names be obtained probate of the will or letters of administration of the estate of the deceased, within twenty-eight days after such notice C shall, and at any time within three calendar months after such probate or administration is obtained he may, notify to such executors or administrators his willingness to exercise the said option, or that he waives the option, and in default of any such notification he shall be deemed to waive the option.

- (c) If the said C notifies his willingness to exercise the option, the executors or administrators of the deceased shall sell, and the said C shall purchase, the shares of the deceased at the value to be ascertained as hereinafter provided.

The value to be ascertained shall be the value of the shares as appearing in the last annual balance-sheet of the company, or if the death occurs before any balance-sheet, then the par value, with interest in lieu of dividends at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a.

- (d) The purchase shall be completed at such time and place as the said C shall direct, the executors or administrators, who shall thereupon transfer the shares of the deceased, and upon such transfer being made the said C shall pay the value ascertained.

If the executors or administrators make default in transferring the shares, the company may remove the name of the deceased from the register, and insert the name of the said C as the holder of the shares, and the validity of the proceedings shall not be questioned.

As regards all the ordinary shares specified in the schedule hereto of the persons who shall be the respective holders thereof on the day of — shall be entitled to continue to hold the said shares then held by him until he shall die, or shall voluntarily transfer the same in accordance with the provisions of these presents, or shall become bankrupt.

Compulsory retirement in case of bankruptcy.

A clause (Art. 47) to the above effect was introduced by the Companies Act, 1900 in Borland's Trustee v. Steel Bros. & Co. (1901) 1 Ch. 279, in conjunction with other clauses providing for compulsory retirement. A shareholder having become bankrupt, the company, in accordance with the articles, served his trustee in bankruptcy with notice requiring him to give a transfer notice, and that in default he would be deemed to have given a transfer notice and stated the price fixed by the articles. The value of the shares as fixed by the transfer notice was considerably less than the actual value of the shares, and it was contended that the articles were a fraud on the bankruptcy law, but Farwell, J., held that that was not so. At p. 291 he said: "If I once arrive at the conclusion that these provisions were inserted bona fide—and that is not disputed—and if I also come to the conclusion that they constitute a fair agreement for the purpose of the business of the company, and are binding equally upon all persons who come in, so that there is no suggestion of fraudulent preference of one over another, there is nothing obnoxious to the bankruptcy law in a clause which provides that if a man becomes bankrupt he shall sell his shares." "Then the question of price arises. Now I find the price is a fixed sum for all persons alike. No difference in price arises in case of bankruptcy: the effect of bankruptcy is merely to except the bankrupt from the privileges of Art. 47. . . . If I came to the conclusion that there was any provision in these articles compelling persons to sell their shares in the event of bankruptcy at something less than the price that they would otherwise obtain, such a provision would be repugnant to the bankruptcy law; but it is not so. They all stand on the same footing, and the proper value is to be ascertainable for all alike."

Form 328.

Form 329.

The following provisions shall have effect:—

On death survivors to buy ordinary shares of deceased.

- (a) In the event of the death before January 1, 1930, of any member holding ordinary shares, such shares shall be purchased and taken at their fair value by the members holding ordinary shares at the time of such death in proportion between them as nearly as may be to the amount of the capital paid up on the ordinary shares held by them respectively, and contracts for sale and purchase on the footing of this clause shall be deemed to have been made accordingly immediately before the death of the deceased and the members who are to purchase as aforesaid.
- (b) The fair value of any particular ordinary shares shall for the purposes of this clause be deemed to be a sum bearing the same ratio to the aggregate fair value of all the ordinary shares for the time being issued and outstanding as the capital paid up on such particular ordinary shares shall bear to the aggregate capital paid up on such outstanding ordinary shares.
- (c) The aggregate fair value of all the outstanding ordinary shares aforesaid at any particular time shall for the purposes of this clause be the balance ascertained by means of an account on the credit side of which shall be entered (a) a sum equal to the value of the company's assets (exclusive of goodwill) as shown in the books of the company as on December 31 next preceding the day of the death, and (b) a sum for goodwill equal to five-sixths of the amount of the profits of the whole business of the company for the three years ending with such December 31 after deducting from such profits in respect of each year a sum equivalent to interest at the rate of 5*l.* p.c.p.a. on the amount of the capital for the time being pd up on the preference shares in the coy's capital. And on the debit side of which account shall be entered (a) a sum equal to the amount of the coy's debts and liabilities as shown in the ad books as on such December 31, and (b) a sum equal to the capital pd up on all the coy's issued preference shares.

Form 329.

- d) The certificate of the auditor of the coy as to the fair value of any such ordinary shares and as to such value having been estimated pursuant to the foregoing provisions shall be conclusive.
- (e) Where any member dies before 1st January, 1930, entitl to any ordinary shares, the directors shall forthwith give notice of the death to the members holding ordinary shares, and the notices shall specify the proportions in which they have to purchase such ordinary shares, and notices shall at the same time be given to the legal personal representatives (if any) of the deceased specifying the names and addresses of the purchasers and the proportions in which they are to purchase.
- f) The purchase-money of any ordinary shares to be purchased under this clause shall be the amount of the fair value thof ascertained as aforesaid, less the amount of any lien or charge for the time being subsisting thereon, and shall, unless the parties concerned otherwise determine, be payable by twenty equal half-yearly instalments, the first of which shall be pd at the expiration of six months from the date of the death of the deceased member, together with interest on the amount for the time being unpaid at the rate of 5*l.* p.c.p.a. from such death. And when and so soon as the purchase-money afovd or the first instalment thof shall have been pd, together with interest as afovd, the legal personal representatives of the deceased shall forthwith, upon the request of the purchasers, transfer the shares to the purchasers resply, and in default the coy may register the purchasers as the holders of the shares, and their legal title thereto shall thereby be completed, but subject to the proviso next hnftr contained and to the subsequent paragraphs of this present clause. Provided always, that if while any of such instalments shall remain unpaid the undertaking of the coy shall be sold, the unpaid instalments, together with interest up to the time of actual payment thof, shall immediately, upon the owner of the ordinary shares so purchased becoming entitled to payment of his share of the surplus assets of the company in the winding up thereof, be paid by the company or its liquidators or directors (as the case may require) forthwith out of such share of assets to the executors or administrators of the deceased member, and so far as such share shall be insufficient such owner shall forthwith make up the amount of such insufficiency.

- (g) So long as any instalment or interest is unpaid, the company, its liquidators or directors (as the case may require), shall be entitled to and shall receive and hold the certificate or certificates of title to the ordinary shares on behalf of all parties interested therein until the completion of the purchase of such shares, when the same shall be cancelled and (except in the case of the company being in liquidation) a new certificate or certificates in respect of such shares shall be issued to the owner of such shares.
- (h) For securing the payment of such instalments and interest and (in the case of any ordinary shares not having been fully paid up to the company) for indemnifying the estate of such deceased member, the purchaser of any such shares shall give to the executors or administrators of such deceased member his bond in a penalty of double the aggregate amounts of such instalments and sums (if any) remaining unpaid on any of such shares.
- (i) The executors or administrators of such deceased member shall also, in addition to the fair value of his said ordinary shares sold as aforesaid, be entitled to a share of the dividend (if any) on such shares for the current year ending on the December 31 next preceding the day of his death to and inclusive of the day of his death, but any interim dividends paid to such deceased member in such year in respect of such shares shall be deducted by the company from the share of dividend payable under this paragraph. Provided, however, that if such death shall occur in the year 1910, the date of the incorporation of the company shall be deemed substituted for the said last day of December for the purposes of this paragraph.
- (j) Provided always, that if the company shall be insolvent at the date of the death of any member holding ordinary shares, the obligation to purchase such shares imposed by sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph (a) of this present clause shall not apply to such ordinary shares.

Lien on Shares.

It is usual to provide that a private company shall have a lien on the shares of each member for all moneys due from him, and that if he makes default in paying the same, after due notice, the shares may be sold, and the proceeds applied in satisfying the lien, and the balance paid to him. See p. 662. Where a private company has trade dealings with its members in their own business, such a lien presents obvious advantages for securing payment of indebtedness to the company. Form 329.

Forfeiture of Shares.

The forfeiture clauses are important for the purpose of enforcing the payment of calls. When a call made on a member is not duly paid, the directors can bring an action in the name of the company for the amount, but this privilege is one which involves expense, risk and delay. Instead, therefore, of doing this, the directors give notice to the member that if he does not pay the amount due his share will be forfeited. This generally secures the payment of the amount and prevents litigation, but in pursuing this remedy directors must be very careful to strictly observe the provisions of the articles as to notice, &c., the law regarding forfeiture with disfavour. See p. 658. Sometimes, however, in a private company forfeiture clauses are not inserted, or, if inserted, they are made not to apply to shares held by the original owner or owners of the business.

Restrictions on Members.

A member of the coy shall not [without the coy's consent] either solely or jointly with, or as manager or agent for, any other person, directly or indirectly carry on or be engaged or concerned or interested as a shareholder or otherwise in any business which the coy is authorized to carry on, and the directors may by resolution forfeit the shares of any member who acts in contravention of this provision, and clause 30 [see supra, p. 665] shall apply. Form 330.

Forfeiture where interested in rival concern.

A person who ceases to be a member of the coy shall not at any time within five years, to be computed from the time when he so ceases to be a member, either solely, &c. [Form 31, cl. 12], in the business of a — within 100 miles of the city of —. Form 331.

Retiring member not to compete.

Provisions as above are very common. Sometimes they are restricted to the persons who have held a particular class of shares intended for employés.

As to the effect of winding-up in such an agreement, see Measures Brothers, Lim. v. Measures, (1910) 2 Ch. 248.

The holders for the time being of two-thirds of the issued shares may at any time, and from time to time, as and when they think fit, to all or any of the following things, that is to say:— Form 332.

- (1) They may, by notice in writing to the coy, appoint any persons to be directors of the coy.
- (2) They may, by notice in writing to the coy, remove any director of the coy from office.

- (3) They may, by notice in writing served on the coy, fix the remuneration of the directors, or any particular director or directors.
- (4) They may at any time convene a general meeting of the coy.
- (5) They may, by notice in writing to the coy, make any regulations in regard to the conduct of the business of the coy, or directors thereof, and in like manner may vary and annul any such regulations.
- (6) They may, by notice in writing to the coy, make any regulations declaring who shall be entitled to sign, on the coy's behalf, cheques, bills, notes, acceptances and indorsements, and for what purposes and in what cases, and may in like manner annul and vary such regulations, and no signature to any such document shall be binding on the coy unless it is in accordance with such regulations for the time being in force, and filed with the Registrar of Companies.
- (7) Whatsoever is done under this clause shall have full effect, save that as regards any notice under paragraphs 5 and 6 of this clause it shall not have full effect until it is filed with the Registrar of Companies.
- (8) A notice in writing under this clause may be signed by the person giving the same, or any attorney or other agent of such person authorized in writing to give the same, or generally or specially.

The above may be found useful where Table A. is not adopted (in its entirety at least), and short articles are desired; but only in the case of a company with a small number of members, who are usually within easy personal reach of each other.

Conversion of Ordinary into Preference Shares and vice versa.

Form 333.

Conversion of ordinary into preference shares and vice versa.

1. When any member of the coy who has been actively engaged in the management of the affairs of the coy, whether as a director, assistant director, or otherwise, ceases by reason of resignation, removal, incapacity, or otherwise, to be so engaged, the directors may at any time within six months after such cesser by resolution convert all or any of the ordinary shares held by such member at the time of such cesser into preference shares carrying as from the date of conversion a cumulative dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital paid up thereon, and ranking for dividend pari passu with the preference shares from time to time created under clause 10 hereof, and such resolution shall have effect, and where any member holding ordinary shares dies, such ordinary shares shall ipso facto be converted into like preference shares. But the shares so converted shall be treated as carrying dividend as ordinary shares up to the time of conversion, and, accordingly, the member, or the executors or administrators of the deceased member, shall be entitled as and when the profits of the current year shall have been ascertained and the rate of dividend on the ordinary shares for the year determined to such an amount of such profits as shall represent the dividend on the shares so converted calculated at the rate aforesaid up to the time of conversion less any interim dividend paid before conversion.

2. Where the shares of any member have been so converted during his life, and afterwards such member again becomes actively engaged in the management of the affairs of the company as a director, assistant director, or otherwise, the directors may at any time by resolution passed at his request reconvert any such preference shares for the time being held by him into ordinary shares, and such resolution shall have effect.

2a. Where any member of the company, being actually engaged in the management of the affairs of the company, or being employed in any capacity in the business of the company, is the owner of any preference shares in the company, the directors may at any time by resolution passed at a board meeting duly convened convert all or any of the preference shares into ordinary shares, and such resolution shall have effect.

3. A resolution under this clause shall not be effective unless a majority of the directors for the time being in the United Kingdom concur therein.

4. Where any such resolution for conversion or reconversion is passed, notice thereof shall forthwith be given to the holder or owner of the shares, and he shall thereupon deliver up to the company the certificate relating to the shares so converted or reconverted, and the directors shall alter the register of members of the company, and issue to him a new certificate duly framed.

The above form was drafted for a case in which it was desired that the general profits should go to the active workers, and that the other members should take a fixed preferential dividend. Several other important concerns have adopted a similar form.

Annual Summaries.

A private company is subject to the provisions of sect. 26 of the Act of 1908 (consolidating sects. 26 and 27 of Companies Act, 1862, and sect. 19 of Companies Act, 1900). The summary and list must be so framed as to distinguish between the shares issued for cash and the shares issued otherwise than for cash, or only partly for cash, and must, in addition to the particulars required by that section, also specify

- (a) The total amount of debt due from the company in respect of all mortgages and charges which require registration under the Act, or which would require such registration if created after the commencement of this Act; and
- (b) The names and addresses of the persons who are the directors of the company at the date of the summary.

See pp. 624, 762, 763, supra, and for form, pp. 622, 623, supra

Borrowing.

A private company is subject to the provisions contained in sect. 93 of the Act of 1908, which provides that every mortgage or charge created by a company registered in England or Ireland after the 1st July, 1908, and being either—

- (a) A mortgage or charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures; or
 - (b) A mortgage or charge on uncalled share capital of the company; or
 - (c) A mortgage or charge created or evidenced by an instrument which, if executed by an individual, would require registration as a bill of sale; or
 - (d) A mortgage or charge on any land, wherever situate, or any interest therein; or
 - (e) A mortgage or charge on any book debts of the company; or
 - (f) A floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company;
- shall, so far as any security on the company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company unless duly registered as required by sect. 93 of the Act. See pp. 616-618, supra.

Requisition for General Meeting.

A private company is subject to the provisions of sect. 68 of the Act of 1908 which in effect provides that, notwithstanding anything in any regulations of a company, the directors of a company shall, on the requisition of the holders of not less than one-tenth of the issued share capital of a company upon which all calls and other sums then due have been paid, forthwith proceed to convene an extraordinary general meeting, and in default enables the requisitionists to call the meeting. See p. 690, supra.

Votes of Members.

Form 334.

Restrictions on preference
shares.

A member holding less than 1,000*l.* of ordinary shares shall not be entitled to vote, and the preference shares shall only confer on the holders the right to vote at a general meeting upon some or one of the questions following (that is to say), as to reduction of capital, as to winding up the coy, as to sanctioning a sale of the undertaking, or as to altering the regulations of the coy so as to affect directly the rights of the preference shareholders, but subject as aforesaid the following provisions shall have effect (that is to say):

1. Upon a show of hands every holding of at least 1,000*l.* of ordinary shares shall confer on the holder the right to one vote.
2. Upon a poll every holding of at least 1,000*l.* of ordinary shares shall confer on the holder the right to one vote for every 1,000*l.* of ordinary shares held by him.
3. Upon a show of hands as regards any question on which the preference shareholders are entitled to vote, every holding of at least 1,000*l.* of preference shares shall confer on the holder the right to one vote.

- 4 Upon a poll as regards any question on which the preference shareholders are entld to vote, the preference shares shall collectively confer on the holders the right to as many votes as shall be equal to the number of votes at a poll conferred by all the other issued shares on the holders thof, and each holding of preference shares shall confer the right to a rateable proportion of the votes thus collectively conferred. Form 334.

(a) A proxy may be appointed generally to vote for and on behalf of the appointor, as in the form in clause 97 hof indicated, and in such case the proxy shall not be entld to vote on any question if the appointor attends and votes thereon. Form 335.

Power to give irrevocable proxies in respect of particular shares.

(b) But a member or other person entld to vote may appoint a proxy to vote for and on behalf of the appointor in respect of any specified shares, and may by the instrument declare the appointment irrevocable or irrevocable for any specified period, and such declaration shall be effective save only that if the appointor, by transfer, death, or otherwise, loses his right to vote in respect of the shares specified therein, the appointment shall thereupon become null.

(c) And where a proxy is irrevocably appointed as aforesaid to vote for and on behalf of the appointor in respect of shares specified in the instrument of appointment, the proxy shall, whilst the appointment remains irrevocable, be exclusively entld to vote in respect of such shares even though the appointor be present, and whether the appointor does or does not vote on the question in respect of any other shares.

(d) Any such appointment as aforesaid, whether revocable or irrevocable, may be made in favour of one person or of several persons in the alternative, as in the form set forth in clause 97 hof.

Directors.

Companies are, as a rule, managed by directors. They can only act by agents; and where a business is converted into a private company the most natural persons, by reason of their interest, to fill the office, as well as the most competent, are generally the original owners of the business, and accordingly the articles of a private company commonly provide that some or one of such owners shall be the directors. The terms of their tenure of office vary. Sometimes it is provided that the owner or owners shall be entitled to hold office, for instance, for so many years, or for life, provided he or they continue to hold a certain number of shares; sometimes an owner is empowered at any time, and from time to time, to act, so long and whenever he chooses, as sole director, and at his discretion to appoint and remove other directors. Occasionally an owner is empowered to authorise his executors or trustees, whilst holding a certain number of shares, to appoint directors, and to define and restrict their powers and give them their share qualification. Where the owner or owners hold office on special terms like the above, with other directors appointed by themselves or otherwise, they are generally described, by way of distinction, in the articles as "the governing directors," or "the permanent directors," or "the life directors," whilst the other directors are called "the ordinary directors." A "governing," "permanent," or "life" director, as his title implies, retains his place on the board, but with respect to the "ordinary" directors provision is generally made for some or one of them retiring—by rotation—each year. The vacancies so created the company in general meeting is authorized to fill up, the retiring directors being made eligible for re-election. The practical effect of this is that the choice rests with the larger shareholders, who control the company by their voting power. In the case of single-ship companies (supra, p. 558), the original owners, or some of them, or some firm in which they are interested, are usually appointed managers upon special terms, and subject to the control of the company in general meeting. Where this is done the articles generally provide that the company may at any time appoint directors, and determine their rotation, qualification, remuneration, &c., but directors are often found unnecessary. So in the case of a syndicate it is not uncommon to have a manager or managers instead of directors.

Of course, the articles need not contain any qualification clause in the case of a private company. Moreover, in nearly all private companies the directors hold the bulk of the shares.

If there is a qualification clause in the articles, the director must qualify within the time specified in the articles, not being more than two months after appointment, or if no time is specified then within the two months; otherwise at the end of the period he will vacate office, and if any unqualified person acts as a director after the period he will have to pay the company 5*l.* for every day between the expiration of the period for qualifying and the last day on which it is proved that he acted as a director during which he so acts. See sect. 73 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908; and pp. 718 et seq., supra.

A private company must also comply with sect. 75 of the Act of 1908, and accordingly must keep at its registered office a register containing the names and addresses and occupations of its directors or managers, and must send to the Registrar of Companies a copy of such register, and must from time to time notify to him any change that takes place in such directors or managers, and in default penalties are imposed on the company and every director and manager who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default.

Governing Director.Form 336.

(Governing director.

The following provisions shall have effect:—

- (1) The ad A. B. shall be the governing director of the coy until he resigns the office, or dies, or ceases to hold at least 20,000*l.* of the shares to be allotted to him pursuant to the agreement in clause 3 hof, and whilst he retains the ad office he shall have authority to exercise all the powers, authorities and discretions by these presents expressed to be vested in the directors generally, and all the other directors, if any, for the time being of the coy, shall be under his control, and shall be bound to conform to his directions in regard to the coy's business.
- (2) The ad A. B., whilst he holds the office of governing director, may from time to time, and at any time, appoint any other persons to be directors of the coy, and may define, limit, and restrict their powers, and may fix and determine their remuneration and duties, and may at any time remove any director howsoever appointed, and may at any time convene a general meeting of the coy. Every such appointment or removal must be in writing under the hand of the sd A. B.

- (3) If the sd A. B. shall resign the office of governing director, or shall cease to hold at least 20,000*l.* of the shares to be allotted to him as afd, he shall become an ordinary director.
- (4) If the sd A. B. dies whilst he holds the office of governing director, the execs for the time being of his will, so long as 20,000*l.* of the share capital stands in his name, or in the names of such execs, may exercise the powers vested in the sd A. B. by para. (2) hcf; or
- (4) If the sd A. B. dies whilst he holds the office of governing director, he may by his will or any codicil thereto appoint any person to be governing director in his place, and direct and determine what shall be the powers, authorities, and discretions of such governing director, and what his remuneration and qualification, and how long he shall be entld to hold office, and in default of such direction and determination such appointee shall only have the powers of an ordinary director.
- (5) The remuneration of the sd A. B. whilst he holds the office of governing director shall be at the rate of £— per annum when the dividend declared by the coy amounts to 10*l.* p.c.p.a., and £— p.a. when the dividend declared amounts to 15*l.* p.c.p.a., with such additional sums as the coy in general meeting shall from time to time determine.
- (6) If and when there is not a governing director, which event is hntfr referred to as the termination of the original management, the other directors, if any, then in office shall forthwith convene a general meeting of the coy for the purpose of electing a board of directors, and if they do not convene such meeting within fourteen days after the termination of the original management, any five members may convene such meeting.
- (7) On the termination of the original management, the directors shall have power from time to time, and at any time, to appoint any other persons to be directors, but so that the total number of directors shall not at any time exceed seven, and so that no appointment under this clause shall have effect unless two-thirds at least of the directors in the United Kingdom concur therein.

Form 337.

Another.

1. The sd A. B. shall be the first governing director of the coy. Subject as hinftr provided the governing director for the time being shall hold that office for life, and whilst he is governing director the government and control of the coy shall be vested in him, and he may exercise all the powers, authorities, and discretions hby expressed to be vested in the governing director and all those hby expressed to be vested in the directors.

2. The governing director for the time being may from time to time and at any time appoint any other persons to be directors of the coy, and may define, limit, and restrict their powers, and may fix and determine their remuneration and duties, and may at any time remove any director, however appointed, and may at any time convene a general meeting of the coy. Every such appointment or removal must be in writing under the hand of the governing director.

3. The governing director shall ipso facto vacate office—

- (1) If by a resolution of the coy in general meeting he is requested to resign.
- (2) If at any time, by notice in writing to the coy, he resigns the office.

4. Whilst and whenever there are directors of the coy, but no governing director, the directors may exercise all the powers and perform all the duties hby expressed to be vested in the directors, and all those hby expressed to be vested in the governing director, except those specified in clauses — and — hof.

5. Whenever the governing director vacates office, whether under clause 3 hereof or by death, the vacancy may be filled up—

- (a) by resolution of a general meeting; or
- (b) by writing signed by the holders of at least two-thirds of the issued shares in the coy's capital.

6. If and whenever the governing director vacates office, the directors in office shall call a general meeting to consider and determine whether the vacancy shall be filled up, and who shall be appointed, or whether the business may be managed by directors, and who shall be the directors, and, if there are no directors in office, or if they do not convene a general meeting as afsd, then fourteen days after the vacancy the holders of two-thirds at least of the issued shares may convene a general meeting for the purposes afsd. Any meeting so convened may determine as afsd, and its determination shall have effect.

7. Whilst and whenever there shall be directors of the coy in office, and no governing director, the following provision shall have effect, that is to say:—

- (1) The number of the directors shall be not less than — and not more than —.
- (2) The coy in general meeting, or the holders of at least two-thirds of the issued shares, may at any time appoint any Form 337.

persons to be directors.

(3) The directors shall have power, &c.

When the sd D. ceases to be a governing director, the coy in general meeting may appoint any persons to be directors of the coy, and may fix the maximum and minimum number of directors, and a general meeting shall forthwith be convened for the purpose, and such meeting shall be convened by the sd D. (if living), or if he is dead or does not convene the same within seven days after he ceases to be governing director, then the meeting shall be convened by the directors (if any) in office under clause 84 *h*of; and if there are none or if they do not convene the meeting within seven days after the power so to do arises, then the provision of sect. 66 (4) of the Consolidation Act, 1908, shall have effect. The executor or administrators of a deceased holder of shares shall, for the purpose of this clause, be deemed to be the holders of any shares standing in the name of the deceased.

Form 338.

Appointment of directors when governing director vacates.

The sd A. and B. shall be the first governing directors of the coy, and shall both be enttd to hold office so long as they between them hold one-half of the ordinary share capital of the coy, and in the event of one of them vacating office by death, resignation, or otherwise, the other shall be the sole governing director, and shall be enttd to hold office so long as he holds one-third of the ordinary share capital of the coy.

Form 339.

Two governing directors.

The sd A. and B., whilst holding office as governing directors, and after one of them vacates the office of governing director, the other, whilst holding office as governing director, shall have full control of the business of the coy, and one of them shall be the chairman of the board of directors, and they, or the survivor of them, shall have power to appoint and remove any other director or directors, and may appoint any person in addition to any existing directors, and may from time to time, and at any time, appoint, define, limit, and restrict the powers and duties, and fix the qualification and remuneration of any other directors, and may remove any director howsoever appointed, and may at any time convene a general meeting of the coy.

So long as the sd A. and B., or one of them, shall be governing directors or director of the coy, no other director or directors of the coy shall be appointed without the consent of such governing directors or director.

In case the sd A. and B. shall cease to hold one-half the ordinary share capital of the coy, each of them shall be deemed thereupon to be elected to office as an ordinary director, unless under clause — he becomes the sole governing director.

Form 339. When both the sd A and B shall have ceased to be governing directors (which event is hitherto referred to as the termination of the original management), then and from thenceforth the directors shall have power from time to time, and at any time, to appoint any other persons to be directors, but so that the total number of directors shall not at any time exceed five.

After the termination of the original management the qualification of every director shall be the holding of shares of the coy of the nominal value of 500*l.* A director may act before acquiring his qualification.

The remuneration of the governing directors, when there are two, shall be at the rate of 850*l.* p.a. each, and when there is only one at the rate of 1,200*l.* p.a. The remuneration of the other director or directors (if any) shall be fixed by the governing director or directors, or in default of them or him shall from time to time be determined by the coy in general meeting.

Form 340.

Permanent directors.

A., B., and C. shall be the first directors, and each of them shall be entitled, subject to clauses --- and --- hereof, to retain office so long as he holds not less than --- of the shares specified or to be allotted to him pursuant to the agreement referred to in clause --- hereof, and whilst holding office by virtue of this provision shall be called a permanent director, and if by resignation he ceases to be a permanent director, he shall, if qualified, be deemed to have been thereupon elected to be an ordinary director.

Sometimes the following words are added:—"And shall be entitled to hold office as such so long as he lives [or until the second ordinary meeting next following the date when he ceases to be a permanent director]."

Form 341.

Founders, while specially qualified, to be directors, with power to appoint new directors.

The following provisions shall have effect:—

- (1) Each of them, the sd A., B., and C., shall be entitled to hold office as a director so long as he holds a special qualification.
- (2) Each of them, the sd A., B., and C., in case he resign his directorship whilst holding a special qualification, may appoint two directors.
- (3) Each of them, the sd A., B., and C., who dies whilst holding a special qualification, may by his will or codicil appoint any two persons to be directors, and in default of any such appointment, or so far as the same does not take effect, the legal personal representatives of the deceased shall be entitled to exercise the power.
- (4) Notice of every such appointment as aforesaid must be served on the coy within the period of three calendar months after the resignation or death of the director, and the notice must be accompanied by the consent in writing of the appointee to act, and the appointment shall only take effect from the service of such notice, and in the event of the same being served within such period.

Form 341.

- (5) The appointees must be sons, brothers, sons-in-law, grandsons, or nephews of the resigning or deceased director
- (6) The appointment shall have effect notwithstanding that it shall raise the number of directors beyond the maximum number in clause 83.
- (7) Any such appointment as aforesaid shall take effect without prejudice to clause — of [directors' qualification], save that a director or directors appointed by the will of a deceased director, or by the legal personal representative of a deceased director, shall be deemed to hold the requisite qualification for office so long as a special qualification stands in the name of the deceased, or in the names of the trustees for the time being of his will.
- (8) For the purposes of this clause a special qualification means ordinary shares of the nominal value of £30,000/ at the least.
- (9) Each of them, the said A., B., and C., who ceases to hold a special qualification specified in para. 8 of this clause, shall be deemed thereupon to be elected to office as an ordinary director.
- (10) Each of them, the said A., B., and C., and any appointee as aforesaid, shall, whilst holding office with a special qualification as aforesaid, be termed a permanent director.
- (11) No appointee as aforesaid shall have a power of appointing any person to be a director under this clause

The Permanent Governing Directors.

The said A. B. shall be the governing director of the company, and, subject as hereafter provided, the governing director for the time being shall hold that office for life, or until he ceases to hold a special qualification, and whilst he holds the same the government and control of the company shall be vested in him.

Form 342.

Permanent governing director, power to resign and resume office.

The governing director for the time being may from time to time and at any time appoint any other persons to be directors of the company, and may define, limit and restrict their powers, and may fix and determine their remuneration and duties, and may at any time remove any director, however appointed, and may at any time convene a general meeting of the company. Every such appointment or removal must be in writing under the hand of the governing director.

Form 342. The following provisions as to a governing director shall also have effect:—

- (1) He shall vacate the office of governing director if and when he ceases to hold a special qualification as hereafter defined, and is requested by the company in general meeting to resign.
- (2) If he resigns the office of governing director whilst holding a special qualification, he may appoint some other person to be the governing director in his place, subject as next hereafter provided.
- (3) If he resigns office and appoints a successor as aforesaid, he may whilst holding a special qualification, by notice in writing to the company, declare that he resumes the office of governing director, and he shall thereupon, to the exclusion of his appointee, again become the governing director, and the above provision in this paragraph shall apply as often as the governing director resumes office as aforesaid.
- (4) If he shall die whilst holding a special qualification, he may by his will, or any codicil thereto, appoint some other person to be the governing director, and in default of any such appointment the legal personal representatives of the said A. B. may make the appointment.
- (5) Every such appointment must be made by writing under the hand or respective hands of the appointor or appointors.
- (6) Notice of an appointment under para. 2 or para. 4 of this clause must be served on the company within two calendar months after the resignation or death of the governing director, and the notice must be accompanied by the consent in writing of the appointee to act, and the appointment shall only take effect on service of such notice, and in the event of the same being served within such period.
- (7) For the purposes of this clause, any person appointed a governing director under para. 2 aforesaid shall be deemed to hold a special qualification if and during such time as a special qualification is registered in his name, or as his appointor holds a special qualification; and if appointed under para. 4 aforesaid, shall be deemed to hold the same if and during such time as a special qualification is registered in the name of such appointee, or if and so long as such representatives or other the legal personal representatives for the time being of the appointor, or the trustees of his will, shall hold a special qualification.
- (8) For the purposes of this clause, a special qualification aforesaid means shares or stock in the capital of the company to the nominal value of £—.

The following form was used in a very important case where it was desired to preserve as far as possible the status quo under the partnership deed:—

The following provisions shall have effect (that is to say):

Form 343.

- (1) Each of the first five directors shall, subject to para. (7) of this clause, have power from time to time by deed to appoint as director a son, and in like manner to remove any son so appointed.
 - (2) Each of the first five directors shall, subject as aforesaid, have power from time to time by will or codicil to appoint as director any person, but so that no appointment of a person not being a son of the appointor shall have effect unless and until the appointee shall be approved in writing by three-fourths at least of the directors.
 - (3) None of them the said A., B. and C., shall be capable of exercising the power of appointment conferred by para. (1) of this clause until one of the three shall have died. And the power of appointment conferred by para. (2) of this clause shall not be exercisable by such one of them, the said A., B. and C., as shall first die.
 - (4) Not more than one person appointed by the same appointor, or his executors or administrators, under this clause shall at the same time be entitled to hold office by virtue of this clause.
 - (5) Where any appointee under this clause is under the age of twenty-one, the appointment shall not take effect until he attains the age of twenty-one years.
 - (6) As regards each of them, the said first five directors, if he dies whilst a member of the company, his executors or administrators shall have power to appoint a director in the cases following (that is to say):
 - (a) Where there is not any person appointed by the deceased under para. (1) of this clause in office at the time of the decease, and by his will or codicil the deceased has not exercised the power conferred by paragraph (2) of this clause.
 - (b) Where at the death of the deceased an appointee of the deceased, whether under paragraphs (1) or (2) of this clause, is under the age of twenty-one years.
 - (c) Where an appointee of the deceased, under paragraph (2) of this clause, being of full age, is not approved in writing by three-fourths at least of the directors within three weeks after the death of the deceased.
- Provided that the executors or administrators of such one of them, the said A., B. and C., as shall first die shall not be entitled to appoint under sub-sect. (a) of this paragraph, and provided also that no appointment under this paragraph of a person not being a son of one of the first five directors shall have effect unless and until the appointee shall be approved in writing by three-fourths at least of the directors.

- (7) Each of the sd first five directors and each director appointed by virtue of this clause shall be entld to hold office so long as he remains a member of the coy subject only to clause - and to the following provisions:-

(First.) If appointed under sub-sect. (b) of paragraph (6) he shall vacate office if and when the appointee referred to in that sub-section attains the age of twenty-one years and takes office.

(Second.) If he is appointed under sub-sect. (c) of paragraph (6) he shall vacate office if and when the appointee referred to in that paragraph is approved by the board of directors and takes office.

Form 344.

Permanent directorship in right of shares held by another party.

The sd J. B. shall be entld to hold office as a permanent director in respect of the shares held by the sd F. D. until he the sd J. B. resigns or dies, and whether or not he holds shares in his own right or otherwise; and if and when the sd J. B. resigns or dies the sd N. D. or the exors or trees of his will shall hold ordinary shares in the coy of the nominal value of at least 50,000*l.*, then the sd N. D., if living, or the exors or trees of his will if thereby authorized in that behalf, may appoint any person to be a director in the place of the sd J. B., and any such appointment shall be effective.

Form 345.

Directors to be appointed by trustees of will

The trees or tree for the time being of the sd A. B. may from time to time, and at any time, while trusts of such will continue, appoint any person to be a director of the coy, and in every such case the appointee shall be entld to hold office as a director until the expiration of five years from his appointment or until the trusts of the sd will shall be determined or until he resigns or dies, whichever event first happens, and upon the happening of any such event the appointee shall ipso facto vacate office, but may be re-appointed.

An appointment under this clause to be effective must be made in writing signed by all the trees for the time being of the sd will, and not more than one person shall at any one time be in office as a director under this clause

Power for directors to act separately.

Until otherwise determined by special resolution, each of the directors shall, as provided by the agreement in clause - be at liberty, without the concurrence of the others, to exercise all the powers, authorities, and discretions hereby vested in the directors generally.

The permanent directors or permanent director for the time being may at any time, and from time to time, by instrument in writing, appoint any persons to be ordinary directors, and may remove any persons so appointed. Every such appointment or removal shall be recorded in the coy's minute-book. Form 347.

Power to appoint other directors

1. A director who is not in the United Kingdom may appoint any person in the United Kingdom to act as his proxy at meetings of the directors, and to sign resolutions under clause — hof. Such appointment must be made in writing under the hand of the appointor, and may at any time be revoked in like manner, and may be general or for a specified period, or for specified meetings, or for specified resolutions, and may authorize and direct the appointee to be chairman if the appointor would, if present, be entitled to preside, and notice of every such appointment or revocation must be given to the coy, and the appointee need not be a director or member of the coy, but he must furnish the coy with his address in the United Kingdom. Form 348.

Directors'
proxies

2. It shall not be necessary to give to any director who is not within the United Kingdom notice of a meeting of the directors to be held there, but where such director is represented by a proxy appointed under clause — hof, due notice of such meeting shall be given to such proxy, either personally or by sending the same through the post, addressed to him at his last known place of address in the United Kingdom. Where a meeting is to be held in the United States afd, it shall not be necessary to give notice thof to any director who is not for the time being in the United States afd.

Managing Director.

The coy, in general meeting, may at any time appoint a managing director to conduct the business of the coy, and may make such appointment on such terms, and may from time to time vest in or assign to any managing director such powers, discretions and duties, and may impose on him such regulations as may seem expedient, and may remove any managing director so appointed, and may fill up any vacancy in the office of managing director; and for the purpose of exercising any of the powers conferred by this clause, any managing director, and any member or members holding not less than shares, may convene a meeting. Form 349.

Power for meeting to appoint managing director.

Sometimes no directors are appointed by the articles, but a clause appointing a "manager" on the lines of the above is inserted. In such case the clause as to directors will be considerably shortened, and the word "manager" will be substituted throughout for "directors."

Remuneration.Form 350.

Remuneration of directors

The directors shall be paid for their services out of the funds of the coy the remuneration following, that is to say, the sd A. and B., each at the rate of 500*l.* p.a. and the sd C. at the rate of 300*l.* p.a., and each of the other directors such sum as the coy in general meeting, or the permanent director shall from time to time determine.

The provisions as to remuneration of directors of private companies vary considerably. In some cases the principal directors take no remuneration, but have power to remunerate the ordinary directors. In others they take a fixed salary as above.

Sometimes it is deemed to provide, as in an ordinary partnership, that a member shall be at liberty to draw out a fixed allowance, with the obligation to recoup, if at the end of the year it appears that his share of profits does not amount to what he has drawn, but in a company there is more difficulty in making any such provision, inasmuch as dividends can only be paid out of profits. However, the difficulty is sometimes met, where the member is a director, by giving him the fixed allowance as remuneration for his services as director with liability to recoup as aforesaid. For there is no rule that directors' remuneration is to be paid only out of profits. Re Lumley Granite Co.; Harrow Levens' case, 36 L. T. 453.

Form 351.

Another.

The governing director shall be entitled to receive out of the funds of the coy such sums as he shall from time to time determine, not exceeding at the rate of £—— p.a.

Form 352.

Another.

The permanent directors shall be entitled to receive out of the funds of the coy such sums, not exceeding £—— p.a., as they shall from time to time determine, and the other directors shall be entitled to receive such remuneration as the permanent directors shall from time to time think fit to pay them.

Employment of Directors.Form 353.

Employment of directors.

The directors may from time to time employ any director to perform any work or labour, or to supply any goods required by the coy, or to serve the coy in any professional capacity, or as head of a department, or in any other capacity or character, and may remunerate him for such work or labour or goods or services as the directors may think proper, and may enter into contracts with him for the purposes aforesaid, but no director shall vote at any directors' meeting upon any question affecting his own employment as aforesaid, or any contract relating thereto. A director shall not be accountable for any profit arising from such employment.

Each of them, the said A., B., and C., whilst he remains a permanent director, shall be entitled, without charge, to have his son, or any one of his sons, instructed at the company's works in the business or businesses for the time being carried on by the company. Form 354.
Instruction of son.

This clause varies a good deal in form. Sometimes power is given to nominate by will a son for instruction. Sometimes any holder of a specified number of the shares is given the power.

Attention to Business.

Each of the ordinary directors shall devote the whole of his time and attention to the business of the company, but the said A. and B. shall not be bound to devote more time and attention to the company than they respectively may think fit. Form 355.
What time directors to give

Some such provision as above is not uncommon.

Rotation.

Unless otherwise determined by extraordinary resolution, the directors for the time being shall continue to hold office, subject only to disqualification and power to remove. Form 356.
Continuance of directors in office.

In a private company a clause as above is very common, the intention being that the directors shall not retire by rotation, but shall remain in office until they become disqualified by bankruptcy, &c., or are removed. When such a clause is inserted, the usual rotation clause will be omitted. When rotation clauses are inserted, it is usual to provide that they shall not apply to "the managing," "permanent," or "life" directors.

Proceedings of Directors

It is sometimes provided that (as in an ordinary partnership) each director may do various things without a board meeting. It is also not uncommon to provide for special voting power as follows:

At any meeting of the directors a director shall have one vote for every share held by him, and votes may be given either personally or by proxy, but a proxy must be one of the directors, and must be appointed in writing under the hand of the appointor. Form 357.
Voting at directors' meetings.

Sometimes no resolution is to be valid if a particular director dissents, or certain business is only to be transacted with the concurrence of a particular director.

Form 358.

Chairman and deputy-chairman.

The sd A. B. shall be chairman of the board so long as he remains a director and is willing to act, and the sd C. D. shall be deputy chairman. When the sd A. B. ceases to be chairman, the sd C. D. shall, if then a director, become chairman, and shall be entitl to retain the office so long as he remains a director, and is willing to act. Subject as aforesaid the board may appoint a chairman and deputy-chairman of their meetings, and determine the period for which they resply retain office.

Form 359.

When chairman absent at meeting.

All meetings of the board shall be presided over by the chairman, if present, and, in his absence, by the deputy-chairman, and if at any meeting of the board neither of the sd persons shall be present at the time appointed for holding the same, the directors present may choose one of their number to preside at the meeting.

Form 360.

How questions at board meetings decided.

Any question which shall arise at any meeting of the board shall be decided by the votes of the directors present, but each of them, the sd A. B. and C. D., shall be at liberty, so long as he shall be a director, by writing under his hand to authorize any other member of the board to vote for him at any meeting or meetings of the board and such authority may be general or may be limtd to any one or more meetings, or to any specified question or questions, and must, if required, be produced at any meetings at which the holder of the authority proposes to vote. No resolution of the board shall be binding if two or more directors, either in person or by proxy, at the meeting at which such resolution is proposed, or at the next subsequent meeting, dissent therefrom in writing.

Form 381.

How questions to be decided at board
meeting.

Questions arising at any meeting shall, subject as herein otherwise provided, be decided by a majority of votes, and in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote, but each of them, the sd A. B. and C. D., shall be at liberty, so long as he shall be a director, by writing under his hand, to authorize any other director to vote for him at any meeting or meetings of the board. Such authority may be general or may be limtd to any one or more meetings, or to any specified question or questions. No resolution of a meeting of the directors shall be binding if the sd A. B. and C. D., whilst directors, either in person or by proxy, at the meeting at which such resolution is proposed, dissent therefrom in writing; and if at any time any director hold not less than two-fifths of the nominal amount of the issued capital, no resolution of the directors shall be valid unless it is passed with his concurrence; but if no director hold two-fifths of the nominal amount of the issued capital, and two of the directors collectively hold three-fifths of the nominal amount of the issued capital, no resolution of the directors shall be valid unless it is passed with the concurrence of both of such directors.

Questions at any meeting of the directors shall be decided as follows, that is to say:— Form 362.

- (1) If all the directors are present in person or by proxy, the decision of the majority of those who vote shall be binding, unless at least two directors, present in person or by proxy, demand a poll, and in such case a poll shall be taken then and there, and the result of the poll shall be binding.
- (2) If all the directors shall not be present in person or by proxy, the decision of the majority of those who vote shall be binding unless at least two directors, present in person or by proxy, demand a poll to be taken at an adjourned meeting, and, in such case, the meeting shall, so far as regards the taking of such poll, be adjourned for three days or such other longer time as the meeting may determine, and notice shall, if practicable, be sent by telegraph, or otherwise, to those directors who, being in Europe, shall not have been present in person or by proxy at the original meeting, and the notice shall specify the time and place at which the adjourned meeting is to be held, and shall state either in general terms the nature of the business to be dealt with thereat, or that the adjourned meeting is to be held for a board meeting poll, and at the time so fixed the question shall be further considered and the poll shall be taken, and the result of the poll shall be binding.
- (3) Where a poll is to be taken under this clause, every director present in person or by proxy shall be entld to such number of votes as he would have been entld to if the poll were a poll duly demanded at a general meeting of the coy, including any votes to which he would be entld as appointee under an irrevocable proxy executed pursuant to clause 94 hof.

Another.
Provisions for votes as per shares held

A director may attend and vote at any meeting of the directors, either in person or by proxy, but the proxy must himself be a director; and any appointment under this clause of a proxy may be general, or for a specified period, or for specified questions, and, unless otherwise expressed therein, may be revoked at any time, and notice of every such appointment or revocation must be given to the coy, and, in the case of an appointment, the instrument effecting the same, and the power of attorney, if any, under which it is signed must be deposited before the meeting with the coy, along with the notice, and a general proxy may attend and vote by a substituted proxy at any specified meetings of the directors or for specified questions. Form 363.

Provisions for proxies.

Form 364.

Absence from board
meetings.

Where a director has, without special leave of absence, absented himself from his duties for a period or periods exceeding — months in any one year, he shall not be enttd to any remuneration for the period in excess of — months, and his remuneration shall be proportionately reduced.

Powers of Directors.

See pp. 746 et seq., supra. Sometimes the powers of directors are limited as regards certain things, e.g., borrowing money, entering into contracts beyond a certain value, increasing capital, &c.

Form 365.

Powers of director
limited.

The powers of the directors shall be limited to the following

- (1) To, &c
- (2) To, &c
- (3) To, &c

Dividends.

See Form 251, clause 116.

Occasionally it is provided that profits shall be applied as in Form 251. Where there are preference shares, provision will be made accordingly. See Forms 261 et seq.

Form 366.

Interest on unpaid share.

So long as any C. share is not fully pd up, the holder shall only be pd out of the dividends from time to time declared thereon such a sum as, with the amount (if anything) previously pd to the holder of such share pursuant to this clause, shall be equal to interest at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a. on the capital pd up thereon, computed from the time when such capital was pd up, and the excess shall be retained by the directors and applied in paying up such share.

This plan is not uncommonly confined to shares issued to employees. Sometimes the retention is only to operate until the share is paid up to the extent of 80 per cent.

Accounts.

These are generally in common form. See Form 251, clause 129 et seq. But sometimes a clause as follows has been inserted:

Form 367.

Balance-sheet.

A copy of such account, balance-sheet and report shall, for seven days previously to the meeting, be kept at the office open for the inspection of members, but the same shall not be circulated, and no copy of, or extract from, the same shall be taken.

The object is in some cases to save the expense, and in others to avoid disclosure of facts which might lead to the establishment of rival undertakings. Sect. 113 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, notwithstanding, the clause appears to be valid, for the section does not require any balance-sheet to be laid before the company in general meeting, and the "report" which the section requires to be read before the company in general meeting is not the report referred to in the clause (which is the directors' report under clause 132 of Form 251), but the report of the auditors on the accounts examined by them and "on every balance-sheet laid before the company in general meeting" that is, to the balance-sheet, if any, laid before the meeting.

Form 367.

A private company is specially exempted from including in its annual list of members and summary a statement in the form of a balance-sheet. Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 26 (3).

Audit.

The provisions as to audit contained in sects. 112, 113 of the Act of 1908 also apply to a private company, and accordingly the company must, at each annual general meeting, appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next annual general meeting. A director or officer of the company is not to be capable of being appointed. A remuneration for the auditors is to be fixed by a general meeting, and the auditors are to have access to the books, and are to make a report to the shareholders as provided in the Act. See supra, p. 774; and Squire Cash Chemist, Lim. v. Ball, 27 T. L. R. 269; affirmed 28 T. L. R. 81.

This section cannot be evaded in the case of any company under the Act, and therefore nothing is gained by inserting a clause that "The accounts relating to the company's affairs shall be audited in such manner as the company in general meeting shall from time to time determine."

Such a clause was, before 1901—the date of the Companies Act, 1900—sometimes inserted instead of the usual provision Registration of a Private Company.

On the formation of a private company it will be necessary to produce to the Registrar of Companies the statutory declaration required by sect. 17 (2) of the Act, by a solicitor of the High Court, and in Scotland by an enrolled law agent, engaged in the formation of the company, or by a person named in the articles as a director or secretary of the company, of compliance with the requirements of the Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent and incidental thereto. This is a simple matter involving but little extra trouble; and see pp 605, 606, supra.

Statutory and other Meetings.

The first meeting required to be held, in the case of all companies under the Act of 1862, by sect. 39 of the Companies Act, 1862, was abolished by the repeal of that section by sect. 33 of the Act of 1900. In lieu thereof, in the case of "every company limited by shares and registered" on or after Jan. 1st, 1901, the "statutory meeting" referred to in sect. 65 of the Act of 1908 must be held within a period of not less than one month nor more than three months from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business. This, in the case of a private company, will be the date of its incorporation, unless the articles of association otherwise provide. But though a private company must hold the statutory meeting it is exempted by sect. 65 (10) from the obligation of forwarding and filing the statutory report preliminary to the meeting. As to the general meetings to be held once a year, see sect. 61 of the Act of 1908.

Minutes of Meetings of Shareholders and Directors.

The Act of 1908 (sect. 71) requires every company to cause minutes of all proceedings of general meetings, and where there are directors or managers of its directors or managers to be entered in books kept for that purpose. Accordingly, books must be provided by the directors, and minutes entered. The following will give some idea of the mode in which minutes are entered:

Form 368.

Minutes of first meeting of directors

Meeting of the directors of the — Coy, Limited, held at — on the — day of —.

Present:—A., B., C., and D., directors, and E., the solor.
Mr. A. took the chair, pursuant to the arts of asson.

The solor reported that the coy had been duly incorporated, and he produced the certificate of incorporation, and a print of the memorandum and arts of asson as registered.

It was resolved that Mr. G. be appointed secretary of the coy at a salary of £— p.a. or, at a salary to be hereafter determined.

It was resolved that Messrs. A. B. and C. D., of the firm of —, chartered accountants, be appointed auditors of the coy to act as such until the first annual general meeting of the coy, and that their remuneration should be the sum of £—.

It was resolved that Messrs. — be appointed bankers of the coy, and be requested to open an account in the name of the coy, and to honour cheques drawn on that account signed by any two of the directors, and that the bank be furnished with specimens of the signatures of the directors.

It was resolved that Mr. — be appointed solor to the coy.

It was resolved that the registered office of the coy be at —, and that the secretary do give to the Registrar of Companies the requisite notice.

A seal for the coy ordered by the chairman on its behalf was produced and approved, and it was resolved that such seal be adopted as the common seal of the coy.

The chairman stated that he had, on behalf of the coy, ordered certain books for the purposes of the coy, and the order was approved and ratified.

The draft agreement referred to in clause 3 of the arts of asson of the coy was read and considered, and it was resolved that the coy do enter into an agreement with A. and B. in the terms of the sd draft.

The solor having produced an engrossment of the sd draft, such engrossment was sealed with the common seal of the coy, and was signed by the sd A. and B., and the solor was instructed to have it stamped, and to bear in mind that it would have to be filed with the Registrar of Companies under sect. 88 of the Cos Act, 1908.

Form 368

It was resolved that the solor do prepare the requisite conveyances for vesting in the coy the freehold and leasehold ppty agreed to be sold to the coy by the above-mentd agreement, and that he be requested to advise what steps should be taken to carry such agreement into effect.

It was resolved that the subscribers to the coy's memorandum of association be registered as shareholders in the register of members of the coy.

It was resolved that Mr. --- be appointed manager of the coy's works upon the terms of an agreement submitted to the meeting, and such agreement was thereupon executed in duplicate.

It was resolved that the quorum for a meeting of the directors should be two, and that until otherwise determined a meeting of the directors should be held at the registered office every Tuesday at --- o'clock in the forenoon.

It was resolved that the common seal of the coy be not affixed to any document except in the presence of two of the directors and of the secretary, who are to attest the sealing.

It was resolved that Mr. --- be appointed a committee, with full power to negotiate with Mr. --- as to the terms on which he will supply the coy with, &c., and to make a contract with him accordingly.

A letter from --- was read containing an offer to, &c.; and it was resolved that the offer contained in that letter be accepted, and that the secretary do write to the sd --- accordingly.

Meeting of the directors of the --- Coy. Limited, held at --- on the --- day of ---, 19 --- Form 369.

Present: A., B., C., and D., directors, and E., the solor

Minutes of second meeting

The minutes of the board meeting held on --- day of --- were read and confirmed.

The solor reported that the agreement between the coy and Messrs A. and B., executed at the last board meeting, had been duly stamped and was ready for filing with the Registrar of Companies.

A letter was also read from the solor, dated, &c., and advising as to the steps to be taken to carry the sd agreement into effect.

The solor produced the requisite conveyances for carrying the agreement into effect, as advised in such letter, and it was resolved that those conveyances should be executed and the seal should be affixed thereto; and thereupon such conveyances were sealed with the common seal, and were executed by the vendors, Messrs. A. and B.

Messrs. A. and B. stated that the coy had been placed in possession Form 389. of the works and of all the ppty capable of manual delivery, and that the bank balance had been transferred to the coy's account.

It was resolved that, in accordance with the agreemt of the — day of —, — shares in the capital of the coy of £— each, numbered — to — inclusive, be allotted as follows: that is to say, to Mr. A. — of such shares, numbered — to — inclusive, and to Mr. B. — of such shares, numbered — to — inclusive; and that such shares be credited as fully pd up in accordance with the sd agreemt; and that — shares of the like amount, numbered, &c., should be allotted to — as his qualification shares as a director; and that [as to other directors' qualification shares]; and that the names of the above-named allottees be entered in the register of members accordingly, and that certificates be issued to them pursuant to the arts of asson.

The certificates of title to the above-mentd shares were thereupon sealed and handed over to Messrs. A. and B., C. and D.

Applicons for — shares by the under-mentd persons were then handed in by Mr. A., and at his request it was resolved, that shares be allotted in response to such applicons, that is to say, to — 100 shares, to — 100 shares, and to — 100 shares, and that the secretary do give notice of allotment to such persons accordingly, and do request them forthwith to pay into the coy's account at its bankers the full nominal amount of the shares allotted to them resply.

The returns of the above allotments, produced by the secretary, were approved, and the solor was instructed forthwith to file the same and the above-mentd contract with the Registrar of Companies.

It was resolved that the statutory report produced by the secretary, comprising the particulars required by sect. 65 of the Companies Act, 1908, should be approved.

The provisions of sect. 65 of the Act as to forwarding and filing the statutory report are not applicable to a private company, so omit the above clause if the company still continues to be a private company.

It was resolved that the notice convening the statutory meeting of the coy for the — day of —, 19—, should be approved, and the secretary was ordered to issue the same to the members of the coy, and to make all necessary arrangements for holding the meeting.

It was further resolved that the list referred to in sect. 65 (6) should be approved, and the seal of the coy was duly affixed thereto, and the same list was handed to the secretary, who was directed to produce the same at the commencement of the statutory meeting, and to cause the same to remain open and accessible to any member of the coy during the continuance of the meeting.

It was resolved, that the secretary do forthwith issue to customers of the coy a circular-letter stating the conversion of the business into a coy, and that he do take the necessary steps to procure the insertion in the following newspapers of a statement that such conversion has been effected, and that none of the shares are to be issued to the public:—"The Times," &c.

DEEDS OF SETTLEMENT.

Some years since a very convenient mode of converting a business into a company was devised by the writer. It involved the execution of a deed called "Articles of Association," which embodied the provisions as well of a memorandum as of articles of association, and constituted a common law joint stock company, consisting of not less than seven nor more than twenty members. This company then passed a resolution for registration, under Part VII. of the Act of 1862 (Companies Act, 1908, ss. 249, 266), as a company limited by shares, and in due course a certificate of incorporation was issued, and in the result the company obtained incorporation in a simple and satisfactory manner, free from some of the complications attendant on conversion in the ordinary way by sale and transfer.

Registration
under Pt. VII. of C. A. 1862. of newly-formed companies.

This mode of conversion was largely approved by business men, for it dispensed with what appears to them the circuitous and absurd formality of an agreement by the partners to sell to the company, consisting of themselves, and enabled them so to frame their partnership deed that, on passing a resolution to register, and taking in a copy of the deed, registration would follow as of course, without any need for sales or conveyances, and without any breach in the continuity of the concern. Accordingly, a considerable number of companies, including many of the leading brewery companies, were so registered; but unfortunately for the scheme it had the additional merit of avoiding the ad valorem duty on sales which attached when conversion was effected in the ordinary way. This was an unpardonable offence in the eyes of the Revenue Authorities, and at their instance the Registrar was directed to refuse to register any further companies so constituted. It is believed that the Registrar had been advised that this mode of constitution was perfectly regular, and the then most eminent lawyer of the Chancery Bar, afterwards Lord Davey, had repeatedly so advised. However, the refusal was persisted in, and no one was found ready to engage in litigation with the Crown in order to test the question, until 1891, when an application for a mandamus was made by some persons who desired to register what they represented to be a company constituted in accordance with this scheme. The so-called company was, however, formed not to carry on a business, but to wind up; it was a burlesque of the scheme, and the attempt to enforce registration of the company an absurdity, if, indeed, it was ever seriously contemplated.

It is therefore not surprising that the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of the Court below, held that there was no right in that case to a mandamus. Reg. v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, (1891) 2 Q. B. 598.

There are, in the judgments, some doubts expressed as to whether any company formed by deed after the commencement of the Act of 1862 is a company "duly constituted by law," and so entitled to register in accordance with this scheme; but these doubts were mere obiter dicta, and in George Newman & Co., supra, p. 939, where the company had been formed and registered in this way, the Court of Appeal recognized it as duly incorporated.

Powers in Wills for Conversion by Trustees of Businesses into Companies.

Powers in wills for conversion.

Where persons are possessed of concerns, or shares in concerns, and desire the businesses carried on after their deaths, it has now become usual for them to make provision in their wills for the conversion of the concerns into private companies. Sometimes persons who are solicited to act as trustees of an intended will, or settlement, urge the insertion of such a provision in the will or settlement. In other cases the testator or settlor is advised to convert, or concur in converting, his business into a private company before his death, but he may prefer to leave power in his will for that purpose.

Prima facie—that is, apart from such an authority—trustees or executors have no power to convert, or concur in converting, a concern into a company. See Morrison, (1901) 1 Ch. 701, supra, p. 950. But sometimes a conversion may be supported as a compromise under sect. 37 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (or under the Trustee Act, 1893). See West of England Bank v. Murch, 23 C. D. 138, where a sale of a testator's share in a business, in consideration of cash and of shares and debentures in a company, was held valid, on the ground that the vendor, who was the executrix, was enabled thereby to make an arrangement with the testator's creditors, and, accordingly, that the transaction amounted to a compromise within the meaning of sect. 30 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145. The following form is a specimen of a power in a will for enabling conversion.

Form 370.

Power for trustees of will to convert testator's business into a company.

I authorize my trustees or trustee at any time within [twelve calendar months] after my death, to convert my business into a coy, limtd by shares, upon such terms and in such manner as my trustees or trustee, in their or his uncontrolled discretion, shall think fit; and without limiting such general authority, I expressly declare that my trustees or trustee—(a) may accept fully or partially pd up shares or debentures, or any other interests in or securities of any such coy as the consen or part of the consen for the transfer of the sd business; Form 370.

 (b) may settle the terms of any memdum and arts of assen, deed of settlement, or other documents for use in relation to such conversion, and may sign or execute the same; (c) may act as directors or director of such coy, and either alone or in conjunction with others, without being accountable for any remuneration payable to them as such; (d) may procure the appointment of any other persons to be directors, either alone or otherwise; (e) may, for the purpose of securing or preserving the limtd liability of the members after registration, vest any of the shares in the sd coy, constituting part of my estate, in such persons and upon such trusts as they or he think fit; (f) may lend money forming part of my residuary estate to any such coy upon such terms as they or he may think fit, and may concur in winding up, reconstructing, and amalgamating any such coy, or in the modification of any of the regulations thereof, and may exercise any powers which by the regulations of such coy shall be vested in my trustees as members or directors thereof, or otherwise, and generally may act in relation to any such coy in such manner as they think best calculated to benefit my estate: And I declare that all shares, debentures, or other interests in or securities of any such coy acquired by my trustees or trustee shall be deemed to be authorized as investments by clause — hereof, and to have been purchased by my trustees or trustee out of moneys arising from a sale under clause — hereof; And I declare that for the purpose of this clause the expression, "my business," shall be deemed to include the goodwill of the business of a — carried on by me at —, and the whole of my ppty and rights in connection with such business.

Application to Court where Will defective.

Where the trustees of the will have not the requisite power to convert the testator's business into a company, it may nevertheless be possible to effect a conversion by obtaining the sanction of the Chancery Division, or of a Chancery Palatine Court, to the conversion. There appears to be no doubt that the Chancery Division has jurisdiction to give the requisite sanction in a large number of cases. As the circumstances of each case differ, it would be useless here to attempt to specify the cases in which the jurisdiction of the Court may be invoked with a fair prospect of success. Suffice it to say that the jurisdiction was repeatedly exercised by Chitty, Stirling, and Kekewich, J.J., and by Sir George Jessel, M. R., and many other Chancery judges. North, J., in Crawshaw, 60 L. T. 357, considered that, in the circumstances of that particular case, he had not jurisdiction. But the Court of Appeal has now decided that there is jurisdiction in a proper case. See the subject further discussed and the instructive judgment of Romer, L. J., supra, p. 951.

Where the sanction of the Court is required for the conversion of a business into a company, a provisional agreement should be made between the trustees and some person as trustee or agent on behalf of the company for sale of the business, subject to the sanction of the Court being obtained. Form 40, supra, can be utilized with the following special clauses in modification thereof. Another mode is shown in Form 306, supra.

The following is an outline of a case in which the Court sanctioned the sale of land by trustees for shares in a company to be formed, although the trust deed gave no power to invest in shares:

By the trust deed the trustees were to hold a certain building estate, thereby conveyed to them, upon the trusts declared by an indenture of even date, namely, to manage the same, and sell it for cash or perpetual chief rent, or partly in each mode. Afterwards a conditional agreement was entered into by the trustees with a person on behalf of the proposed company for the sale of the land to the company for paid-up shares, with an option for the trustees to take shares or debentures of the company, and by the agreement the trustees were to pay the cost of registering and floating the company. The agreement was conditional on the sanction of the Court being obtained and on a certain minimum amount of debentures being subscribed. The trustees then took out an originating summons under R. S. C., Ord. LV. r. 3, which was in the following form:

That the following questions or matters arising in the administration of the trusts of such indenture may be determined under the Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. LV. r. 3, and relief given in respect thereof without the administration of the trusts of such indenture, that is to say—

1. That a provisional agreement, dated, &c., and made between the plaintiffs of the one pt and A. M. of the other pt. for the sale of the sd estate, may be approved, and that the plaintiffs may be at liberty to carry the same into effect.
2. That in the event of the proposed sale not being carried to completion, the plaintiffs may be at liberty to raise and pay out of their trust estate so much of such costs and expenses under clause — of the sd agreement referred to as shall have been paid or incurred by them.
3. That the costs of this application may be provided for.

15. I am advised and verily believe that, although there is a market for the shares of the existing coy, it would be disastrous to attempt to realise any large proportion of the shares or debentures of the new coy when issued by placing them on the market at once, and accordingly I desire to obtain leave to retain such shares and debentures when obtained subject to the direction of the Ct as to realisation after a period of postponement or otherwise as may be deemed expedient.

16. We, —— of ——, —— of ——, and —— of ——, severally make oath and say as follows:—

1. The plt A. is the surviving tree and exor appointed by the will of, &c., and the plts B. and C. are, with the sd A., the present trees of the sd will, the sd B. and C. having been appointed such trees by an indenture dated, &c.

2. The sd testator was at the time of his death (which took place on, &c.), in conjunction with his then partners, L., M., and N., carrying on the business of —— manufacturers under the style, &c., which business under the same style was, with various partners, pursuant to the power in that behalf in the sd testator's will contained, carried on by the testator's widow, and on the death of the sd M., on, &c., the then existing partnership came to an end.

3. Before and at the time of the testator's death and ever since the whole of the capital, including, &c., belonged to and formed part of the sd testator's estate.

4. The capital, including the value of the plant and machinery, stood at the testator's death, and has always since stood and still stands, in the firm's books at the sum of £——.

5. The goodwill of the business has never been valued, nor is it in our opinion advisable in the interests of the business to call in an expert valuer, who must necessarily be some person in the business of and well known and experienced as a — manufacturer. Form 376.

6. The freehold property, &c., which has been valued by —, a duly qualified valuer, is of the value of £—.

7. [The leasehold property at rack-rents of no value.]

8. Copies of past balance-sheets of firm exhibited.

9. We are advised and believe that neither the sd A., as such surviving exor, nor he and the sd B. and C., as such present trees of the will of the sd testator, has or have any power under the sd testator's will to carry on the sd partnership business

10. A dissolution and winding-up of the partnership assets and business is a matter of great moment to all parties interested in the testator's estate, and, after due consideration, we have come to the conclusion that the magnitude and special character of the business precludes all prospect of a sale to individuals, and that as none of the persons beneficially interested in the testator's estate are able to take it over, the only available mode of realisation is to form a joint stock coy for the purpose of purchasing and taking over the business. The question of the time when this may be done has also had our serious attention, and it has been deemed proper, with the sanction of the Court, to effect the conversion at once. We have accordingly prepared proposals, and the drafts of an agreemt and memdum and arts of assen for the sale to a coy to be formed for the purpose of acquiring the partnership business and assets as from the 1st January last, including any balance accrued since that date which may be in the hands of the receiver and manager appointed in this action by order dated —, but subject to the debts and liabilities of the sd business, for 73,000*l.*, to be wholly satisfied by the allotment to us or our nominees of fully pd-up shares in the coy, subject to the approval of the Ct. The sd proposals and drafts of the sd provisional agreemt and memdum and arts of assen are now produced to us marked resply, &c. The draft of the agreemt, also prepared by us, which it is proposed the coy (when incorporated) should enter into with the sd —, is now produced and shown to us marked F. and the sd proposals and drafts in our opinion are fair, reasonable and proper in all respects, and have been settled after much conson and consultation, not only between us, but between us and the beneficiaries of the estate.

11. The estate of the testator to be divisible into 30 parts, and distributable as follows: $\frac{7}{30}$ to the dfts — —, as exors of — the younger, decd, &c.

12. All the dfts having limited interest so far as they possibly can, and we as such exors of the sd A. as afd, approve of the sd proposals, draft agreemt, and memdum and arts of asson, and desire that the same may be approved and carried into effect. In our judgment the terms of the sd proposed agreemt are for the benefit of all parties interested, and we are of opinion that it is fit and proper that they be sanctioned and approved by this honourable Ct, and we do not see any other way, or how the sd business can be realised or sold or disposed of on more favourable terms.

"Proposals for conversion of the business of J. K. & Co. into a private coy to be incorporated under the Cos. Acts, 1862 to 1893."

Proposal taken into chambers for conversion of business

For some years prior to the death of Mrs. K., the widow of the above testator, the business of — manufacturers carried on by J. K. & Co. was carried on by her in partnership with the plts K. and S. under the terms of certain articles of partnership, dated, &c.

But on Mrs. K.'s death, on the — of —, the partnership was determined. The plt K. and one S. were interested solely in profits of the business—the whole of the capital employed therein belonging to the testator's estate. The capital employed in the business at the date of Mrs. K.'s death was £—. The returns of the business from the year 1891 to the 25th of January, 1897, were as follows. —[Put above statement in columns headed:—year, sales, gross profits, net profits.]

The trees have carefully considered the best course of disposing of the business in pursuance of the trusts of the testator's will: and although the business has been and continues to be profitable, yet looking to the gradual diminution in the annual returns at the end of 1896, they have come to the conclusion that it would be impossible to find a purchaser at an adequate price, and that to attempt to effect a sale to a public joint stock coy would result in failure and occasion considerable damage to the business.

The trees therefore submit the following proposal for conversion of the business into a private joint stock coy:

- (a) The coy to be formed to acquire the goodwill and assets of the business, together with, &c., subject to the debts and liabilities thof as from the 25th January, 1897, with a nominal capital of 100,000£., divided into 10,000 shares of 10£. each.
- (b) The purchase price to be 73,500£. to be wholly satisfied by the allotment to the trees or their nominees of fully pd-up shares in the coy. The whole share capital will then be held by the trees, with the exception of the shares to which the trees of the will of the sd K. the younger will be entld as pt of the investments of the trust funds subject to the testator's will.
- (c) The board of the proposed coy to consist of three directors, namely, &c., the latter being appointed manager for a term of seven years from the 26th January, 1897, and the remuneration of Messrs. — to be such sum as may be fixed by the judge in chambers, and that of S. to be the sum of 1,000£. p.a. with a commission of 10 p.c. upon the profits.

Form 378.

- (d) That each of the directors other than the first directors should hold as his qualification so many shares.
- (e) That the arts shall provide that the directors shall be entld to refuse registration of shares to any person they do not approve as transferee without being called upon to assign any reason for such refusal.

The draft agreemt for sale and the memdum and arts of assen of the proposed coy to be settled by the judge in chambers.

- (2) That the sum of £— be substituted for the sum of £ mentd in clause —.

And the judge doth approve of the sd agreemt as so varied, and doth order that the plts be at liberty to carry the same into effect; and it is ordered that it be referred to the taxing master to tax, as between solor and client, the costs of the plts and dfts of this applicon and incidental thereto, including therein the costs of the sd affts hnbefore read; and it is ordered that the plts, as trees of the above-mentd indenture, dated —, 1886, do pay and satisfy such costs, when taxed out of the estate of the sd testators, and any parties are to be at liberty to apply as to exercising the before-mentd option, or otherwise as they may be advised. *Stirling, J., Lord v. And this Court being of opinion that the terms of compromise in the petition mentioned are for the benefit of those parties who are not sui juris, doth order that the defendants, X., Y., and Z., the trustees of the testator's will, be at liberty to accept and retain, in lieu of the several legacies intended for their several cestuis que trustent, debentures and shares in the company in the petition referred to when formed, and to join in making over the real and personal estate of the said testator (other than the landed property at, &c., and the shares in local companies, and the debt owing by the defendant Z., forming part of such estate) to such company when formed in accordance with the schedule in the petition mentioned, and all parties interested are to be at liberty to apply in chambers with respect thereto as they shall be advised. Re Sir Titus Salt, Bart., deceased, Salt v. Wright. Jessel, M. R., 27th July, 1881.

Upon the application by originating summons, dated —, of the plaintiffs, and upon hearing counsel, &c., it is ordered that it be referred, &c., tax costs as between solicitor and client, and that such costs be paid as provided for in the agreement hereinafter mentioned; And the judge being of opinion that it will be for the benefit of the infant defendants that under a proper scheme the testator's business in the summons mentioned shall be converted into a limited company, of which the plaintiffs shall act as directors, and that the plaintiffs shall be allowed to vote and retain for their own benefit a proper remuneration as such directors, and that the scheme proposed in the said assent of the plaintiffs filed, &c., and in the draft memorandum and articles of the proposed company and draft agreement for sale when signed by the Master is a proper scheme, doth order that the nominal capital of the proposed company be 40,000*l.* instead of 50,000*l.*, and that the said draft memorandum and articles of association be altered accordingly, and with this alteration the judge doth hereby sanction the formation of the said proposed company with the said draft memorandum and articles of association, the said draft agreement, and doth order that the plaintiffs be at liberty to carry the same into effect; and it is ordered that, until the testator's estate shall have become distributable under the provisions of his said will, the plaintiff or other the trustees or trustee for the time being of his said will and codicils are not without the sanction of the Court, to be obtained by them or him as such trustees or trustee, to make, or consent to the making of, any

Later on it was found that the order did not sufficiently provide for putting in an extra 6,000*l.* required for the effectual working of the business, and a further summons was taken out accordingly, and a further order was obtained, 19th May, 1903, modifying the scheme as follows, that is to say:--

1. The plts, all trees of the will of the sd W., are to be at liberty before the promotion of the proposed coy to set aside out of his residuary estate the sum of 6,000*l.*, or investments of the value of 6,000*l.*, and to place the same to a separate account in the names of the trees for the time being of the will of the sd W. for the purpose of meeting the expenditure recommended by the report of L., being the exhibit --- to the afft of the sd --- filed, &c.

2. The fund proposed as afsd is to be included in the sale to the proposed coy, and the draft sale agreemt is to be modified accordingly: but the sale is to be subject to a provision to the effect that the fund is to be retained by the trees of the sd will, and is to be pd over to the new coy by instalments as and when required from time to time for the purposes of the expenditure afsd.

3. The sd draft agreemt is to contain a covenant by the coy to carry out the recommendations contained in the sd report.

4. The purchase consideration to be specified in the draft agreemt for sale is to be increased accordingly by the sum of 6,000*l.*, and the sd agreemt for sale is to provide that this sum of 6,000*l.*, shall be satisfied by the issue to the plts as such trees of 6,000*l.* first mortgage debentures of the coy, and that such debentures are to be secured by a specific first mortgage to trees of all the lands, buildings and fixed machinery of the coy, and by a floating charge in their favour on all the other ppty and undertaking of the coy.

5. The sd agreemt is also to provide that the sd debentures shall be issued from time to time to trees of the sd will in exchange for similar amounts of the sd fund as and when pd over for expenditure as afsd.

6. A corresponding modification shall be made in the sd draft memdum and arts of assen.

And it is ordered that the sd scheme as so modified be sanctioned, and it is ordered that all documents requiring modification and all new documents required for effecting the same be settled by Mr F. B. P., barrister-at-law; and it is ordered that it be referred to the taxing master to tax the costs of all parties of and incident to this applicon as between solor and client, and that such costs be pd as provided by the draft agreemt hnbefore mentd. Liberty to apply.

B. for a period of two years, or until further order.

And it is ordered, that the costs of the plt and dfts of this action be taxed by the taxing master as between solor and client.

And it is ordered, that the plt be at liberty to pay and retain such costs when taxed out of the estate of the sd A. B., except so far as the same may be pd by the sd proposed coy.

And any of the parties are to be at liberty to apply as they may be advised. Boyce v. Bullard, Stirling, J., 25th March, 1895, Reg. Lib. A. 1365.

EMPLOYÉES' BENEFITS.

CHAPTER XI.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

WHERE companies employ much labour, it is often found expedient to provide for the employes certain benefits and advantages beyond their ordinary wages, so that by being interested in the fortunes of the company they may have special inducements to use their best energies and abilities in its service, and to abstain from the ruinous warfare involved in strikes and agitation.

Special inducements to employes.

There seems good reason for anticipating that profit-sharing in some form will play an important part in the industrial system of the future, and may even prove the true solution of the problems arising out of competing claims of labour and capital.

The following are some of the various schemes which have, from time to time, been adopted for the purpose:—

Examples of schemes.

Profit-sharing Schemes.

(a) One scheme is for the company to make regulations declaring that a certain portion of its annual profits shall be divided amongst its employes, or selected employes, in proportion to their wages, or in some other proportion.

Profit-sharing.

(b) Another scheme is to create an issue of a special class of employes' shares, and to allow employes to take them up and to hold them whilst in the company's employment].

(c) Another scheme is to establish a fund, which is placed in the hands of trustees, who are empowered to invest the same in shares of the company, to be sold on easy terms to employes, all dividends going in part payment of the purchase-money until, by means thereof, the whole price of the shares has been paid. Thus an employe, in effect, saves up his share of profits until he obtains with the amount a share in the company.

(d) Another scheme some times adopted is for the principal shareholders to make over to a trustee a specified number of paid-up shares in the company, on the footing that certificates, conferring a right to the dividend declared on such shares, shall be issued to selected employés, such certificates to be retained so long as they remain in the company's employment. This scheme possesses many advantages, and this in particular, that whilst giving a share in the profits, it does not render the employés members of the company.

Superannuation and Pension Funds.

Superannuation and pension funds.

Such funds are very attractive to employés where the business of the company is well established and likely to be permanent, and, as the benefits are usually confined to employés dying or becoming incapacitated by ill-health whilst in the employment of the company, the scheme affords a strong inducement to employés to continue in the service of the company. Such schemes generally vest a discretion in the administrators of the fund as to the amount of the allowance or pension, and this enables the most deserving cases to be discriminated and specially favoured.

Moreover, the provisions of such a scheme are generally more liberal than those offered by insurance companies, mainly because the company itself largely contributes to the fund, either by donations out of profits or otherwise. The employés are sometimes required to contribute to the fund, but as a rule it is better not to exact such contributions.

Life Assurance Schemes.

Life assurance schemes.

Occasionally a company adopts a scheme of life assurance for the benefit of its employés. Unless the company be a life assurance company conforming to the requirements of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, it cannot itself insure its employés, but there is no difficulty in finding an insurance company ready to give effect to any such scheme, and as a general rule the company itself, under the powers of its memorandum of association, may pay or contribute towards the premiums payable under any such scheme. If desired, a life assurance scheme can be effectuated by means of an industrial and provident society constituted under the Acts of 1893 and 1895, to be formed and worked by the company's employés with or without supervision; and this course is sometimes preferred, on the ground that the persons interested are thus enabled to frame the scheme as they choose, and to work it without reference to any outside body.

Sick and Accident Fund Schemes.

Sick and accident fund.

Such funds are very common. They can be worked by a committee appointed, or in part appointed, by the employés, or by means of a friendly society registered under the Friendly Societies Acts, 1896, 1898, and 1908. In either case the company contributes to the fund, and in most cases the employes also contribute a small sum weekly. But since the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, repealed and replaced by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, accident funds are rarely adopted.

Guarantee Fund Schemes.

Where the employes of a company, or a considerable number of them, are required to give security, it is not unusual to establish a guarantee fund to which employes and employers both contribute, and thus in effect insure each other's interests. In such cases the rules sometimes provide that any surplus from time to time shall be carried over to the provident fund.

Deposit Scheme.

Occasionally a scheme is established for encouraging employes to save a proportion of their wages by depositing the same with the company, or with trustees, the company allowing interest at a higher rate than can be obtained elsewhere, and the right to withdraw the deposits being more or less fettered.

Encouragement of employes to save by depositing with company.

Truck Acts.

In framing and working any scheme which involves contribution by employes, the Truck Acts (1831 to 1896) must be borne in mind, namely, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37 (Truck Act, 1831); 50 & 51 Vict. c. 46 (Truck Amendment Act, 1887); and 59 & 60 Vict. c. 44 (Truck Act, 1896); and the Hosiery Manufacture (Wages) Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 48).

The Truck Acts.

The main object of these Acts was and is to prevent employers from taking an unfair advantage of their workmen by paying wages in goods, or orders for goods, or insisting on workmen applying their wages, or part thereof, in purchasing goods at stores kept by employers or their agents, or in which employers are interested.

The operation of the Acts of 1831 and 1887 was considered by the House of Lords in Hewlett v. Allen, (1894) A. C. 383. In that case, A., the appellant, upon entering the firm's service, signed an agreement whereby she agreed to conform to all the rules of the firm's works, one of which provided that all firm's servants should become members of a sick and accident club, to the funds of which weekly subscriptions were payable. A deduction was made each week by the firm from the appellant's wages, with her consent, and paid to the club. The appellant brought an action to recover this deduction, relying on the Truck Acts, but it was held that the payments so made were not deductions within the meaning of the Act, and therefore could not be recovered. Lord Herschell, L. C., in that case, after referring to sects. 3 and 4 of the Act of 1831, said: "The contrast in those sections is between payment in current coin of the realm and payment in some other fashion; and I can myself entertain no doubt that a payment made by an employer at the instance of a person employed to discharge some obligation of the person employed, or to place the money in the hands of some person in whose hands the person employed desires it to be placed, is in the sense and meaning of those sections a payment to the person employed as much as if the current coin of the realm had been placed in his or her hands."

In the case last cited the contract did not provide that the employee should pay the contributions out of her wages, and the majority of the learned lords laid stress on this fact. See also Lamb v. Great Northern Rail. Co., (1891) 2 Q. B. 281.

In Owner v. Hooper (1903), 89 L. T. 130, fortnightly wages were paid in full, and a slip was at the same time handed to the workman indicating a sum which he thereupon repaid to the master. This sum was to cover insurance premium paid by the master, and it was held that the wages were paid in full in current coin as required by the Act.

The deduction by an employer from the wages of a workman of damages awarded by a Court of competent jurisdiction to be paid to the employer for breach of contract is a violation of sect. 3 of the Truck Act, 1831, which requires payment of the entire amount of wages in coin. Williams v. North's Navigation Co., (1906) A. C. 136.

So, where a man was employed as a journeyman machinist at 2s. a week, and his contract with his employers (a company) was on the basis that 2s. per week was to be satisfied by shares in the employing company, the Court of Appeal in Ireland held that the agreement as to the shares was void under the Truck Acts, although his fellow-workmen had acquiesced. Glasgow v. Independent Printing Co., (1901) 2 I. R. 278, C. A.

But where a workwoman was employed at 8s. per week of 55½ hours, with a bonus of 2s. a week for full attendance, and that alone, and printed rules posted in the factory and admittedly read by the workwoman provided (inter alia) that "any person absent without reason and not assigning satisfactory reason shall lose bonus," and the workwoman was absent for a quarter of a day without sufficient reason, it was held that it was not an offence under the Truck Acts for the employer to deduct the bonus. Deane v. Wilson, (1906) 2 Ir. R. 405, K. B. D.

With regard to the Truck Acts, the following observations may be made:—

By sect. 1 of the Act of 1887, the Acts of 1831 and 1887 only extended to workmen as defined by the Employers and

Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Viet. c. 90), s. 10, that is to say—"The expression 'workman' does not include a domestic or menial servant, but save an aforesaid means any person who, being a labourer, servant in husbandry, journeyman artificer, handicraftsman, miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour, whether under the age of twenty-one years, or above that age, has entered into or works under a contract with an employer, whether the contract be made before or after the passing of this Act, be express or implied, oral or in writing, and be a contract of service or a contract personally to execute any work or labour."

Manual labour is the test. Grainger v. Aynsley (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 182; Morgan v. London General Omnibus Co. (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 832, C. A.

Therefore the Acts of 1831 and 1887 were held not to apply to clerks or shop salesmen, overseers, or drivers of omnibuses and other vehicles (Morgan v. London General Omnibus Co., 13 Q. B. D. 832; Cook v. North Metropolitan &c. Co., 18 Q. B. D. 683; Bound v. Lawrence, (1892) 1 Q. B. 226), or to railway guards (Hunt v. Great Northern Ry., (1891) 1 Q. B. 601), or to a manager of coal mines (Simpson v. Ebbw Vale Co., (1905) 1 K. B. 153), or to a working partner (Ellis v. Joseph Ellis & Co., (1905) 1 K. B. 324), or to lace clippers who took home from the factory lace which they were not bound to work on personally. Squire v. Midland Lace Co., (1905) 2 K. B. 448.

- (2) They did not prevent an employer from insisting on his employees making contributions to any fund for the benefit of the employees, provided the employer was not to benefit thereby.
- (3) It is desirable to avoid providing for deduction from wages.

The Truck Act, 1896, does not make lawful any contract or payment which was illegal under the previous Act, or certain other Acts referred to which relate to particular industries (sect. 9). And the Secretary of State may grant exemptions from its provisions in certain areas, &c., when they are found to be unnecessary (sect. 10). Certain exemptions under this section have been made in favour of the cotton weaving trade and iron ore and limestone quarries. See London Gazette, March 9th, 1897; June 18th, 1897. On the other hand, contracts for the payment or deduction of fines are invalidated unless made under the conditions specified in the Act (sect. 1; as to which, see Squire v. Bayer & Co., (1901) 2 K. B. 299), and this provision applies both to workmen and to "shop assistants."

The Act also places restrictions on contracting with reference to deductions or payments in respect of (a) damaged goods (sect. 2), (b) the use or supply of materials, &c., in relation to the work or labour of the workman (sect. 3). These provisions, however, are not in terms applied to "shop assistants," and apparently only apply in the case of workmen.

The Shop Clubs Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 21), bears some analogy to the Truck Acts. Under sect. 2 of the Act, it is provided that it shall be an offence under the Act if an employer shall make it a condition of employment that any workman shall join a shop club or thrift fund, unless the shop club or thrift fund is registered under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, subject to the provisions of the Shop Clubs Act, 1902, and certified under that Act by the Registrar of Friendly Societies; and there are certain restrictions on the registration of the shop club or thrift fund, and provisions for compensation in certain cases of workmen dismissed. The Act does not retrospectively invalidate shop club rules. Balchin v. Lord Ebury, 20 L. T. R. 60. And see Macdonell, Master and Servant, 2nd ed. 331—353, 560.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.

This important statute, 6 Edw. 7, c. 58, which replaces the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897 and 1900, and came into operation on July 1st, 1907, must not be forgotten, especially as the term "employer" as used in its clauses expressly "includes any body of persons corporate or unincorporate" (see sect. 13).

That it was competent for a workman to contract with his employer not to claim compensation for personal injuries under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), was clearly decided in Griffiths v. Earl of Dudley, 9 Q. B. D. 357; but contracts entered into on the faith of that decision should be carefully examined with reference to the provisions of the Act of 1906, for by sect. 15 of that Act "any contract (other than a contract substituting the provisions of a scheme certified under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for the provisions of that Act) existing at the commencement of this Act, whereby a workman relinquishes any right to compensation from the employer for personal injury arising out of and in the course of his employment shall not, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to continue after the time at which the workman's contract of service would determine if notice of the determination thereof were given at the commencement of this Act." The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, therefore terminates all then existing contracting out agreements between employer and employed as if notice to terminate had been given at the date of the Act.

Starting thus with a clear field, so to speak, sect. 1 of the Act renders the employer liable to pay compensation, in accordance with the first schedule to the Act, where "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman." And the power of contracting out is very considerably modified. The Act is to "apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act," subject to this, that "if the Registrar of Friendly Societies, after taking steps to ascertain the views of the employer and workmen, certifies that any scheme of compensation, benefit, or insurance for the workmen of an employer in any employment, whether or not such scheme includes other employers and their workmen, provides scales of compensation not less favourable to the workmen and their dependants than the corresponding section contained in the Act, and that where the scheme provides for contributions by the workmen the scheme confers benefits at least equivalent to those contributions, in addition to the benefits to which the workmen would have been entitled under the Act, and that a majority (to be ascertained by ballot) of the workmen to whom the scheme is to apply are in favour of the scheme, the employer may, whilst the certificate is in force, contract with any of his workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme" (sect. 3, sub-sect. 1). But no scheme is to be certified "which contains an obligation upon the workmen to join the scheme as a condition of their hiring," or which does not contain provisions enabling a workman to withdraw from the scheme (sect. 3, sub-sect. 3). The same section provides for limiting the duration of certificates, for renewing them with or without modification, for revoking them, and for the distribution of funds on such revocation or expiration.

A workman's contract that the provisions of a certified scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of the Act of 1897 is a bar to a claim by his personal representatives to recover damages for fatal injuries under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. Taylor v. Hamstead Colliery Co., (1904) 1 K. B. 838.

Sect. 5 vests in workmen entitled to compensation the rights of the employer against the assurer in respect of his liability under the Act when the employer becomes bankrupt, or, if a company, commences to be wound up.

Sect. 7 applies the Act to masters, seamen, and apprentices to the sea service, but (by sub-sect. (2)) is not to apply to such members of the crew of a fishing vessel as are remunerated by shares in the profits or gross earnings of the working of such vessel, and (by sub-sect. (3)) the section is extended to pilots to whom Part X. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, applies, as if a pilot when employed "on any such ship as aforesaid" were a seaman and a member of the crew. Sect. 8 applies the Act to industrial diseases mentioned in the third schedule. By sect. 13, unless the context otherwise requires, "employer" includes any body of persons corporate or unincorporate, and the legal personal representative of a deceased employer, and where the services of a workman are temporarily lent or let on hire to another person by the person with whom the workman has entered into a contract of service or apprenticeship, the latter shall for the purposes of the Act be deemed to continue to be the employer of the workman whilst he is working for that other person; "Workman" does not include any person employed otherwise than by way of manual labour whose remuneration exceeds 250*l.* a year, or a person whose employment is of a casual nature, and who is employed otherwise than for the purposes of the employer's trade or business, or a member of a police force, or an out worker, or a member of the employer's family dwelling in his house, but save as aforesaid means any person who has entered into or works under a contract of service or apprenticeship with an employer, whether by way of manual labour, clerical work, or otherwise, and whether the contract is expressed or implied, is oral or in writing, any reference to a workman who has been injured shall, where the workman is dead, include a reference to his legal personal representative, or his dependants, or other person to whom or for whose benefit compensation is payable; "Dependants" means such of the members of the workman's family as were wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death, or would, but for the incapacity due to the accident, have been so dependent, and where the workman, being the parent or grandparent of an illegitimate child, leaves such a child so dependent upon his earnings, or being an illegitimate child leaves a parent or grandparent so dependent upon his earnings, shall include such an illegitimate child, and parent or grandparent respectively; "Member of a family" means wife or husband, father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, stepfather, stepmother, son, daughter, grandson, granddaughter, stepson, stepdaughter, brother, sister, half brother, half sister. See also the definition of "Ship," "Vessel," "Seaman," and "Port."

As to the Powers of the Company in regard to Employé's Benefits.

How far companies have power to carry out schemes.

In framing, for the benefit of employé's, any scheme for establishing funds to which the company is to contribute, it is necessary to consider, besides the Truck Acts, whether such contributions are within the powers of the company, for a company cannot expend the funds on any scheme, however excellent, which is outside the scope of its objects. Very commonly the memorandum of association contains express powers to make such contributions as in Form 103, supra, p. 507; but even without any such express powers a company employing labour may do whatever is reasonably necessary to encourage its employé's to use their best endeavours on its behalf. Thus a company may grant a pension to its employé's out of profits, for this is calculated to incite them to special exertions. Henderson v. Bank of Australasia, 40 Ch. D. 170. So, too, it may give them an excursion or entertainment, and it may deal liberally with incapacitated employes (Hampson v. Price's Patent Candle Co., 24 W. R. 754), and with persons dependent on deceased employes.

In all these cases the important point is, is the scheme devised bonâ fide with a view to benefiting the company by enabling it to obtain the best services from its employes? As was said by Bowen, L. J., in Hutton v. West Cork R. Co., 23 C. D. 672: "You cannot say the company has only got power to spend the money which it is bound to pay according to law, otherwise the wheels of business would stop; nor can you say that directors who have got all the powers of the company given to them . . . are always to be limited to the strictest possible view of what the obligations of the company are. They are not to keep their pockets buttoned up unless they are liable in a way which could be enforced at law or in equity. Most businesses require liberal dealings. The test there, again, is not whether it is bonâ fide, but whether, as well as being bonâ fide, it is done within the ordinary scope of the company's business, and whether it is reasonably incidental to the carrying on of the company's business for the company's benefit. Take this sort of instance: A railway company, or the directors of the company, might send down all the porters at a railway station to have tea in the country at the expense of the company. Why should they not? It is for the directors to judge, provided it is a matter which is reasonably incidental to the carrying on of the business of the company; and a company which always treated its employes with Draconian severity, and never allowed them a single inch more than the strict letter of the bond, would soon find itself deserted—at all events, unless labour was very much more easy to obtain in the market than it often is. The law does not say that there are to be no cakes and ale, but there are to be no cakes and ale except such as are required for the benefit of the company."

On the same principle Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Hampson v. Price's Patent Candle Company, 24 W. R. 754, held that the company might lawfully expend a week's wages as gratuities for their servants, because that sort of liberal dealing with servants eases the relation between masters and servants, and is in the end a benefit to the company.

So again in Henderson v. Bank of Australasia, 40 C. D. 170, it was held to be within the power of a company to grant to the family of a deceased officer a pension of 1,500*l.* a year for a period of five years. North, J., referred to the two last-mentioned cases, and said: "I do fail to notice that the sums which were the subject of discussion in the two last cases were considerably less than the sum which is the subject of the present application, but that is a matter with which I conceive I have nothing to do. It is not for a judge to express any opinion upon such matters as whether the amount is too large or too small. In the first place he has no means of forming any opinion about that."

But the benefit to the company being the measure of its powers in such dealings, where a company is in liquidation, it loses its power to pay gratuities, for no benefit can accrue to it—its business having ceased—from the exercise of such liberality. Hutton v. West Cork Rail. Co. (1883), 23 C. D. 654. Accordingly, where a company had recently sold its undertaking to the Wesleyan body, and at two general meetings resolutions were passed and confirmed by large majorities for the voluntary winding-up of the company and for the distribution of the sum of 7,800*l.* among the directors and other officers and servants of the company as a mere gratuity, Joyce, J., held that the majority of the shareholders had no power to vote gratuities to officials so as to bind the minority in a case where the company was being wound up. Stroud v. Royal Aquarium and Summer and Winter Garden Society, Ltd. (1903), W. N. 146; 89 L. T. 243; 19 T. L. R. 656.

In Cyclists Touring Club v. Henderson, (1910) 1 Ch. 179, the club, which was formed to protect the rights and promote the comfort of cyclists on tour, was registered with the sanction of the Board of Trade without the word "Limited" as an association not for gain, but one of the conditions of incorporation allowed payment in good faith of remuneration to officers or servants of the club, or to any member in return for services actually rendered. The duties of the secretary of the club were multifarious and difficult, and on his retirement after many years' service from the secretaryship of the club, though he still remained a member, the club voted him a pension, and the Court held that it was within its powers to do so, it being important to the club, by generous treatment of old servants, to secure the best assistance in furtherance of its work.

Form 362.

1. The 1,000 shares of 1*l.* each mentd in the coy's memdum of asson shall be called "employés' shares."
2. The directors may allot the employés' shares, or any of them, from time to time, to such employés of the coy as they think fit. Before the allotment of an employés' share is made, the full nominal amount thof must be pd up to the coy in cash.
3. Each of the employés' shares shall, whilst it is held by an employé of the coy, rank for dividend as if it were an ordinary share of 10*l.* fully pd up; and whilst not held by an employé of the coy it shall not carry the right to any dividend. An employés' share shall not confer the right to vote, or to attend at general meetings.
4. An employés' share shall not be transferable except as provided by para. 5 of this clause.
5. Whenever an employés' share is allotted, or, pursuant to this clause, is transferred to any employé of the coy, such employé shall be entld to retain and hold the same so long as he remains an employé of the coy; and if by death, resignation, withdrawal, dismissal, or otherwise, he cease to be an employé of the coy, he or his exors or admors shall be bound, upon the request in writing of the directors, to transfer such share to such person as the directors may nominate; and, if such person is not an employé of the coy, such person shall at any time, on the request of the directors, transfer such share to any employé of the coy.
6. If any person who ought, in conformity with the last preceding para. of this clause, to transfer any shares makes default in transferring the same, the directors may, by writing under the common seal, appoint any person to make the transfer on behalf of the person in default, and a transfer by such appointee shall be as effective as if it were duly executed by the person so in default. A certificate under the common seal that such power of appointment has arisen shall be conclusive for all purposes.

7. In this clause "employé of the coy" means and includes any manager, departmental manager, foreman, clerk, or workman, but the term does not include directors or auditors.

Form 383.

Co-operative fund.

Subject as aforesaid the profits of each year available for division shall be applied as follows:—

- (a) Such part not exceeding one-half thereof as shall be determined by the co-operative scheme hereinafter mentioned shall be set aside and applied to the purposes of that fund as hereinafter mentioned.
- (b) The remainder thereof shall be paid as dividends to the holders of ordinary shares rateably and pari passu on the amounts paid thereon respectively.

The co-operative fund shall be paid and distributed among all the directors, servants, and workpeople of the company for the time being in such proportions and generally in such manner as shall be determined by a scheme to be made for that purpose, called "The Co-operative Scheme," and such payments may either be in addition to or substitution for the other remuneration, salary, or wages of the recipient, or partly one and partly the other, as shall be determined by the co-operative scheme. The co-operative scheme shall also determine the proportion of the divisible fund (within the limits aforesaid) of which the co-operative fund shall consist. No co-operative scheme shall come into force until it has been previously approved by a resolution of the company in general meeting, and when once in force shall not be repealed or altered save by such a resolution.

Clauses in ARTICLES as to DEPOSITS.

Form 384.

Provisions as to deposits made by employees with the company.

1. Any employé of the company may, with the consent of the company, open a deposit account with the company, and, until the same is closed, may from time to time pay into such account such sum as such depositor may think fit; and, subject as hereinafter provided, may withdraw all or any of the moneys from time to time standing to the credit of such account.

2. Every payment in to a deposit account opened as aforesaid, must be made to the deposit treasurer of the company, or his deputy, at such place as shall from time to time be fixed by notice posted up in the company's registered office.

3. Each depositor will be furnished with a deposit account book and such book must be produced whenever any sum is deposited on withdrawn, and every deposit or withdrawal, and all interest allowed, shall from time to time be entered in such book by the deposit treasurer aforesaid; and every such pass-book must be left at the office of the deposit treasurer, to be made up when required. Form 384.

4. When a depositor desires to make a withdrawal, he must give at least one calendar month's notice in writing to the deposit treasurer, specifying the amount he desires to withdraw and the day he fixes for withdrawal; but the deposit treasurer may, if he thinks fit, in any particular case, abridge or waive this notice.

5. The day fixed for withdrawal of any sums must be an ordinary working day, and at any time during business hours on that day the depositor, on application to the deposit treasurer, will be entitled to be paid the amount specified in his withdrawal notice aforesaid, and if on the day so fixed he omits to make such withdrawal, or withdraws less than the sum specified, his withdrawal notice shall be deemed to be cancelled, wholly or partially, accordingly.

6. Interest will (subject to clause 7 hereof) be allowed by the company upon the amounts from time to time standing to the credit in such deposit account at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a., and such interest will be credited on the usual quarter days.

Sometimes the rate is made to vary with the rate of profits, but this, by making the depositor a partner, in effect places him in a position, as regards recovery of his loan, at a disadvantage as compared with the ordinary creditors of the company. See sect. 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890.

A good security for the loan may, however, be made by debenture or otherwise. Ex parte Sheil, 4 C. D. 789.

7. No sum shall be deposited with the company unless it is the property of the depositor and is free from any trust, and a depositor shall not borrow for the purpose of making any deposit, or in any way assign or create any mortgage or charge on the amounts standing to the credit of his deposit account. Any depositor acting in breach of this clause will disentitle himself to be paid any interest on the sum deposited.

8. The company may at any time, by notice in writing to the depositor, close his deposit account; and in such case the amounts standing to the credit of such deposit account shall become payable at the expiration of seven days from such notice being given, and payment thereof shall be made at the office of the deposit treasurer. As from the closing of a deposit account as aforesaid, the amount to the credit thereof will cease to carry interest.

9. Upon the closing of a deposit account, whether by withdrawal of the full amount thereof or pursuant to the last preceding clause, the depositor's book must be given up to the company to be cancelled.

Form 384.

10. The deposit treasurer will keep a register of the depositors' addresses, and any notice to a depositor may be given by delivering the same to him personally, or by sending the same through the post, addressed to him at his registered address a/sd; and every notice so sent by post shall be deemed to be served on the day following that on which it is placed in the post office.

11. In these conditions the deposit treasurer means such officer of the coy as shall from time to time be appointed by the coy to discharge the duties of deposit treasurer.

ACQUISITION of SHARES by EMPLOYEES.Form 385.

Acquisition of shares by employees out of savings.

(1) The directors may at any time require any employe of the coy to leave undrawn any part of the emoluments payable by the coy to such employe, and the moneys so left undrawn shall be placed to the credit of such employe in an account to be opened in the books of the coy, and until payment out or investment in preference shares such money shall carry interest at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a., and such interest shall be credited accordingly.

(2) Whenever the directors consider it expedient, they may determine to invest all or any of the moneys standing to the credit of such account in the purchase on behalf of such employe of preference shares in the coy, and thereupon the directors shall give notice to the ppal holders of preference shares, calling on them, in proportion as nearly as may be to the preference shares held by them, to transfer for the consn below mentioned the required number of preference shares to such employe, and to deliver such transfer to the coy to be registered.

(3) Upon the receipt of each such transfer duly executed, the coy shall out of the moneys a/sd pay to the transferor the consn calculated at par; that is to say, at the sum equal to the capital pd upon the shares sold.

(4) If any preference shareholder makes default in executing and delivering such transfer, the coy may authorize the secretary to execute the same in his name and on his behalf, and such execution shall have full effect, and the purchase-money, on execution thereof become payable to the member who made such default.

(5) When any employe has moneys amounting to 100*l.* or upward available for investment under this clause, he may at any time require the directors to invest the same as a/sd, and if the directors do not comply with such request within eight weeks after the same is made he may withdraw such moneys.

(6) In this clause, until otherwise determined by a general meeting, "the ppal shareholders" means exclusively those holders of preference shares who for the time being hold respaly more than twenty preference shares, and no preference share once taken under this clause can again be taken. Form 385.

(7) Any difficulty as to the proportions in which the preference shares should be provided as aforesaid shall be determined by the directors, and their determination shall be conclusive.

(8) Any shares transferred to any employé under this clause shall ipso facto become ordinary shares, and the certificate of title issued to him shall be framed accordingly.

PROFIT-SHARING SCHEME.

(1) From and after the 1st of January, 19—, the surplus (if any) of the clear profits of the company's business beyond such definite sum as is for the time being reserved to the company for its own benefit (hereafter referred to as the "reserved limit") shall be divided into two equal parts, whereof one is to be distributed gratuitously as a bonus among the employés in the manner defined by these rules, and the other to be retained by the company. Form 396.
Method of sharing.

(2) The present reserved limit has been communicated confidentially to —, chartered accountant, and will not be altered for the first three years if the scheme so long subsists. Thereafter it may be raised or reduced by the company, but (unless altered during some month of January) not so as to affect the distribution of profits for the financial year current at the time of alteration. Notice of any alteration will be given to the employés in such manner as to let them know how far such alteration would have affected the last preceding distribution if it then been in force. What is the reserved limit.

(3) The accounts of the business will be audited each year by a chartered accountant, who shall certify the profits (if any) to which the employés are entitled. Accountant's costs.

(4) The employés entitled to share in the profits for any financial year are to be such only as were employed at the commencement of such year, and have furnished a request to be entered on the list of profit-sharers. The acceptance of the terms herein offered is not to be in any way a condition of employment or of promotion. Profit-sharers will be free to become or remain members of any trade or friendly society. Qualifications for profit-sharing.

(5) The scheme is to continue in force only until the company gives notice to the employés putting an end thereto, but such notice, unless given during some month of January, will not take effect until the end of the financial year current at the time it is given. Duration of scheme.

Form 386.Method of distribution.

(6) The employés' share of profits accruing in each financial year is (subject as after mentd) to be distributed among them in proportion to their respective salaries or wages at the commencement of such year, taken for one week, exclusive of premiums, overtime, or other variable allowances. In making any year's distribution, it shall be permissible to the coy to carry forward undivided to the credit of the following year's employés' share of profits any sum which, if divided, would have given to them less than one week's wages calculated as aforesaid.

Payment of bonus.

(7) Each employé's bonus shall, within two months of the end of the financial year, be paid into his account at some savings bank, and will then become his absolute property.

Employés leaving.

(8) An employé whose service ends by notice given on either side, by illness, or by death, will have a right to bonus for the financial year in which his service ends in proportion to the portion of the year elapsed to the end of the month preceding the end of his service. Any employé leaving under circumstances other than before mentd shall lose such right. Any sum lost to an employé under this rule does not accrue to the coy, but goes wholly to increase the distribution to the other employés.

Proviso in event of damage.

(9) If an employé ceases to be in the service of the company by reason of any wilful act or default on his part causing loss or damage to the coy, or is at the time indebted to the company, his bonus shall be applied to making good such loss or damage, or to payment of such debt.

Partnership not conferred.

(10) The employés are not to have either the rights or be under the liabilities of partners, and accordingly they are not to intermeddle in the management, or be entitled to investigate or discovery of the accounts of the business.

Alteration of rules.

(11) Alterations or modifications of these rules which experience may suggest as desirable may from time to time be made by the coy, but such changes, unless made during some month of January, are not to take effect until the end of the financial year current at the time they are made.

of shares.

With reference to your offer to transfer or procure the allotment to me of — fully pd-up 17. shares in the capital of L. M., Limited below referred to as "the coy"), on the terms here set forth, I desire to say that I accept that offer, and undertake to perform and observe the sd terms. Those terms are as follows:—

1. I am not to sell, mortgage, charge, or otherwise dispose of the sd shares until after ten years from the 1st January, 19—. And if I do or attempt to do anything in contravention of this provision, or if within the sd period I cease to be employed by the coy, the sd shares are at once to revert to you, and I will on demand transfer the same to you or your nominees. Not to sell.

2. During the sd period of ten years the certificate or certificates relating to the sd shares shall be lodged with, and retained by, the coy on your behalf. Deposit of certificates.

3. If at any time after the sd period of ten years, and within twenty years from the date hof, I shall desire to transfer the sd shares or any of them, I will in the first instance give you notice in writing of such desire, and in such case you shall have the option of purchasing the sd shares at their market value; and if there be no market value, or any difference arises between us as to the market value, then at such sum as the auditor of the coy shall certify to be in his opinion the fair value thof. Notice before transfer.

4. If I shall die within twenty years from the date hof, or shall, after ten years and within twenty years from the date hof, cease to be employed by the coy, you or your nominee shall have the option of purchasing the sd shares at a sum equal to the nominal value thof; and such option shall be exercisable at any time within — months after such death or cesser of employment as the case may be. Death.

5. Where you exercise any such option as aforesaid, it shall rest with you to fix the time and place for completion; and at the time and place so fixed I will transfer the shares on payment of the purchase-money; and if at the time and place aforesaid I make default in transferring the same, or if I make default in transferring under clause 1 hof, you may authorize any officer of the coy on my behalf to sign a transfer of such shares to you or your nominees, and a transfer signed by him shall be effective. Completion.

6. Any notice to me or my legal personal representatives may be served by sending the same through the post addressed to me at my address below mentioned, and any notice so served shall be deemed to have reached me or my legal personal representatives at the expiration of — days after it is posted. Participation Certificate on the footing of £—— Ordinary Shares

This is to certify that —, of — (hmftr called "the certificate holder"), whilst he is in the employment of the above-named coy (hmftr called "the coy"), will be entld, in addition to his salary, to payments varying with the annual amount of the profits of the coy as follows:—

1. The auditors of the coy shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the close of each financial year of the coy, certify in writing what are the net profits of the coy's business of such year.

2. In so certifying, such a sum shall be deducted for depreciation of plant as shall be equal to 5 p.c. of the value of such plant at the time being of the coy, and such a sum shall be deducted for reserve fund not exceeding 10 p.c. of such profits as the directors consider necessary to place to reserve, and in addition there shall be deducted a sum sufficient to pay dividend upon the preference shares (if any) in the capital of the coy for the time being outstanding, and the profits less these deductions are below referred to as "the surplus profits."

3. The auditors of the coy shall also certify what rate of dividend the surplus profits afsd would be sufficient to pay on the capital pd up on the ordinary shares in the capital of the coy for the time being outstanding.

4. If a dividend on £—— of ordinary shares at the rate afsd would exceed the salary for the year payable to the certificate holder, then and in such case the coy will pay to the certificate holder a sum equal to the excess as and by way of further remuneration for his services.

5. This certificate is one of a series of like certificates issued, or which may from time to time be issued, by the coy to the managers or employes of the coy by way of special inducement to promote the interest of the coy.

6. Notice in writing will be given by the coy to the certificate holder when any payment becomes due under this certificate.

7. At the expiration of fourteen days after each payment afsd becomes due, the coy will pay to the certificate holder the amount payable to him under this certificate.

8. In order to obtain payment of such amount, the certificate holder must produce this certificate to the coy, and must sign and deliver to the coy a receipt for the payment, and must permit the coy to endorse hereon a note of such payment.

9. When the certificate holder ceases to be employed by the coy he must forthwith surrender this certificate to the coy to be cancelled.

10. This certificate and the benefit thof are strictly personal, and are not transferable by the certificate holder; and if the holder shall at any time assign, mortgage, charge, or part with possession or control of this certificate, or the interest of the holder thereunder or any pt thof, or attempt so to do, the coy may, by notice in writing to the holder, declare this certificate and all the interest of the holder thereunder forfeited, and thereupon the same shall be forfeited accordingly, and this certificate shall be surrendered to the coy to be cancelled.

Form 388.

11. A notice to the certificate holder hereunder may be served by the coy on him personally, or by sending the same through the post addressed to him at his address above mentd or at his last known place of address, and shall in such latter case be deemed to be served at the expiration of twelve hours after the same is posted.

the same, be advanced to the coo by way of loan, repayable on demand, and carrying interest at 5 p.c.p.a., and the coo may at any time pay off any moneys so advanced, and any moneys in the hands of the trees upon the trusts hof, which the coo shall at any time be unwilling to accept on loan, may be invested in any investments by law permitted to trees, and the investments thof may at any time be varied as may seem expedient to the trees, or may be placed on deposit with any bank or banks as the trees may think expedient.

6. The coo proposes to contribute each year to the fund the sum of £— —, or such other sum as the coo shall from time to time determine, but the coo is not to be bound to make any such contribution.

7. The fund is to be regarded as primarily established for the benefit of employés whose character and length of service may, in the judgment of the trees, entitle them to a claim on it, and, secondly, for the purpose of assisting survivors who may have been dependent on deceased employés, and whose circumstances may necessitate some help.

8. The establishment of the fund is not to be regarded as in any way relieving employés of their duty to make such provision for old age and those dependent upon them as their means will permit.

9. Any employé of the coo who has been in the service of the coo or its predecessors in business for at least twenty-five years, and has completed the sixtieth year of his age, may apply for a retiring allowance.

10. Except in cases where ill-health or special circumstances shall in the opinion of the directors, justify it, no allowance shall be granted to an employé who is not sixty years of age and has not completed twenty years of service with the coo or its predecessors in business.

11. Any employé who has been in the service of the coo or its predecessors in business for at least twenty years, and has become mentally or physically incapacitated, may be granted an annual or other allowance subject to the provisions hof.

12. Any employé under sixty years of age who shall be in receipt of a retiring allowance shall, when required by the trees, be bound to satisfy them, by medical certificate or otherwise, that there has been no material change in the circumstances in which the allowance was granted.

13. The trees may withdraw or modify or determine any allowance when, in their opinion, the circumstances or conduct of the recipient shall justify them in so doing.

14. An allowance as aforesaid is to be regarded as strictly personal, and cannot be assigned, charged, or alienated in any way, and any attempt to assign, charge, or alienate shall determine the allowance, but without prejudice to the trees' discretion to continue the same if they think fit after an interval or otherwise.

Form 389.

15. In fixing the amount of each allowance, and in making any modification therein, the trees may exercise their discretion with reference to all the circumstances; but, without prejudice to such discretion, it is declared that the following is the retiring allowance which it is contemplated will be payable, that is to say—

Discretion of trustees in fixing amounts. Subject to such discretion, certain rules shall be observed.

(a) Until such time as the fund shall have reached the sum of 5,000*l.* the retiring allowance per week after twenty years' service shall be one-third of the person's average weekly earnings for the last three years of his employment, but so that such allowance shall not exceed 15*s.* per week.

(b) After the fund shall have reached the sum of 5,000*l.* and upwards, the retiring allowance per week after twenty years' service shall be one-half of the person's average weekly earnings for the last three years of his employment, but so that such allowance shall not exceed 20*s.* per week.

16. Any employé who shall be dismissed, or shall retire from the service of the coy in consequence of misconduct, shall be disqualified from receiving any allowance hereunder.

Retirement of employé through misconduct.

Where by the rules an allowance was to be made to an employé retiring with the consent of the directors, it was held that an employé who was required to resign, and resigned accordingly, did not come within the words. Stephenson v. Joint Stock Bank, 20 T. L. R. 8.

17. The trees may grant such temporary or other allowance to widows and other dependants of employés who may die in the service of the coy, or shortly after leaving the service of the coy, as in their absolute discretion they may think proper.

Temporary allowances to widows, &c.

18. The trees may meet together for the dispatch of business, adjourn, and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit, and may determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business. Until otherwise determined three trees shall form a quorum. A tree may at any time convene a meeting of the trees to be held at the office of the coy. Questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes, and in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote. A tree in the United Kingdom shall not be entitled to notice of a meeting of the trees.

Meetings and proceedings of trustees.

19. A meeting of the trees for the time being at which a quorum is present shall be competent to exercise all or any of the authorities, powers, and discretions by these presents vested in the trees generally.

Quorum

20. The trees shall cause proper minutes to be kept and entered, in a book provided for the purpose, of all their resolutions and proceedings, and any such minutes of any meeting of the trees, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of such meeting, or by the chairman of Minutes.

Form 389. the next succeeding meeting, shall be receivable as prima facie evidence of the matters stated in such minutes.

Register of employees in receipt of allowances.

21. A register shall be kept by the trees in which shall be entered the names and addresses of the persons for the time being, and from time to time, who are in receipt of allowances hereunder, and of the trees for the time being hof.

Notices

22. For the purposes hof any notice to any tree, or to any person in receipt of any allowance hereunder, may be given by sending the same through the post, in a letter addressed to him at his registered place of address, and any notice so sent shall be deemed to be served on the day following that on which it is posted.

Alteration of regulations herein.

23. The coy may from time to time, by instrument in writing, under its common seal, with the assent in writing of the trees, alter all or any of the regulations contained in these presents for the time being relating to the fund liby constituted, and make new regulations to the exclusion of, or in addition to, all or any of the regulations for the time being relating to such fund; and the regulations so made and for the time being in force shall be deemed to be regulations, in relation to the fund, of the same validity as if they had been originally contained in these presents, and shall be subject in like manner to be altered or modified by any subsequent instrument in writing as aforesaid. For the purposes hof all the provisions herein contained shall be deemed to be regulations in relation to the fund.

Full discretion of trustees.

24. The trees, in the exercise of the authorities and discretions liby vested in them, shall have an absolute and uncontrolled discretion, and may exercise the same from time to time, and at any time.

Indemnity to trustees.

25. The trees shall resply be indemnified against all liabilities incurred by them in the execution of the trusts hof, and shall have a lien on the fund for such indemnity.

Directors and others as trustees of fund.

26. The trees of the fund shall always include two of the directors of the coy, the secretary of the coy, and one other person to be appointed by the majority for the time being of the committee of the sick fund which has been established in relation to the coy. The sd — and — are two of the present directors, the sd — is the secretary, and the sd — has been nominated by the committee of the sick fund.

New trustees.

27. The statutory power of appointing new trees in the place of any tree appointed in respect of his being the managing director or director or secretary of the coy shall be vested in the coy, and the statutory power of appointing a new tree in the place of any tree nominated by the committee of the sick fund shall be vested in the majority of the committee of the sick fund.

Director or secretary of company vacating office

28. Any tree who, having been appointed as managing director or a director or secretary of the coy, vacates office as such, shall be deemed thereupon to desire to be discharged from the trusts hof for the purposes of the exercise of the statutory power of appointing new trees. Form 389.

29. If the coy shall at any time give to the trees notice in writing stating that the coy does not intend to make any further contributions to the fund, or an order shall be made or an effective resolution shall be passed for the winding-up of the coy, or when the longest liver of the now existing grandchildren of His late Majesty King Edward VII. shall die, the fund shall be realised and shall be distributed amongst the male employes of the coy in such proportions as shall be determined to be just and equitable by an arbitrator to be appointed as here provided, and accordingly such person shall forthwith be appointed arbitrator as the coy and the trees hof shall unanimously appoint, and if such appointment is not made within three calendar months after such order or effective resolution is made or passed, then the majority of the trees hof may request the President for the time being of the Incorporated Law Society of to appoint such arbitrator, and such President shall have authority to appoint him accordingly.

to retire from trusts.

Determination of trusts and distribution by arbitration.

30. The determination of the arbitrator appointed under the foregoing clause shall be absolute and final, and all the costs, charges, and expenses of and incident to the realisation and distribution of the fund, including the remuneration of the arbitrator, shall be payable out of the fund.

Determination of arbitrator absolute.

The directors (other than employé directors) may from time to time elect or appoint any persons to be employé directors, but so that the total number of the directors at any one time shall not exceed the maximum number provided by, or in accordance with, clause and so that the total number of employé directors at any one time shall not exceed three.

4. If and whenever any of the directors shall be employé directors, the one of such employé directors who has been longest in office shall retire immediately prior to the first ordinary meeting to be held in each year, and the directors (other than employé directors) may, immediately before such ordinary meeting, fill the vacated office by either re-electing or re-appointing the retired employé director, or electing or appointing any other person who is qualified to be elected as an employé director. As between employé directors who have been in office an equal length of time, the directors (other than employé directors) shall decide which of the employé directors shall retire. The directors (other than employé directors) may from time to time remove any employé director from office before the expiration of his period of office.

5. No election or appointment, or re-election or re-appointment, of an employé director shall be valid unless the same shall be made with the consent of an absolute majority for the time being of the directors (other than employé directors), which consent shall be testified or evidenced by joint or separate consent or consents in writing signed by the consenting directors.

Trust deed constituting guarantee fund (re a banking

Form 392.

company).

WHEREAS the bank has determined to establish a guarantee fund for the purposes hereafter appearing: AND WHEREAS the said — and — have agreed to act as trustees for the purposes of these presents

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS AGREED AS FOLLOWS:—

Guarantee
fund.

1. A fund, to be called "the guarantee fund," shall be established, and such fund shall be formed by contributions to be made by officers and clerks in the employment of the bank, who shall become subscribers to the said fund in manner following:

Subscriptions of officers and clerks.

2. Every officer or clerk who desires to become a subscriber to the said fund shall apply to the bank to fix the amount of his security, and, when that has been fixed, shall sign and deliver to the bank a letter as follows:—

"To the V. Bank of X., Limited.

"Gentlemen,—My security having been fixed by you at £— I beg to apply for liberty to become a subscriber to the guarantee fund in respect of a guarantee of £—, and I request your consent thereto, and in consequence thereof agree to be bound by the provisions of the trust deed constituting the said fund.

"Yours, &c.,"

Discretion of bank as to admittance of applicants.

3. It shall be for the bank to determine whether an applicant as aforesaid shall or shall not be admitted to subscribe to the fund, and notice of such determination shall be given to such applicant.

Register.

4. A register of subscribers to the said fund shall be kept by the bank, and in such register there shall be entered the name of each subscriber to the fund, and the amount of the guarantee in respect of which he subscribes, and the time from which he is a subscriber for that amount, and the time when he ceases to be a subscriber.

Rates of contributions.

5. Every applicant who is admitted to subscribe as aforesaid shall be bound to contribute to the fund a premium of 2s. 6d. p.c.p.a. on the amount fixed as his security, and such contribution must be made by equal quarterly payments on the usual quarter days.

Sometimes provision is made for contributions by the company, e.g., a sum equal to the yearly contributions of the subscribers until the fund amounts to a specified sum, and that when this fund amounts to that sum subscribers who have subscribed for ten years shall not pay further subscriptions, unless and until the fund is reduced to less than the specified amount. Sometimes it is provided, that when the fund exceeds a specified sum, the surplus shall be carried to the superannuation fund.

6. If any subscriber makes default for more than seven days in paying any contribution due from him as aforesaid, the bank may, by notice in writing, exclude such subscriber from the benefit of the fund, and thenceforth he shall forfeit all interest in the fund; but the bank, in its discretion, may annul any such forfeiture on such terms and conditions as it may think expedient.

Form 392.

Exclusion and forfeiture on default in contributions.

7. The fund shall be regarded as a security to the bank against all defalcations and misfeasances by the subscribers thereto for the time being, but, as regards each subscriber, such security shall be limited to the amount in respect of which he has been a subscriber.

Fund to be a security against defalcations.

8. Whenever the bank certifies under its seal that any subscriber to the fund has been guilty of any defalcation or misfeasance, and the amount necessary to compensate the bank therefor, then and in any and every such case the bank may withdraw from the fund and appropriate a sum equal to the amount so certified, but not exceeding the amount of the security in respect of which such employé has been contributing.

On defalcation bank may indemnify itself from fund.

9. In the event of any subscriber to the fund voluntarily retiring from the service of the bank, or dying, such subscriber, or his legal personal representatives, as the case may be, shall, provided such subscriber has not been guilty at any time of any defalcation or misfeasance in relation to the bank, be entitled to payment out of the fund of a sum equal to one-half the amount of the premiums paid by him to the fund.

Allowance to a subscriber on retirement where no default.

10. A subscriber to the fund who is dismissed by the bank from its service for any cause whatsoever shall forfeit all interest in the fund.

Forfeiture on dismissal.

11. All contributions to the fund shall be paid to the bank, and the bank shall keep a proper account thereof; but it shall not be bound to keep such contributions separate from the general assets of the bank, or be regarded as a trustee of such fund.

Bank to hold fund and keep separate account.

12. The bank may at any time by deed dissolve the fund, and in that case the fund shall be applied, first, in making good to the bank all sums certified by the bank under clause 8 hereof, and the surplus shall be applied, so far as the same may extend, in paying off to each subscriber who has not been guilty of any defalcation or misfeasance in relation to the bank, one-half the amount of the premiums subscribed by him, and the residue shall belong to the bank.

Dissolution and distribution.

Sometimes it is provided that the fund shall be the absolute property of the bank, and that no subscriber thereto shall be entitled to require any account thereof, and that the bank may at any time put an end to the fund, and that any moneys at the credit of the fund shall in that case belong absolutely to the bank.

13. The bank may at any time by deed alter all or any of the regulations and provisions herein contained, and may make new regulations and provisions to the exclusion of or in addition to all or Alteration of these presents.

Form 392. any regulations and provisions herein contained, and any regulations and provisions so made by deed shall be deemed to be regulations and provisions of the same validity as if they had been originally contained in these presents, and shall be subject in like manner to be altered or modified.

Consultative committee of officers.

14. The bank may at any time, and from time to time, appoint any of the officers of the bank to act as a consultative committee for the purposes of these presents, and may from time to time define the duties and powers of such committee, and may modify or dissolve such committee.

Additional security may be required by bank.

15. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the bank from requiring or taking from any subscriber to the fund any additional or special security for his fidelity.

Subscribers not absolved from default notwithstanding their subscriptions.

16. The personal liability of every subscriber to the fund to make good his defalcations and misfeasances shall remain and subsist in every respect as if the sd guarantee fund had not been established, and each subscriber shall enter into a bond for faithful service framed in accordance with the form set forth in the schedule hto.

17. The statutory power of appointing new trees hof shall be vested in the coy.

Schemes under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.

As already pointed out, companies are often "employers" within the meaning of this statute, and, where they are large employers of labour and are not satisfied with the terms offered to them by companies assuring against accidents, they should consider and take advice with reference to what schemes may be lawfully and can be expediently entered into with a view to the common benefit of both employers and employed, and in substitution for the hard-and-fast provisions of the Act. Such an alternative is permissible. See Taylor v. Hamstead Colliery Co., (1904) 1 K. B. 838, 845, where Collins, M. R., says: "The provisions of the scheme are substituted for the provisions of the Act." The workman is given an option by sect. 1 (2) (b) to proceed under the Act or apart from the Act, and the exercise of his option is conclusive. Edwards v. Godfrey, (1899) 2 Q. B. 333. It may be that the mutual insurance of employers is the best course to adopt. (See Form 135, supra.)

A scheme has been adopted by at least one Government Department (the Admiralty).

NOTICES.

CHAPTER XII.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

NOTICES have frequently to be given by a company to its members and to others under the Act, or under the company's articles, or otherwise.

A notice must be properly authenticated, and as to this sect. 117 of the Act of 1908, replacing sect. 64 of the Act of 1862, provides that "a document or proceeding requiring authentication by a company may be signed by a director, secretary, or other authorized officer of the company, and need not be under its common seal." These words do not import, it is conceived, that the signature must be a personal one; it may be by some agent. The Queen v. The Justices of Kent, L. R. 8 Q. B. 305; Morton v. Copeland, 16 C. B. 535; Re Whitley, 32 C. D. 337; Bennett v. Brumfitt, L. R. 3 C. P. 28. The term "document" in sect. 117 includes summons, notice, order and other legal process and registers. See sect. 285 of the Act.

Notices.

Authentication.

As to the mode of service on members, prima facie a notice by the company to a member must be personal, but the articles of association generally contain special provisions allowing of service by post, and these provisions are effective. See supra, p. 778.

A notice, whatever its object, must be fairly and intelligibly framed. It must not, that is, be misleading or equivocal. It must convey clearly to the mind of an ordinarily intelligent person the required information. See supra, p. 694. If it is equivocal, it is not enough that the sender of the notice intended that it should be read in one way, for the receiver is entitled to put any reasonable construction on it; and if according to that alternative construction the notice is insufficient, the sender is estopped from saying that the other is the true one; and so if the notice is misleading it is bad, for it fails of its end. A benevolent construction cannot be applied to such a document.

Construction of notices.

"It seems to me," said Bowen, L. J., in Alexander v. Simpson (1889), 43 C. D. 139, "to be impossible for us to adopt the view that a benevolent construction ought to be put on commercial notices. What we have to consider is not what is the result of any particular construction, but what was the meaning which ordinary business men would attribute to the notice at the time they receive it. But a notice may fairly assume that the shareholders have knowledge of some documents; for, as Lord Selborne, L. C., said in Campbell's case, 9 Ch. 122, "all the shareholders of a company must have imputed to them knowledge of the Acts of Parliament [that is, the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, or, now, the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908], and also of their own memorandum and articles of association." See also per Lord Cairns, L. J., Sewell's case, 3 Ch. 140; and the observations of Lord Selborne, L. C., in Oakhani Oil Co. v. Crum, 8 App. Cas. p. 71. See further as to notices of general meetings, pp. 692 et seq.

Some matters must be brought pointedly to the attention of the shareholders; for example, where the directors are interested in a contract or matter which is to be submitted to a meeting for confirmation or approval, it appears to be desirable, and in some case absolutely necessary, to disclose the fact in the notice convening the meeting or in some accompanying articles. Thus, in Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., (1898) 1 Ch. 358, where an agreement providing for the sale of the company's undertaking was to be submitted, and as part consideration a substantial sum was to be paid to the directors of the selling company as compensation for loss of office, and the notice convening the meeting simply described the agreement as an agreement for the sale of the undertaking, it was held that this was insufficient. "I do not think," said Lindley, L. J., in that case, "that this notice discloses the purpose for which the meeting is convened. It is not a notice disclosing that purpose fairly, and in a sense not to mislead those to whom it is addressed. It follows that . . . the resolution which was passed under this notice is not one which is binding upon absent or dissenting shareholders."

Again, in Tiessen v. Henderson, (1899) 1 Ch. 861, the notice called the meeting with view to reconstruction, and to approve of an agreement, &c., but it did not disclose the fact that several of the directors were interested. It was held that the notice was insufficient, and that it ought to have disclosed the material facts. "The man I am protecting," said Kekewich, J., "is not the dissentient but the absent shareholder—the man who is absent because, having received and with more or less care looked at this circular, he comes to the conclusion that on the whole he will not oppose the scheme but leave it to the majority. I cannot tell whether he would have left it to the majority of the meeting to decide if he had known the real facts. He did not know the real facts, and I think, therefore, the resolution is not binding upon him."

With the above cases may be contrasted Grant v. United Kingdom

Switchback Railways Co., 40 C. D. 135. In that case the Court of Appeal, affirming Mr. Justice Chitty, held that a resolution confirming an agreement in which the directors were interested was effective, although the notice did not expressly disclose the fact that the directors were so interested. "It was argued," said Cotton, L. J., that the meeting was not good because the notice convening it gave no intimation that the contract was one which could not be carried into effect without the sanction of a general meeting. I think that the difficulty was sufficiently suggested by the mere fact of a meeting being called, for, had it not been for the fact that the directors were interested, no meeting would have been necessary."

See also Southall v. British Mutual Life Assurance Society (1871), 6 Ch. 614, in which it does not appear that the fact that the directors were interested was disclosed in the notice.

As to what business can be transacted at a meeting where the articles require the notice to specify the general nature of the business, and the notice has specially mentioned it, see supra, p. 692.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, a notice convening a general meeting, to be effective, must convene the same unconditionally; and accordingly to say that "if" a specified event happens a meeting will be held on a specified day and at a specified time and place is not sufficient. Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 139. But where the articles provide, as at p. 696, supra, that whenever it is intended to pass a special resolution, the two meetings may be convened by one and the same notice, and it shall be no objection that the notice only convenes the second meeting conditionally on the resolution being passed by the requisite majority at the first meeting, such a provision is valid. See North of England Steamship Co., (1905) 2 Ch. 15, C. A. The Court of Appeal, in that case, distinguished Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 139, in which case the articles did not contain any such special provision.

Conditional notice.

The Acts or articles very commonly provide that so many days' notice shall in certain cases be given, e.g., of a call or meeting. Very commonly the words are supplemented by the addition of the words "at the least," or "not less than," or of the word "clear"; and where thus supplemented, it is well settled that the number of days must be computed exclusive of the day on which the notice is served or to be regarded served, and also of the day of the meeting, resolution, or other matter. Thus, sect. 69 of the Act (1908) provides for the passing of a special resolution, and that the resolution, after being passed at one meeting, is to be confirmed at a second meeting held "at an interval of not less than fourteen days" from the date of the meeting at which such resolution was first passed. This means that there must be an interval of fourteen clear days between the two meetings. Railway Sleepers Co., 29 C. D. 204; Rex v. Salop, 8 A. & E. 173.

Clear days.

And even when the provision as to notice is not thus supplemented, it is doubtful whether the number of days must not be computed in like manner, for in the case last mentioned, Littledale, J., said "I do not see any distinction between 'fourteen days' and 'at least fourteen days.'"

Sect. 69 of the Act (1908) requires that the resolution shall be confirmed at a subsequent general meeting . . . held after an interval of not . . . more than one month from the date of the meeting at which . . . a resolution was first passed. "'Month' here means 'calendar month.'" Sect. 3 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63).

Abroad. As to notice to shareholders who are abroad, see supra, p. 779.

Time by post. As to the time when the notice served by post is to be considered to be served, see supra, p. 780.

Executors of deceased members. As to when a notice is to be served on "the members," see Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, (1899) 2 Ch. 556.

Unauthorized notice by secretary. A notice given by the secretary without authority is, prima facie, irregular (see supra, p. 740), but it may be ratified by the board (ibid.).

Waiver of irregular notice. Sometimes the rule in Royal British Bank v. Turquand (supra, p. 79) applies, and the company may accordingly be precluded from objecting that the notice was irregular.

Outsiders. As to notices to outsiders, these have to be authenticated in accordance with sect. 117 of the Act (1908), set forth at the commencement of this chapter. As to the mode of service, they should, prima facie, be served on the party personally. If the party to be served is a company under the Act, the notice may, as provided by sect. 116 of the Act, be served by leaving it at or sending it by post to the registered office of the company.

Sect. 116 above referred to must be read in conjunction with sect. 26 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, which runs thus: -

"Where an Act passed after the commencement of this Act authorizes or requires any document to be served by post, whether the expression 'serve,' or the expression 'give,' or 'send,' or any other expression is used, then, unless the contrary intention appears, the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying, and posting a letter containing the document and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post" (sect. 26).

Where the party to be served is not a company, a notice may generally be served through the post; but, if so served, it will rest with the company to prove that it did in fact reach the party to be served. Proof, however, that it was duly addressed and posted, and has not been returned to the Dead Letter Office, may afford prima facie evidence of service.

Oral notices from company. As to oral notices, there are many cases in which oral notices may be given by a company. Trueman's case, (1894) 3 Ch. 272. A company can give an oral notice by its agent duly authorized. Notice to a managing director in that character on a matter affecting the business of the company under his management is notice to the company. Jaegen, &c. Co. v. Vallen, 77 L. T. 180.

A company, like an ordinary person, is subject to the rules of constructive notice; that is, notice which, though not actual notice, is imputed to a person by a Court of law or equity. Thus, notice to the company's agent in any particular matter is notice to the company. Holland v. Hart, L. R. 6 Ch. 681; Blackburn v. Vigors, 12 App. Cas. 531, 543, unless the agent is guilty of fraud on his principal (Cave v. Cave, 15 Ch. D. 639), in which case, of course, the presumption is that he will not disclose his own fraud. So notice may be imputed where the company has knowledge of a fact which should have led to further inquiry. James v. Smith, 1 Ha. 43; Wall v. Lord Egmont, 1 De M. & G. 460; 9 Ha. 449; A. W. Hall & Co., 37 Ch. D. 712; and see sect. 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882. Knowledge of a fact by a single director is not necessarily notice to the company (Hampshire Land Co., (1896) 2 Ch. 743; Marseilles Co., L. R. 7 Ch. 163; Young v. David Payne & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 609); nor is a company to be taken to have notice of all its secretary knows, e.g., of a matter communicated to him as secretary of another company, for he is under no obligation to pass the knowledge on. Fenwick, Stobart & Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 507.

Constructive notice

Allotment Letters.

An application for shares is usually made by letter signed by the applicant or his agent (see p. 48), accompanied by a deposit of so much per share in respect of the shares applied for, and the company's acceptance of this offer is usually signified by allotment and notice thereof to the allottee. As a general rule, an allotment without notice to the allottee is not sufficient to bind him. The applicant has offered to take the shares; and, if the company is minded to bind him by contract, it must, in accordance with the ordinary rule, not merely accept the offer, but notify such acceptance to him or to his agent duly authorized to receive notice of allotment. See supra, p. 51. Until such notice of allotment the applicant is entitled to withdraw his application. See supra, p. 257.

Allotment letters

As to the importance and operation of letters of allotment, see supra, p. 51.

A notice of allotment may, as a general rule, be served by post, and it will take effect as from the time it is posted, even though it should not reach the allottee. See supra, p. 52.

Hence the importance of preparing and sending out proper letters of allotment, and of making and preserving careful record of the names and addresses of the persons to whom such notices are sent, and of the contents of the notices, and of the persons who prepared and posted them respectively; for, if any dispute should subsequently arise, the company is thus in a position to prove posting of the requisite notices of allotment, i.e., by affidavit of the person who posted same, such person being allowed to refresh his memory by referring to the contemporaneous entries.

By the joint operation of the Stamp Act, 1891, and sect. 9 of the Finance Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), a letter of allotment is liable to a stamp duty of 6d. unless the nominal amount of what is allotted is less than 5*l.*, in which case the duty is only 1*d.* See supra, p. 51. The stamp must be impressed; nevertheless, an unstamped letter of allotment may be sufficient to show that notice was given of the allotment so as to make a contract. Whitley Partners 28 W. R. 241; Steel's case, 42 L. T. 11; W. N. (1879) 217.

[Date.]

SIR, — I beg to inform you that the directors have allotted to you of the above-mentd New — 5*l*. Preference Shares to which you are enttl in right of the Ordinary Shares held by you in this coy as shown by the Register of Members on the — instant, being one new share for every 100*l*. of stock in accordance with, and subject to the terms of the resolution passed at the Extraordinary General Meeting of the coy held on the — of —

A circular to existing members offering them further shares is not a prospectus within sect. 81 (7) of the Companies Act, 1908. See supra, p. 178.

The first payment or deposit of 2*l*. per share will be due on the — next, and unless the same be pd on or before that date the allotment will be forfeited.

It is not proposed to take payment in anticipation of calls.

You are at liberty to renounce this allotment in favour of any other person, provided you fill up and sign the Form of Renunciation (No. 2), and that the person in whose favour you renounce signs the Form of Acceptance (No. 1).

In case you wish to renounce a portion only of the shares offered divided allotment letters will be granted on or before the — of — next; the present allotment letter to be returned to me with the applicon.

The dividends on the shares will be pd at the same time as the dividends on the Ordinary Stock of the coy. each half-year.

Capitalisation of Profits.

Cases very commonly occur in which it is desired to capitalise undivided profits. If the issued shares are only in part paid up, the capitalisation can be effected by declaring a bonus out of the undivided profits and making a call payable at the same date. But more commonly what is desired is to issue paid-up bonus shares to the members and at the same time to carry from reserve to capital account a corresponding amount. Such a transaction cannot be carried out exactly on the lines above indicated, for paid-up shares cannot be issued unless they are paid up by some one other than the company. Now the reserve fund belongs to the company, and to issue shares on the footing that the company is to pay them up out of the reserve fund is irregular, for the payment is by the company. In order to compass what is desired, it is necessary to declare a bonus or dividend payable out of reserve (free of income tax) so that each member may have an individual right, and then this indebtedness of the company for the bonus or dividend can be satisfied by the issue of paid-up shares.

Form 405.

Where capitalisation is contemplated, it is necessary to attend to the following directions:—

- a) See that the reserve fund clause authorizes the payment thereof of a bonus or dividend to the members, and, if needs be, alter the clause. See supra, p. 754, clause (17), and infra, Form 474.
- b) See that there is sufficient to the credit of the reserve fund to cover the dividend or bonus without diminishing the fund too much.
- c) See that the company has shares sufficient to satisfy the bonus or dividend, and, if needs be, increase the capital.
- d) See that the articles authorize the satisfaction of a dividend or bonus by the issue of paid-up shares, for prima facie dividends must be paid in cash (Hoole v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. 3 Ch. 262; Wood v. Odessa Tramways Co., 42 Ch. D. 645; see supra, pp. 767, 768), and, if needs be, alter them.
- e) If there is no such authority, and it would be inconvenient to alter the articles, see that the shares to be offered in satisfaction are likely to be accepted by the allottees. Sometimes there is practical certainty as to this—e.g., where the shares to be allotted will be worth much more than par—for a man is not likely to elect to take 100% in cash if by taking shares he would get 150% worth.
- f) Bear in mind sect. 88 of the Companies Act, 1908: for, if the transaction is to be carried out without giving the members the unconditional right to take the dividend or bonus in cash, the transaction may not amount to a cash payment, and it will therefore be necessary to file a contract "constituting the title" of the allottees to the allotment. See Form 52.

The following Forms indicate one mode of carrying out a capitalisation:—

Some companies insert the words "in exchange for your allotment letter and bankers' receipts" before the words "If you." But a company has no right to make such a condition unless the prospectus expressly so provides; and it seems scarcely fair to call on the allottee to part with the documents which belong to him and may be of value to him. Even where property is conveyed to a purchaser, he is not called on to surrender for ever the agreement and the receipt for the deposit; why, then, should an allottee be put at a greater disadvantage?

 Description —

Sect. 86 of the Companies Act, 1908, provides that an allotment made by company to an applicant in contravention of the foregoing provisions of the Act (see sect. 85, supra, p. 9) shall be voidable at the instance of the applicant within one month after the holding of the statutory meeting of the company and not later, and shall be so voidable notwithstanding that the company is in course of being wound up. The above is a formal avoidance; but it is not essential to express the avoidance in formal terms; it is enough if the notice clearly puts an end to the contract. After allotment is once made, though irregularly, it is only voidable at the option of the shareholder. The company cannot insist on paying back the application moneys, for the shareholder may prefer to keep the shares (Barton v. Bean, (1908) 2 Ch. 240); nor is it necessary that the rescinding shareholder should take actual legal proceedings to avoid the contract, within the month. Notice of avoidance followed by prompt legal proceedings, though after the month, is sufficient. Re National Motor Co. (1909) 2 Ch. 228.

To THE — COY, LIMTD.

And the directors thof.

TAKE NOTICE, that I hereby rescind and avoid the contract under which shares in your capital were, in the month of —, allotted to me, such contract having been induced by misrepresentations in your prospectus, and I require you to remove my name from your register of members [a/c., as in the preceding form].

Where a contract to take shares has been induced by misrepresentation on the part of the company, it is voidable at the option of the allottee; but it is valid until the allottee elects to repudiate it. See supra, pp. 193, 197. Unless the company at once gives in, the shareholder repudiating should take legal proceedings by the issue of a writ, notice of motion, or summons, otherwise he may lose his right to rescind. Any delay in such a case on the shareholder's part may be fatal. See supra, p. 197.

Misrepresentations—Circular Correcting.

Sometimes before allotment the directors discover that some material statement in the prospectus is not correct. In such a case the discovery ought at once to be communicated to applicants. Scottish Petroleum, 23 C. Div. 413. And it may be necessary, in order to protect the directors, to offer the allottee his money back, or to make the allotment in some way conditional on his signifying that he desires to renew his application.

So far as the company is concerned, it might suffice to give notice in the letter of allotment of the discovery, for if the allottee pays the allotment money after such a notice, he in effect elects to affirm the contract, and could not subsequently repudiate it, but directors do not stand in so favourable a position, for an allottee may elect to keep the shares without waiving his right to damages against the directors personally, and in order to protect them it may be necessary to inform the applicant of the discovery, tell him that the directors withdraw the original prospectus and offer him his money back, and ask him if he wishes to have the shares, to fill up a fresh application on the footing of a corrected prospectus, copy enclosed. See supra, p. 244.

THE — COY, LIMTD.

SIR [OR MADAM].—With reference to your application for an allotment of — shares in the above coy, I am instructed by the directors to inform you that since the publication of the prospectus it has been discovered that one of the statements in that prospectus is incorrect and cannot be justified. The statement in question is that [state what]. This statement was based on the report of Mr. —, in which the following passage occurred [set it out].

But from a further report of Mr. —, received since the publication of the prospectus, it appears that [etc.]. Accordingly, in the result, the statement in the prospectus above referred to was and is incorrect.

In the circumstances I have to request that you will be so good as to sign in the place indicated, and send to me, as soon as you conveniently can, one or other of the forms subjoined, in order that the directors may give effect to your wishes as therein expressed.

The directors take this opportunity of mentioning that there was a slight inaccuracy in the prospectus in that it did not disclose that by the terms of the contract mental in the prospectus the undertaking was to be taken over subject to the current liabilities of the vendor, amounting to about 32,000*l.*, and referred to in the balance-sheet accompanying the prospectus. The non-disclosure of this fact was purely accidental, and having regard to the price (1,220,000*l.*) the directors do not consider the matter of any material moment. If, however, you desire it, the directors will be pleased to relieve you from your contract and place you in statu quo. Both the preference shares and the debenture stock offered for subscription were over subscribed

THE — COY., LIMTD.

Notice is hereby given that an extraordinary general meeting of the Coy., Limtd., will be held at [e.g., "The Terminus Hotel, Cannon Street, in the City of London," or "the registered office of the coy, No." &c.], on the — day of —, 19—, at — o'clock in the afternoon, when the subjoined resolution will be proposed as an extraordinary resolution.

Here set out the resolution.

Should the resolution be passed by the required majority, it will be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution to a second extraordinary meeting which will be subsequently convened.

Dated —.

By order of the Board

No. — Street, —.

A. B., Secretary.

As to passing special and extraordinary resolutions, see infra, p. 1092 et seq.

Sometimes to save trouble and expense it is desired to convene the two meetings by one and the same notice, as below. The second meeting cannot, however, be called contingently. Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 139, supra, p. 696. But where the articles contain a clause as at p. 693, supra, in effect authorizing the calling of the second meeting on a contingency to confirm a special resolution, there is no objection to the notice being so framed. This was decided by the Court of Appeal in North of England Steamship Co., (1905) 2 Ch. 15. In such case the notice may run thus:

Should the above resolution be passed by the requisite majority, it will be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution to a further extraordinary general meeting, and such meeting will be held on — day, the — day of —, at the same time and place, for the purpose of considering and, if thought fit, confirming such resolution as a special resolution accordingly.

Sometimes where there is no such clause in the articles and it is considered specially desirable to call the two meetings by one notice, this can be done by the following form of notice: "And notice is hereby also given that a further extraordinary general meeting of the company will be held at —, on — day the — day of —, at — o'clock in the afternoon for the purpose of receiving a report of the proceedings at the above-mentioned meeting, and of confirming, if thought fit, as a special resolution the above-mentioned resolution." A notice so framed calls the second meeting unconditionally, and therefore avoids the objection raised in Alexander v. Simpson, 43 C. D. 139. Jenner Institute, 12 T. L. R. 294; and see Espuela Land and Cattle Co., W. N. (1900) 139: 48 W. R. 684.

As to the proceedings at a meeting for passing or confirming special or extraordinary resolutions, and as to the conclusiveness of the declaration of the chairman, see infra, pp. 1095 et seq.

As to necessity for disclosure where directors are personally interested, see p. 694.

Sometimes it is found convenient to convene an extraordinary meeting for the same day as the ordinary meeting, but it must be borne in mind that a separate proxy is requisite for each of two meetings though held the same day: supra p. 707.

Where two successive special resolutions have to be passed, it is not unusual to pass them in three meetings, or to hold the two intermediate meetings on the same day, as follows. See Form 439, infra. It seems better to adopt the course last mentioned, for it might be contended that a special resolution does not become effective until the close of the meeting.

RESOLUTIONS.

CHAPTER XIII.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

MATTERS which are to be submitted to general meetings or to directors' meetings are generally expressed in resolutions.

As to Resolutions of General Meetings.

There are various kinds of resolutions from time to time passed by general meetings, viz.:

(1) Special resolutions.

See Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 69 (2), infra, p. 1092.

(2) Extraordinary resolutions.

See Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 69 (1).

(3) Ordinary resolutions: that is, resolutions only requiring a simple majority.

(4) Resolutions which, under the articles, require some specified majority.

The articles of a company constantly provide that certain acts shall be done by the company in general meeting; e.g., that officers shall be appointed at the ordinary general meeting, or that the directors may borrow money, or declare a dividend, or convert shares into stock with the sanction of the company in general meeting. In such cases the act will be done or the consent given by an ordinary resolution of the members of the company present in person, or by proxy (where proxies are allowed), at a general meeting of the company. Whether the meeting to pass the resolution should be an ordinary or an extraordinary one must depend on the nature of the business and the articles [supra, p. 697]. In either case the meeting must have been duly called [supra, p. 692], and a proper quorum must be present [supra, p. 697].

Resolution of general meetings.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, the question should in the first place be decided by a show of hands (supra, p. 699), and the chairman should declare the result accordingly, and his declaration

Show of hands.
Declaration of chairman.

will be sufficient, that is, prima facie evidence or conclusive, according as the articles or Acts provide. "Sufficient" means sufficient until the contrary is proved. Horbury Bridge Co., 11 C. D. 109. But "conclusive" is more efficacious. It means final, so that proof to the contrary is not admissible. See, however, R. Clark & Co. (1911) S. C. 243, Ct. of Sess., and infra, p. 1099.

Poll.

A poll may be demanded in accordance with the articles (see supra, pp. 699, 700), and if properly demanded should be granted by the chairman and taken in due course, and the result should be duly declared.

Special and extraordinary resolutions.

But besides ordinary resolutions it is very common to provide by the articles that certain acts shall only be done by special resolution of the company or by extraordinary resolution. Moreover, the Act of 1908 requires or enables a company to do various things by special or extraordinary resolution, as will be seen in the notes to the following resolutions.

Mode of passing special resolution

It will, therefore, be convenient here to state what is meant by the expressions "special resolution" and "extraordinary resolution" respectively. This appears in sect. 69 of the Act of 1908 as follows:

Definitions of extraordinary and special resolution

Sect. 69.—(1) A resolution shall be an extraordinary resolution when it has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a general meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given.

(2) A resolution shall be a special resolution when it has been—

- (a) passed in manner required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution; and
- (b) confirmed by a majority of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a subsequent general meeting, of which notice has been duly given, and held after an interval of not less than fourteen days, nor more than one month, from the date of the first meeting.

(3) At any meeting at which an extraordinary resolution is submitted to be passed or a special resolution is submitted to be passed or confirmed, a declaration of the chairman that the resolution is carried shall, unless a poll is demanded, be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution.

(4) At any meeting at which an extraordinary resolution is submitted to be passed or a special resolution is submitted to be passed or confirmed, a poll may be demanded, if demanded by three persons for the time being entitled according to the articles to vote, unless the articles of the company require a demand by such number of such persons, not in any case exceeding five, as may be specified in the articles.

(5) When a poll is demanded in accordance with this section, in computing the majority on the poll reference shall be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled by the articles of the company.

(6) For the purposes of this section notice of a meeting shall be deemed to be duly given and the meeting to be duly held when the notice is given and the meeting held in manner provided by the articles.

The definitions contained in the above section of an "extraordinary resolution" and of a "special resolution" do not very far depart from the corresponding definitions in the Act of 1862 (sects. 51 and 129).

There is, however, one important difference, for in defining extraordinary resolution, sect. 69 makes it part of the definition that the resolution is one passed at a meeting convened by a notice "specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution." And as a special resolution must, under sub-sect. (2), be passed in manner required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution, it follows that the first meeting to pass a special resolution must be convened in like manner, that is to say, by a notice "specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution," for that is what the section says.

Hence, in drafting the notice of a meeting at which it is proposed to pass a resolution capable of being subsequently confirmed as a special resolution, it is necessary to frame the notice with special care so that the resolution when passed and confirmed may become a "special resolution" within the definition contained in sect. 69 (set out supra, p. 1092) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. Sub-sect. (2) of that section says that "A resolution shall be a special resolution when it has been

Requisites of notice with a view to passing special resolution

- (a) passed in manner required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution; and
- (b) confirmed [in manner specified in the section]."

We have then to consider what is "the manner required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution." The earlier part of sect. 69 answers this question. "A resolution," says that part of the section, "shall be deemed to be an extraordinary resolution when it has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person, or by proxy where proxies are allowed, at a general meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given." Here, then, we have the term "extraordinary resolution" defined in a single sentence, and it is impossible, on any rule of construction, to ignore any portion of that sentence. All the words are part of the definition. Not only must the resolution (a) be passed by the specified majority, but it must be passed at a general meeting of the company; and (b) that meeting must be convened by a notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution "as an extraordinary resolution." Turning back, then, to paragraph (a) of sub-sect. (2), we find that part of the statutory machinery for passing a special resolution is that the resolution shall be passed at the first meeting in manner required for passing an extraordinary resolution—that is to say, "by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person, or by proxy where proxies are allowed, at a general meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given," for these are the very words of the section.

No doubt it is easy to say that the words in paragraph (a) of sub-sect. (2) merely refer to the three-fourths majority, but if this is their meaning, why did not the Legislature in its definition say so? Nothing would have been easier than to do this—to substitute for the paragraph the words, "(a) passed by the majority requisite for the passing of an extraordinary resolution."

But the fact remains that the Legislature did not think fit to use these words (for the very good reason that they would have omitted a material part of the definition), and this being so, the interpreter cannot disregard the words actually used, or substitute other words on the mere conjecture that those words would more accurately express the Legislature's meaning, or that they would be the equivalent of the words actually used. Some people suggest that as sect. 69, in substance, re-enacts the law previously in force under sect. 51 of the Act of 1862, there is a presumption that the Legislature did not intend to alter that law, and that under the old law it was not necessary in calling the first of the two meetings requisite to pass a special resolution to say that such meeting was called to pass the resolution "as an extraordinary resolution." But this way of reasoning belongs to an entirely exploded mode of construction. In Ex parte Griffith, 23 C. D. 69, it was contended that sect. 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ought, if possible, to be treated as having the same meaning as the former legislation on the same subject, but the Court of Appeal refused to adopt this contention, and considered that it was the duty of the Court to construe the new section as it stood. "The law," said Jessel, M. R., "has now been put into a different shape and form, and our duty is to construe the words of the Act." And Lindley, L. J., said: "What we have to consider is the true construction of sect. 92. I emphatically protest against being led away from the words of the section by any argument that the standard which the Legislature has laid down is equivalent to the standard of the old law. It may be so, but the language is different, and our duty is to construe that language." And Bowen, L. J., said, in reference to the former decisions, "the first thing which the Court did was to discuss the question whether the Act had altered the old law, and introduced an entirely new law, and they came to the conclusion that it had not altered the old law. Then began what I may call a complete metaphysical exploration of the motives of people. The Courts first adopted a supposed verbal equivalent for the words of the statute, and then pursued the old inquiries as to what were the deductions which followed from the adoption of those verbal equivalents. . . . I think it is the wiser policy to go back, as I do, in a humble spirit to the words of the statute."

This mode of construction accords, too, with the principles laid down by Lord Herschell, in Bank of England v. Vagliano, (1891) A. C. 144, namely that, "In construing a new Act of Parliament it is the proper course, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered to see if the words of the enactment would bear an interpretation in conformity with this view." These words were used with reference to codifying the statute, but the same principles apply to a consolidating and amending Act, like the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. "The principle," said Chitty, L. J., in the Court of Appeal in Thames Conservators v. Smeed, Dean & Co., (1897) 2 Q. B. 334, "of interpretation of a codifying Act is laid down by Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano, supra; a statute codifying the law is to be interpreted as it stands, and recourse is not to be had to the former law except upon some special ground, such, for instance, as an ambiguous provision. The same principle applies to such an Act as that which is now before us, but in a less stringent degree. In this Act the clauses of the repealed Acts are found repeated, but often in altered form and with amendments, whereby the sense may be in a great measure changed. Speaking generally, I think that the enactments must be dealt with as they now stand. . . ."

And as to the necessity of attending to the words of the section, see Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22.

In that case Lord Halsbury, L. C., said: "I can only find the true intent and meaning of the Act from the Act itself. And in the same case Lord Watson said: "What the Legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legally ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication." "I know," said Lord Herschell in the same case, "of no means of ascertaining what is the intent and meaning of the Companies Act except by examining its provisions."

Following these authorities the only safe course is to take the words of sect. 69 as they stand. What the Legislature had to determine was how a special resolution should be defined, and this it has done in the section. It says that the notice of the first meeting must state the intention to propose the resolution "as an extraordinary resolution."

To disregard the words will result in the supposed special resolution not operating as a special resolution, because it will not come within the statutory definition in sect. 69. So that the increase of capital, consolidation of shares, subdivision of shares, alteration of articles, and the like, intended to be effected by the special resolution will be void.

Lastly, it is said that in Penarth Pontoon Co., W. N. (1911) 240, a learned judge confirmed a reduction of capital, although the resolution had not been passed in strict accordance with sect. 69 of the Act. Too much reliance should not be placed on such a decision: there was no argument. It can afford but little security to those who in a contested case seek to justify the disregard of the plain words of the Act, and to prove that to be a special resolution which does not come within the statutory definition. Besides, sect. 52 of the Act precludes subsequent objection.

The following points should be noted in regard to an extraordinary resolution:—

Points as to extraordinary resolution.

- (a) The meeting must be duly convened and held in accordance with the section and the articles of the company.
- (b) Accordingly the requisite number of days' notice must be given, and the notice must specify the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution.
- (c) There must be a proper quorum present at the meeting. Cambrian Co., 25 W. R. 409; Romford Canal Co., 24 C. D. 85.
- (d) The resolution must be passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members of the company entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are by the articles allowed) at the meeting.
- (e) A declaration of the chairman that the resolution is carried is to be conclusive evidence of the fact, without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution. See supra, p. 700, and infra, p. 1098.

- (f) Upon a show of hands, hands only can be counted, not proxies. Ernest v. Loma Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 1.
- (g) If a poll is demanded, then it can only be effectively demanded by three persons for the time being entitled according to the articles to vote, or by the number, whatever it may be, fixed by the company's articles for demanding a poll—under Table A. the number is three (T. A. Art. 56)—and entitled to vote according to the company's articles [or (if the articles of the company so provide) by one, two or four persons].
- (h) On a poll the majority must be calculated with reference to the number of votes to which each member voting is entitled by the articles of the company.

In regard to a special resolution the following further points should be noted:—

- (a) The resolution must be passed at two meetings duly convened, and held at an interval of not less than fourteen clear days, and not more than one calendar month. Railway Sleepers Co. (1885), 29 C. D. 204; and see Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3.
- (b) Each meeting must be duly convened and held in accordance with the section and the articles of the company. The notice of the first meeting must state that the resolution "will be proposed as an extraordinary resolution." See supra.
- (c) There must be a proper quorum present at each meeting. See Cambrian Co., 23 W. R. 409; Romford Canal Co., 24 C. D. 85.
- (d) The resolution must be passed at the first meeting by a three-fourths majority, whether upon a show of hands or a poll. Ayre v. Shelsey's Adamant Cement Co., 21 T. L. R. 465. And the show of hands must precede the poll. Horbury Bridge Co., 11 C. D. 109. Articles cannot alter the statutory majority required for passing a special resolution, e.g., for reduction of capital. Ayre v. Shelsey's Adamant Cement Co., supra.
- (e) The resolution must be confirmed by at least a simple majority of the votes at the second meeting.
- (f) At each meeting, unless a poll is duly demanded, a declaration of the chairman that the resolution is carried is to be conclusive evidence of the fact, without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution. See sect. 69 (4), p. 1092, supra.
- (g) On a show of hands, hands only can be counted, not proxies. Ernest v. Loma Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 1.
- (h) At a poll the number of votes each member voting is entitled to is to be taken into account, and votes by proxy.

if the articles permit, are to be allowed. As to convening the two meetings by one notice, see supra, p. 696.

Where it is intended to pass a special resolution the notice of the first meeting ought to inform the members that the resolution will be proposed as an extraordinary resolution. Usually the notice further states that if the resolution is passed by the requisite majority it will be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution to a subsequent meeting. But the intention so to submit it need not be expressly stated. Thus a resolution purporting to alter the memorandum or the articles, or a resolution that can only take effect as an alteration of the memorandum or articles, implies an intention to deal with the matter by special resolution. In preparing a notice, it is to be borne in mind that members are deemed to have notice of the Act, and of the company's memorandum and articles. See Campbell's case, 9 Ch. 1, and supra, p. 1048. Sect. 69 (1), (2) of the Act says, in regard to a special resolution, as well as an extraordinary resolution, "of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given"; and where practicable, it is desirable to set out the exact terms of the resolution; but it seems that the words are not to be strictly construed, and that where full and fair notice of the character of the proposed resolution is given, that will suffice, even though the exact terms are not set out. See Imperial Bank v. Bank of Hindustan, 6 Eq. 91. Even where the notice sets out the exact terms of the proposed resolution, it seems that an amendment may be proposed and adopted at the first meeting provided that it comes within the scope of the notice and does not commit the meeting to anything more onerous than the resolution itself. Thus, where notice of a resolution to fix the directors' remuneration at a specified sum was given, it was held that the resolution was effective notwithstanding that it was passed with an amendment reducing the remuneration to a smaller figure. Torbock v. Lord Westbury, (1902) 2 Ch. 871. So where the notice specified several resolutions, some ultra vires and others intra vires, and all were passed, the intra vires resolutions were held good. Thompson v. Henderson's Transvaal Estates Co., (1908) 1 Ch. 765. In a recent case, Betta, Ltd. v. Macnaghten, (1910) 1 Ch. 430, a notice to "reappoint three auditors" was held to cover an appointment of two additional directors, but as to this, see further, p. 692.

Notice of intention to pass.

Amendment of terms.

An imperfect notice cannot be aided by disclosure at the meeting, for the rights of absentees must be regarded; the notice may have induced them to absent themselves. Clinch v. Financial Corporation, 5 Eq. 481; supra, p. 694; Teede and Bishop, Ltd., W. N. (1901) 52; 84 L. T. 561; and see the remarks of Kekewich, J., in Tiessen v. Henderson, (1899) 1 Ch. 861.

Imperfect notice.

But there can be no amendment, at the second meeting, of the resolution as passed at the first meeting: it must either be confirmed or rejected simpliciter. Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation, (1898) 2 Ch. 469.

Difficulty in convening general meeting from want of prescribed quorum or of directors.

Sometimes there is a difficulty in convening or holding a general meeting; it may be that the articles require a larger quorum for a general meeting than can be got together. In such case it is conceived that the members present would constitute a quorum. Lord Davey so advised, when at the Bar. Again, where there are no directors there may be a difficulty as to convening a meeting, whether under the articles or under sect. 66 of the Companies Act, 1908. In such cases it may be necessary to call in aid sect. 67 of the Companies Act, 1908, which provides as follows:

"In default of and subject to any regulations in the articles—

- (i.) A meeting of a company may be called by seven days' notice in writing served on every member in manner in which notices are required to be served by Table A. in the First Schedule to this Act
- (ii.) Five members may call a meeting;
- (iii.) Any person elected by the members present at a meeting may be chairman thereof;
- (iv.) Every member shall have one vote." Sect. 67.

Jessel, M. R., in Brick and Stone Co., W. N. (1878) 140; 22 S. J. 625, was of opinion that sect. 52 of the Companies Act, 1862, which the above section reproduces, was applicable where it was impracticable to call a meeting in accordance with the articles, e.g., where there were no directors; and this view has been frequently acted on.

No proxies on show of hands.

It has been decided by the Court of Appeal in Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, (1897) 1 Ch. 1 (overruling Bidwell Brothers, (1893) 1 Ch. 603), that proxies cannot be counted on a show of hands.

Declaration of chairman.

The show of hands having been taken, the chairman must state the result, for that is part of his duty as chairman, and if the resolution has been carried by the requisite majority, he should say: "I declare that the resolution has been carried," and such declaration should be duly recorded in the minutes in accordance with sect. 71 of the Companies Act, 1908; see supra, p. 745.

To such a declaration special efficacy is given by sect. 69 (3) of the Act, for that section, as appears above, provides that "a declaration of the chairman that the resolution is carried shall, unless a poll is demanded, be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the same."

Will be conclusive.

The chairman's declaration is therefore conclusive subject to a poll. It is conclusive, that is, unless a poll is demanded, and this demand must be by three persons for the time being entitled according to the articles to vote, unless, &c. (see sect. 69 (4)). Articles commonly require more than the statutory minimum (three) of persons to demand a poll—e.g., five—and where they do their requirements must be conformed to; so also where only one or two or four persons may by the articles be empowered to demand a poll. The number required by the articles must not in any case exceed five (sect. 69 (4)).

There have been various decisions as to the meaning of the word "conclusive" in the corresponding section of the Act of 1862. Hall, V.-C., held that the word in effect precluded evidence that there was no quorum at the meeting (Brynmawr Co., W. N. (1877) 45), although in point of law a meeting at which there is no quorum is not a meeting. But this decision, it is submitted, went too far, for the section only makes the declaration conclusive where it is made 'at any meeting,' which must mean a meeting duly convened and constituted.

Meaning of "conclusive."

Where, however, the meeting has been duly convened and held, and the chairman has in fact, upon a show of hands, declared that the resolution has been carried, and no poll has been demanded, as aforesaid, the declaration is conclusive that the requisite majority has voted in favour of the resolution. It was so held by the Court of Appeal in Re Gold Co., 11 C. D. 718. In that case the chairman declared the resolution passed. His declaration was impeached as incorrect, on the ground that out of seventeen members present, only eleven voted in favour, whilst two voted against and four abstained from voting on the resolution; but the Court held that the declaration was conclusive that the resolution had been passed by the requisite majority, on the ground that the section—the corresponding section of the Act of 1862—so provided. Strange to say, however, in Young v. South African, &c. Syndicate, (1896) 2 Ch. 268, a learned judge disregarded this decision, and in effect held that the declaration was not conclusive where it was proved to the Court that the declaration of the chairman was in fact incorrect. This decision treated the word "conclusive" as equivalent to the words "primâ facie," although the Legislature was clearly alive to the distinction between the two expressions, for it provided in several sections of the Act of 1862, e.g., 31 and 37 (Companies Act, 1908, ss. 23, 33), that something shall be "primâ facie" evidence, whereas in sect. 51 (Companies Act, 1908, s. 69) it provided that something shall be "conclusive" evidence. The decision referred to was unfavourably commented on in the last edition but two of this work, and before very long Cozens-Hardy, J., in Hadleigh Castle Gold Mines, (1900) 2 Ch. 419, declined to follow it, and held, in accordance with the words of the section and the decision of the Court of Appeal in Gold Co., supra, that the section meant what it said, and that the chairman's declaration was conclusive, not primâ facie, evidence. And soon afterwards the Court of Appeal in Arnot v. United African Lands, (1901) 1 Ch. 518, took the same view, and overruled Young v. South African, &c. Syndicate, supra, thus making it clear beyond all question that the words "conclusive evidence" in sect. 69 are to have full effect. It has, however, been held that a chairman's declaration is not conclusive where in making it he states the figures for and against, and those figures show that he erroneously declares. Caratal New Mines Ltd., (1902) 2 Ch. 498. Or where on the face of the proceedings it is plain that the resolution has not been carried by the requisite majority. Clark & Co., (1911) S. C. 243 Ct. of Sess.

Notice of meetings.

As to notices convening meetings to pass resolutions, whether special, extraordinary, or otherwise, see supra, Forms 433 et seq.

Notice to Registrar.

As to notices to be given to the Registrar of Companies upon passing of a special resolution, see supra, Form 236.

As to Ordinary Resolutions.

Ordinary resolutions.

An ordinary resolution merely requires upon a show of hands a simple majority of the voters present, and, if a poll be demanded, a simple majority of the votes given thereat, whether in person or by proxy.

"It cannot be disputed," said Lord Hardwicke, C., in Att-Gen. v. Day, 2 Atk. 212, "that whenever a certain number of persons are incorporated a major part of them may do any corporate act, so if all be summoned and part appear, a major part of those that appear may do the corporate act, though nothing be mentioned in the charter of the major part." See Grant v. United Switchback Rail., 40 C. D. 135.

But this principle—of the majority ruling—as applied to companies under the Act of 1908, is subject to the Act and to the memorandum and articles in each case applicable. Hence, it is necessary to see that the meeting is duly convened; that the resolution is one which can properly be put to the meeting; that the requisite quorum is present; that the regulations as to voting are duly observed; and that in any case the sense of the meeting is taken in the first instance by a show of hands; and afterwards, if a poll be demanded, by poll in the ordinary way, sect. 71 of the Act being borne in mind.

Resolutions which under the Articles require some Specified Majority.

Specified majority resolutions.

Occasionally the articles provide that something may be done by or with the sanction of a resolution passed by a majority of a special character, e.g., a majority of those members present in person or by proxy, and entitled to three-fourths of the votes to which all the members present in person or by proxy are collectively entitled.

In such case the resolution cannot have effect unless it conforms to the articles and is passed by the requisite majority, or unless it is passed as a special resolution.

But if the Legislature has said that something may be done by special resolution, e.g., the company's capital reduced, it is not competent to the company to require by its articles a larger majority for the purpose. Ayre v. Shelsey's Adamant Co., 21 T. L. R. 464.

As to Resolutions of Directors.

The decisions of directors at board meetings are usually expressed in the form of resolutions, but it is not essential to their validity that they should be embodied in formal resolutions, and even where a formal resolution is proposed and passed the minutes not uncommonly do not record the precise terms thereof, but state merely the effect, e.g., a contract, &c., was submitted and approved; the chairman was authorized, &c.

Directors' resolutions

Resolutions generally.

In framing a resolution, whether for a general meeting or a board meeting, it is of great importance to express it in clear and precise terms. In the case of a resolution to increase the capital, the resolution should be to the effect that the capital be increased, &c., not merely that it is "desirable to increase the capital." Again, care should be taken not to deal merely contingently with matters which under the Act must be dealt with definitely, e.g., not to resolve that, "if the directors think fit," the shares outstanding shall be subdivided; or that, "if the directors are unable to raise the requisite funds, the company be wound up voluntarily." It might be supposed that points like these are not likely to be overlooked by those who frame resolutions, but experience shows that they often are.

General observations

So, too, as regards resolutions of directors. They should, where it is so intended, express a clear determination, and should comprise the incidental provisions requisite for giving effect to the resolution; thus, if a call is to be made, care should be taken that the resolution states the amount of the call, the time for payment, the place for payment, and to whom the call is to be made payable; and if it is to be paid by instalments, then the amount of each instalment and the time, &c. for payment (see p. 654). Again, if a transfer of shares is to be passed, the resolution should provide not only for the approval and registration of the transfer, but for the issue of the certificate to the transferee. And so in the case of a mortgage the resolution should deal with the execution of the mortgage deed, and, if necessary, the delivery thereof conditionally on payment of the mortgage money, and should give directions as to how the mortgage money is to be paid, and any other subsidiary matter that the special circumstances of the case may require.

PRECEDENTS.

Alteration of Articles.

Form 458. THAT the articles of association be altered in manner following:—

Alteration of articles.

- (a) Article 5 shall be cancelled.
- (b) In Article 7 the word "four" shall be substituted for the word "seven."
- (c) The following article shall be substituted for Article 20, namely, "The coy may," &c.
- (d) The following article shall be inserted after Article 24, namely, 24a, "The directors may," &c.
- (e) The directors may at any time, &c., and Article 30 shall be modified accordingly.

Sect. 13 of the Act of 1908 (replacing sect. 50 of the Act of 1862) provides that—

- (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act and to the conditions contained in its memorandum, a company may by special resolution alter or add to its articles; and any alteration or addition so made shall be as valid as if originally contained in the articles, and be subject in like manner to alteration by special resolution.
- (2) The power of altering articles under this section shall, in the case of an unlimited company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, extend to altering any regulations relating to the amount of capital or its distribution into shares, notwithstanding that those regulations are contained in the memorandum.

The section, it is to be observed, only gives power to alter or add to "the articles" of the company, as distinguished from its memorandum of association. The conditions in the memorandum cannot be altered, except in the manner and to the extent permitted by the Act. Ashbury v. Riche, L. R. 7 H. L. 653; Ashbury v. Watson, 30 C. Div. 376.

As to the power to alter the articles, see supra, p. 636; and in particular Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 361; Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 656; and James Colmer, Limtd., (1897) 1 Ch. 524, in which last case it was held that the power to alter the articles extends even to voting rights.

A company cannot exempt any article from liability to alteration. Mallenon v. National Insurance Co., (1894) 1 Ch. 200.

Where a resolution is intended to authorize or effect something not authorized by the articles as they stand, it may be desirable in some cases, in the first place, to alter the articles so as to give the necessary authority and then to exercise that authority. See Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson, 23 C. Div. 1, where Cotton, L. J., said: "In my opinion it is an entire fallacy to say that because there is power to alter the regulations, you can, by a resolution which might alter the regulations, do that which is contrary to the regulations as they stand in a particular and individual case." But too much stress must not be laid on these words. They were not intended to, nor could they, in effect, overrule Campbell's case, 9 Ch. 1, or Toasdale's case, 9 Ch. 54, and both those cases show that a special resolution may operate as an alteration of the articles or memorandum without any express reference to either. See also Taylor v. Pilsen Co., 27 C. D. 268.

A company cannot, however, pass a resolution to reduce its capital at the same meetings at which it alters its articles, so as to give itself the necessary authority. Patent Invert Sugar Co., 31 C. Div. 166, following West India and Pacific S.S. Co., 9 Ch. Ap. 11, 12, n.; Oregon Mortgage Co., (1910) B. C. 964 Ct. of Sess. Nor can it sub-divide its shares at the same meetings at which it takes power to sub-divide the same. The power must be given before it can be exercised.

That the regulations contained in the printed document submitted to the meeting, and for the purpose of identification subscribed by the chairman thof, be and the same are hby approved, and that such regulations be and they are hby adopted as the articles of the coy. in substitution for, and to the exclusion of, all the existing articles thof.

Where a large number of alterations have to be made, it is generally more convenient to adopt a new set of articles altogether. Where this course is adopted a copy of the new regulations should lie for inspection at the office, and the notice convening the meetings should state the fact; and in some cases it may be deemed expedient to send out printed copies of the proposed new articles with the notices. According to the decision of Kekewich, J., in Norrandy v. Ind. Coops & Co., (1901) 1 Ch. 84, the notice should call attention to any material alterations, but sect. 69 does not so provide. See supra, p. 1094. Where it is desired that the meeting shall be at liberty to amend the draft at the meeting, the notice must be specially framed, e.g., let it convene the meeting (1) to consider and, if thought fit, approve the draft new articles which will be submitted to the meeting; and in the event of the approval thereof, with or without modifications, (2) to consider and, if thought fit, to pass a resolution to the effect "that the new articles already approved by this meeting, and for the purpose," &c., as in Form 459.

The notice should state that a copy of the new articles is enclosed, or that a copy of the proposed new articles may be seen at the company's office.

When new articles are adopted, care must be taken not to insert any clause inconsistent with the memorandum of association.

That the regulations contained in Table A., in so far as they apply to this coy, be altered as follows:

1. In clause --- the words --- shall be substituted for the words ---
2. Clause --- shall no longer apply.
3. The following clause shall be substituted for clause ---
4. The words following shall be inserted in clause --- immediately after the word --- where that word first occurs.
5. The words --- shall be added at the end of clause ---

Form 460.
Modification of Table A

Increase of Capital.

Form 460a. That the capital of the coy be increased to 50,000*l.*, by the creation of 2,000 new shares of 5*l.* each.

Increase of capital.

The power to increase the capital is generally made exercisable by the company in general meeting, i.e., by an ordinary resolution of a simple majority, or by special or extraordinary resolution, or by the company simply. In the last case the directors can generally exercise the power under their general powers of management. See Table A., clause 71. See p. 683, supra.

In Koffyfontein Mines v. Moseley, (1911) A. C. 409, it was held, on construction of the articles, that though the directors had power under the articles to increase the capital by the creation of new shares, they had no power to issue such shares without the sanction of a general meeting.

See further as to increase of capital and creation of preference shares, supra, p. 683 et seq., and supra, p. 812.

Whenever capital is increased, whether by resolution of the company or by resolution of the directors, notice to the Registrar must be given within fifteen days from the date of the passing of the resolution, or in default the company and every director and manager will be liable to a penalty of 5*l.* per day. See sect. 44 of the Act, and infra, Appendix.

And the duty imposed by Table B. of the Act on the increase, and that imposed by the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 112, must also be paid. See supra, pp. 436 et seq.

As to stamping and delivering the statement of the amount of increase, see sect. 5 of the Revenue Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 46).

Upon increasing the capital, it is not necessary to purport to alter the memorandum of association, e.g., by resolving that the conditions contained in the company's memorandum of association be altered by increasing, &c. Campbell's case, 9 Ch. 21.

Form 461. 1. That the capital of the coy be increased to £ — by the creation of 20,000 additional ordinary shares of 1*l.* each ranking for dividend and in all other respects pari passu with the existing ordinary shares in the coy.

Ordinary shares at a premium.

2. That the sd 20,000 additional shares be offered in the first instance at a premium of 2*l.* 10*s.* per share to the members of the coy holding five or more ordinary shares in proportion as nearly as may be to the number of ordinary shares held by them resp'y, and upon the footing that the full amount of each share taken up plus the premium (making together 3*l.* 10*s.* per share) shall be pd to the coy on acceptance of the offer, and that such offer be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the member is ent'd, and limiting a time within which the offer if not accepted by payment will be deemed to be declined, and that the directors be empowered to dispose of the shares not taken in response to such offer as they consider expedient in the interests of the coy.

1. That the capital of the coy be increased by the creation of 30,000 shares of 5l. each.

Form 402.

2. That 66,125l. part of the reserve fund of the coy, be distributed among the shareholders, by way of bonus, free of income-tax, in proportion to the number of shares held by them resp'y, on the 17th December, 1909, and that such bonus be payable on the 28th December, 1909.

New shares at par and bonus to be paid.

3. That the directors be authorized to offer at par to each shareholder shares of the coy equal in nominal amount to the bonus payable to him under the last preceding clause of the resolution, and that the nominal amount of such shares be pd to the coy upon application, on or before the 28th December, 1909, such shares not to participate in any dividend declared in February, 1910 in respect of profit accrued up to 31st December, 1909, but to participate in any dividend declared thereafter pro rata with the existing capital.

4. That the directors be authorized to dispose of any shares offered to a shareholder under the last preceding clause, and declined or not accepted by him within such time as the directors may appoint to such persons and upon such terms as the directors may think fit.

In the above case the shares (ordinary) were at a large premium, so that there was a practical certainty that the new shares would be taken up.

That there be added to clause 23 of the arts of assocn of the coy express authority to the directors if and when the adventurers named in the sd draft agreemt become entld to an allotment thof to create and issue not exceeding 1,200 A. shares of 10l. each mentd in the said draft agreemt with the rights and privileges following attached thereto:—

Form 403.

Contingent power to directors and adventurers.

- (a) Each of the sd new shares shall rank for dividend as if the same were two of the ordinary shares of 10l. each fully pd.
- (b) Each of the sd new shares shall confer on the holders the right to two votes at a general meeting.
- (c) In the winding-up of the coy each of the sd shares shall rank in the distribution of assets as if the same were two ordinary shares of 10l. each fully pd.

Preference Shares.

Power to increase capital can, as already mentioned [supra, p. 683], be taken by special resolution where the articles do not contain the necessary authority.

And the shares in the new capital can be given any preference or priority over the shares in the original capital, unless the memorandum of association contains something which is inconsistent with such an alteration of rights.

Even if both memorandum and articles of a company are silent on the subject, there is no implied condition that preference shares shall not be issued if the shareholders so resolve. Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 361.

But the power to create preference shares, being in derogation of existing rights, must be plain and unequivocal. Thus power in the articles to increase the capital "by the issue of new shares of such nominal amount, and on such conditions as such resolution may determine," is not sufficient to authorize the issue of preference shares. Melhado v. Hamilton, 21 W. R. 619; 29 L. T. N. S. 364.

If the articles authorize an increase of capital by the issue of new shares "with such rights and privileges, or with such restrictions and on such terms and conditions as the company in general meeting directs," preference shares can be created. Webb v. Earle, 20 Eq. 556.

So where there was power to increase the capital in such manner, and to be issued with and subject to such rules, regulations, privileges and conditions as the company, &c. should think fit. Sir George Jessel, M. R., held that the words "privileges and conditions" were words of extensive meaning, and fully authorized the issue of new shares with a preference both as regards dividends and in a winding-up. Harrison v. Mexican Rail. Co., 19 Eq. 358.

A company may by its articles only have power to give a preference as regards dividends. Yet it may be very desirable, especially where new shares are to be issued, to provide that the holders thereof shall be repaid their capital out of the assets in priority to the other members as well as receive a preferential dividend.

Whether the company can confer this additional privilege must depend on the powers given by the articles. Power for the company to increase its capital "upon such terms, and either with or without special privileges or preferences to the holders of the shares in such increased capital as it may from time to time deem expedient," enables it to give a preference as regards capital as well as dividends. Bangor &c. Co., 20 Eq. 59.

If the articles are defective in this respect they can be altered. See Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 361.

Preference
shares.
Cumulative.

The following are some examples of resolutions creating preference shares of different kinds:—

That the capital of the coy be increased to 25,000*l.* by the creation of 2,000 new shares of 5*l.* each, to be called preference shares, and to confer on the holders thereof the right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being pd up on such shares, and such preference shares in a winding-up to rank, both as regards capital and dividend [up to the commencement of the winding-up, whether declared or not, in priority to the other shares (and not to confer any further right to participate in profits or surplus assets)].

For provisions in articles as to preference shares, see supra, p. 820 et seq.

Form 465.

Another form.
Non-cumulative.

1. That the capital be increased to 30,000*l.* by the creation of 10,000 new shares of 1*l.* each.

2. That the new shares be called preference shares, and that the holders thof be entld to a preferential dividend, at the rate of 5*l.* p.c.p.a. on the capital pd up thereon, payable as regards each year out of the profits of that year [without any right, in case of deficiency, to resort to subsequent profits].

3. That in the event of the coy being wound up, the holders of the Form 466.
 sd preference shares shall be entld to have the surplus assets of the coy applied in the first place in repaying to them the amount pd up on the preference shares held by them resply, and any arrears of dividend up to the commencement of the winding-up, whether declared or not, but shall not be entld to any further participation in such surplus assets.

See Form 466. infra.

That the capital of the coy be increased by the creation of 21,000 Form 466.
 new shares of 12. each, to be called preference shares, to which there Another form.
 shall be attached the special rights and privileges following: that is to say: -

- (i.) The holders of such preference shares shall be entld to receive out of the profits of the coy as a first charge a cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 10 p.e.p.a.
 on the capital for the time being pd up on such shares resply.
- (ii.) Whenever the profits of the coy in respect of any year shall be more than sufficient to pay the preferential dividend afsd to the close of such year, and also a dividend for such year at the rate of 10 p.e.p.a. on the ordinary shares, the holders of the preference shares shall be entld to participate in the surplus pari passu with the holders of the other shares.
- (iii.) The capital pd up on the preference shares shall not be liable to cancellation or reduction in respect of loss or depreciation.
- (iv.) In the event of the winding-up of the coy the holders of the preference shares shall be entld to have the surplus assets applied first, in paying off the capital pd up on the preference shares held by them resply; secondly, in paying off the arrears (if any) of the preferential dividend afsd to the commencement of the winding-up, and thereafter to participate rateably with the holders of other shares in the residue (if any) of such surplus assets as shall remain after paying off the capital pd up on such other shares.
- (v.) If the preference shares afsd shall be converted into stock, such stock shall be called preference stock, and the rights and privileges attached to the preference shares shall, as nearly as may be, attach to the preference stock.
- (vi.) Every holder of preference shares shall have one vote for every preference share held by him up to ten, and an additional vote for every five preference shares beyond the first ten shares up to 100, and an additional vote for every ten preference shares beyond the first 100.

Form 466.

- (vii.) The preference shares aforesaid shall be issued to such persons and on such terms and conditions as the Board may think fit, and clause 42 of Table A. shall as regards such shares be deemed to be modified accordingly.

Form 467.

Variation.

The following may be used instead of clause 2 of Form 465, above:—

That the new shares shall be called preference shares, and that the holders thereof shall be entitled to be paid out of the profits of each year a preferential dividend for such year at the rate of 5*l.* p.c.

It is sometimes preferred, because it does not expressly call attention to the contingency of the profits being deficient. In either case the dividend will be non-cumulative. See supra, pp. 812, 813.

Form 468.

Preference shares, power to issue more.

That [creation of preference shares] and that the rights, privileges and conditions following be attached to such preference shares, that is to say:—

1. The said preference shares shall carry the right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital paid up thereon respectively.
2. The said shares shall rank, both as regards dividend and return of capital, pari passu with any further preference shares created as hereinafter mentioned and in priority to all other shares in the company, but shall not confer any further right to participate in profits or assets.
3. The company is to be at liberty, from time to time, to create and issue further preference shares ranking in all respects pari passu with the said 350,000 preference shares, but so that the aggregate amount in nominal value of all preference shares aforesaid, for the time being issued (including such 350,000), shall never exceed the aggregate amount in nominal value of the ordinary shares for the time being issued.

When it is desired to issue further preference shares ranking pari passu, it is desirable to take the power in express terms so that the company may not subsequently be exposed to a charge of breach of faith (p. 818). It may be (see supra, pp. 637, 638) that by special resolution altering the articles the company can take the requisite power, but the matter is perhaps not fully settled.

Sometimes it is considered better to introduce the power by implication in the form of a condition qualifying the exercise of the power, e.g., "No new share entitled to rank pari passu with or to any preference over the said preference shares shall [before the — day of —] be issued by the company without the consent in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the preference shares for the time being outstanding."

4. The preference shares shall not confer any right of voting at any general meeting of the coy, nor shall they qualify any person to be a director of the coy. Form 468.

5. In the event of the coy being wound up, the surplus assets thereof shall be applied in the first place in repaying to the holders of the sd preference shares, and of any other shares entitled to rank pari passu with them, the full amount paid up thereon, and, subject as aforesaid, such surplus assets shall belong to and be divided among the other members of the coy.

6. The directors shall be and they are hereby authorized to issue the sd — shares to such persons, and to be paid for by such instalments or otherwise as they think fit, and without being bound to offer the same or any of them to existing members of the coy.

Or, "the said shares shall be offered in the first instance to the existing shareholders as nearly as may be in proportion to the capital held by them respectively. Such offer to be made in such manner as the directors may determine."

That the capital of the coy be increased to £ — by the creation of 75,000 new shares, to be called "A" cumulative preference shares, and that the provisions following in regard thereto shall have effect, that is to say:— Form 469.

1. The sd new shares shall carry a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a. on the capital for the time being paid up thereon, and such dividend shall be paid as nearly as may be half-yearly, on the 7th April and the 7th October in each year.
2. The sd new preference shares shall rank for dividend next after the 80,000 existing preference shares, and in priority to the ordinary shares for the time being of the coy, whether preferred ordinary or deferred ordinary.
3. The sd new preference shares shall in winding-up be entitled to rank as regards repayment of capital next after the 80,000 existing preference shares, and in priority to the ordinary shares, whether preferred ordinary or deferred ordinary, but the sd new preference shares shall not be entitled to any further participation in such surplus assets.
4. The sd new preference shares shall only confer on the holders the right to attend and vote at general meetings on any question directly affecting any of the rights or privileges attached to such shares, and one vote per share.
5. The coy shall be entitled to create further new "A" cumulative preference shares ranking in all respects pari passu with the sd 75,000 new shares, not exceeding, however [state limit]
6. The holder of any of the sd preference shares may by notice in writing left, together with the certificate for the shares therein referred to, at the coy's office not later than the day of —, or such later date as the directors may agree, elect to convert the preference shares specified in such notice into ordinary shares, whereupon such shares shall from the date of the notice become ordinary shares, and shall rank in all respects pari passu with the other ordinary shares of the coy, and shall cease to have any preference or priority as above mentd. and a new certificate shall be issued to the holder thof free of charge.

Sometimes a power is given to convert preference into ordinary shares
Thus:—

Any holder of such shares may give the coy six calendar months notice in writing of his desire to convert the preference shares held by him, or any part thof, into ordinary shares, and upon the expiration of such notice the same shall ipso facto be deemed to be converted accordingly, and shall thenceforth confer the same rights and privileges as the other ordinary shares in the coy's capital.

Such a conversion as above will not be effective if the rights of the preference shares are declared by the memorandum of association.

1. That the capital of the coy be increased to 125,000*l.* by the creation of 100,000 new shares of 10*s.* each.

2. That the new shares be called preference shares, and that the holders thof shall be entld pari passu to receive the whole of the net profits of the coy until an aggregate amount of 10*s.* shall be pd out of such profits in respect of each of the sd preference shares.

3. That when and as soon as an aggregate amount of 10*s.* shall have been pd out of the net profits of the coy in respect of each of the sd preference shares, the same shares shall cease to have any preference or priority, and to be called preference shares, and the sd profits shall thenceforth be divided among all the members of the coy pari passu, in proportion to the respive amounts pd up or deemed to be pd up upon the shares held by them resply.

4. That in case the coy shall be wound up before an aggregate amount of 10*s.* shall have been pd out of the net profits of the coy on each of the new shares to be issued as afsd, the surplus assets (if any) of the coy shall be applied, in the first place, in paying to the holder of each such share such a sum as shall, together with the aggregate amount of net profits (if any) received in respect of such share, make up the sum of 10*s.*, and the residue (if any) of the sd surplus assets shall be divided among all the members, in proportion to the nominal amount of capital held by them resply. - (a) The sd preference shares shall carry the right to a fixed preferential dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital pd up thon resp'y, payable as regards each year out of the profits of that year.
- (b) The sd shares shall rank as regards capital pari passu with the ordinary shares.
- (c) The holders of the sd preference shares shall not as such be entld to any vote except on a resolution for the voluntary liquidation of the coy, and upon such resolution every holder of a preference share shall have one vote for every share held by him.
- (d) The coy is to be at liberty from time to time to create and issue further preference shares ranking in all respects pari passu with the sd 100,000 preference shares, but so that the aggregate amount in nominal value of all preference shares afsd for the time being issued (including such 100,000) shall never exceed the sum of £—.

1. That the directors be authorized to convert the 500,000 ordinary shares which have been issued and are fully pd into preferred and deferred stock, upon the footing that each holding of such shares shall be converted into stock, whereof one-third shall be preferred stock and two-thirds shall be deferred stock, and that the following provisions shall have effect with regard to such stock:— Form 472a.

Authority to directors to convert into preferred and deferred stock.

- (a) The preferred stock shall, as between the preferred stock and deferred stock, carry a fixed non-cumulative dividend at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a. on the capital pd up thon, and, in the event of the winding-up of the coy, shall rank for repayment of capital, together with a bonus of 5 p.c. in priority to the deferred stock.
- (b) The deferred stock shall confer a right to the surplus profits, and in the event of a winding-up to the surplus assets of the coy, to which the holders of the ordinary shares would, but for the sd conversion, have been entld.

Form 472a. 2. That the directors be authorized to issue 200,000 of the unissued ordinary shares as preferred shares ranking pari passu with the preferred stock referred to in the first resolution, and to convert the shares so issued, when fully pd, into preference stock.

Form 473. 1. That the 500,000 ordinary shares in the coy shall in future be called and known as preferred ordinary shares, and that the arts of asson be altered accordingly.

2. That the capital of the coy be increased to £ by the creation of 500,000 new shares of 1L each, to be called ordinary shares, and that such ordinary shares shall confer on the holders thof the rights following, that is to say:—

- (b) The right to three votes in respect of every ordinary share held by them resply.
- (c) The right in a winding-up to the whole of the surplus assets of the coy available for distribution amongst the members thof which shall remain after paying off the capital pd up on the preference shares and the capital pd up on the preferred ordinary shares.

And that having regard to the creation of the sd new ordinary shares, the following alterations be made in the arts of asson of the coy, that is to say:—

[Here set out the requisite alterations.]

Form 474. That the arts of asson be altered by inserting immediately after clause — a new clause, as follows:—

Capitalisation of profits (bonus and corresponding new shares).

- (1) The coy in general meeting may in the year 19— pass a resolution to the effect that it is desirable to capitalise the sum of 100,000L., being part of the undivided profits of the coy standing to the credit of the coy's reserve fund, and accordingly that that sum be distributed as a bonus, free of income tax, amongst the holders of the ordinary shares in proportion to the ordinary shares held by them resply, and that the directors be authorized to distribute amongst them the 100,000 unissued ordinary shares in like proportions.

- (2) When such resolution has been passed, the directors may allot and issue the 100,000 unissued ordinary shares credited as fully pd up to the holders of the outstanding ordinary shares in satisfaction of the sd bonus and as nearly as may be in proportion to the ordinary shares held by them resp'y, with full power to make such provisions by the issue of fractional certificates or otherwise as they think expedient for the case of fractions, and prior to such allotment the directors may authorize any person on behalf of the holders of such ordinary shares to enter into any agreement with the coy providing for the allotment to them of such shares credited as fully pd up and in satisfaction as aforesaid, and any agreement made under such authority shall be effective.
- 3) It shall be no objection to resolutions passed under paragraph (1) of this article that they are passed at the meeting at which the resolution introducing this article was confirmed as a special resolution, provided that due notice of the intention to propose such first-mentd resolutions shall have been given prior to the confirmatory meeting aforesaid.

Creation of debentures and special preference shares

2. That the capital of the coy be increased by the creation of 10,000 new shares of 10*s.* each, to be called special preference shares, and that there be attached to the sd shares the rights following, viz.:—

Debentures offered to members at discount, subject to their subscribing new shares.

- (1) The holders of the sd shares, or of such of them as shall for the time being be issued, shall be entitled rateably, in proportion to the numbers held by them resp'y, to nine-tenths of the profits of the coy which it shall from time to time be determined to divide, and to nine-tenths of the assets which in a winding-up shall be available for distribution among the members.

- (2) Each of the sd shares shall confer on the holder the right to twenty votes.

3. That the sd debentures be offered for subscription to the existing shareholders in the coy at the price of 9*l.* 10*s.* per 10*l.* debenture, to be pd by such instalments as the directors determine, and upon the terms that each subscriber for any of the sd debentures shall, in respect of every debenture subscribed for by him, be entitled to an allotment of one of the sd special preference shares upon payment of Form 475. its par value, and that if the said debentures shall be over subscribed by the shareholders, the subscribers shall be entitled to rank for allotment as nearly as may be in proportion to the shares now held by them, and that any of the debentures and shares not taken up by the shareholders may be disposed of on such terms and in such manner as the directors think fit.

Conversion of Shares into Stock.

Form 476. That the 10,000 shares in the capital of the coy which have been issued and fully paid up be converted into stock.

Conversion of shares into stock.

By sect. 41 (1) (c) of the Act of 1908 (replacing sect. 12 of the Act of 1862), a company limited by shares, if so authorized by its articles, may alter the conditions of its memorandum so as (inter alia) to convert all or any of its paid-up shares into stock and reconvert that stock into paid-up shares of any denomination.

The articles generally empower a company to convert any of its paid-up shares into stock. Sometimes the sanction of the company in general meeting or by special or extraordinary resolution is required, but where this is not the case the directors can generally exercise the power under such a clause as 113 of Form 251.

As to notice of conversion to be given to Registrar of Companies, see sect. 42 of the Act of 1908, and supra, Chap. VIII.

Form 477. That the whole of the preference shares in the capital of the coy be converted into stock, to be called preference stock.

Another.

Consolidation of Shares.

Form 478. 1. That the shares in the capital of the coy be consolidated in such manner that every five of the existing shares shall constitute one 5/ share, upon which the sum of 5/ shall be credited as having been paid up.

Consolidation of shares.

2. That the existing certificates of shares be called in by the directors and cancelled, and that new certificates be issued, subject to the provisions contained in clauses — of the arts of assen.

Sect. 41 (1) (b) of the Act of 1908 (replacing sect. 12 of the Act of 1862) permits a company limited by shares, if so authorized by its articles, to alter the conditions of its memorandum so as (inter alia) to consolidate and divide all or any of its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares. It is usual to insert the necessary authority in the articles (see supra, Form 251, clause 49), although it is but seldom exercised, the modern tendency being to reduce rather than increase the denomination of shares. Even though no power to consolidate is inserted, a single special resolution is sufficient.

Division of Shares.

That each of the existing 10*l.* shares be divided into two 5*l.* shares. Form 479.
upon each of which the sum of 4*l.* shall be credited as pd up. Division.

See sect. 41 of the Act of 1908, replacing sects. 21 and 22 of the Act of 1867.
Before this latter enactment it was illegal to subdivide shares. Holmen's case, 2 Ch. 714; Fielding and Rimington's case, ibid. See also Sewell's case, 3 Ch. 131.

For form of clause to be inserted in articles giving the requisite power, see supra, p. 684.

The power is to be exercised by special resolution; hence, if the articles do not contain the necessary authority, two successive special resolutions are necessary.
as in the case of a reduction of capital.

Notice of a special resolution subdividing the shares must be given to the Registrar of Companies.

(1.) That each of the 50*l.* ordinary shares in the coy's capital be Form 480.
divided into two shares of 25*l.* each, and that the capital of the coy be Subdivision reduced from 250,000*l.* to 200,000*l.*, by cancelling pd-up capital to and reduction.
the extent of 5*l.* per share in respect of each of the 10,000 shares of 25*l.* each resulting from such division, and reducing the nominal amount of such shares respy pro tanto.

(2.) That the shares resulting from the division of each of the Renumbering existing 50*l.* shares be renumbered, so that the shares representing and further that now numbered 1 be respy numbered 1 and 5,001, and those division into representing that now numbered 2 be respy numbered 2 and 5,002, preferred and and so on, and that the shares so to be numbered 1 to 5,000 be called deferred preferred shares, and those to be numbered 5,001 to 10,000 be called shares deferred shares, and that as between such preferred shares and such deferred shares such preferred shares shall confer a right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at 5 p.c.p.a. on the capital pd up thereon and no more than such dividend, and that the arts of asson of the coy be modified accordingly.

If the memorandum and articles give power to divide the capital into different classes, a resolution as above may be effective; but it is desirable to find express power as above, p. 684. In several cases companies have obtained the requisite power from Parliament.

That in accordance with the request in writing, signed by all the Form 481.
members of the coy and submitted to this meeting, and in exercise of Division of the power conferred by clause 5 of the coy's memdum of asson, the existing Preference shares free from restrictions in articles as to transfer.

- (a) The 15,000 preference shares aforesaid shall be those shares which are numbered — to — inclusive, — to — inclusive, — to — inclusive, and — to — inclusive, and such preference shares shall be from henceforth numbered 1 to 15,000 inclusive.
- b) The said preference shares shall carry a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a. on the capital paid up thereon, and such dividend shall run as from the 1st day of October, 19—, and shall be paid as nearly as may be half-yearly, on the — day of — and — day of —, the first payment to be made on the — day of — next.
- (c) Such preference shares shall be fully transferable and transmissible free from the restrictions imposed by clause 32 of the company's articles of association, and such shares shall only confer a right to vote at general meetings of the company upon any proposition for the sale of the company's undertaking, or for altering the regulations of the company, so as directly to interfere with the rights and privileges of the holders, and shall only confer a right to notice of and to attend at general meetings of the company where some such proposition is to be submitted.
- (d) Such preference shares in a winding-up shall rank for repayment of capital in priority to all the other shares.
- (e) The residue of the existing shares shall be numbered 15,001 to 30,000 inclusive, and shall be called ordinary shares, and, subject as aforesaid, such ordinary shares shall confer a right to the surplus profits of the company which it shall from time to time be determined to distribute by way of dividend, and in a winding-up shall rank for repayment of capital after the payment off of the capital paid up on the preference shares aforesaid.
- (f) These provisions, so far as necessary, shall take effect by way of alteration of the articles of association of the company.

In the above case there was power in the memorandum of association to divide the shares into several classes, &c.

Reduction of Capital.

See further, infra, p. 1255, Petitions.

It is now settled that any kind of reduction may be confirmed by the Court.
British and American Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399; Poole v.
National Bank of China, (1907) A. C. 229. The effect of these authorities has received statutory sanction in the words "in any way" in sect. 46, clause (1) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

 pursuant to sect. 40 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

Such a reduction does not require the confirmation of the Court. The shares were ordinary shares, and as to tax, see supra, p. 765.

Form 489. That the capital of the coy be reduced from 50,000*l.*, divided into 5,000 shares of 10*l.* each, to 30,000*l.*, divided into 5,000 shares of 6*l.* each, and that such reduction be effected by returning to the holders of the 5,000 shares that have been issued pd-up capital to the extent of 4*l.* per share, and by reducing the nominal amount of each of the said shares from 10*l.* to 6*l.*

Return of capital.

Form 490. That in respect of each share in the coy's capital upon which the sum of 4*l.* 10*s.* has been pd up, capital be pd off to the extent of 1*l.* upon the footing that the amount returned, or any part thof, may be called up again.

Return liable to recall.

Northmoor Co., confirmed 9th Feb., 1883, Kay, J.

In the above case, Kay, J., decided that there was jurisdiction to sanction a return of capital on this footing, and that decision has frequently been followed during the last few years. See also Coldhurst Co., Hall, V.-C., Jan., 1882; Explosives Co., Chitty, J., in 1885 and 1886; Fore Street Warehouse Co., Kay, J., W. N. (1888) 155; 59 L. T. 214. Capital, it need hardly be said, cannot be returned or paid off except with the sanction of the Court. Treva v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409. See supra, p. 861.

Form 491. That the capital of the coy be reduced from 500,000*l.*, divided into 500,000 shares of 1*l.* each, to 125,000*l.*, divided into 500,000 shares of 5*s.* each, and that such reduction be effected by cancelling capital which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets, to the extent of 15*s.* per share upon each of the 253,727 shares which have been issued, and are now outstanding, and by reducing the nominal amount of all the shares in the coy's capital from 1*l.* to 5*s.* per share.

Cancelling lost capital.

In cancelling capital which has been "lost or is unrepresented by available assets," it is the practice to use those words in the resolution, but they may be omitted, if desired, and the words "paid-up capital" can be substituted.

Form 492. That the capital of the coy be reduced from 180,000*l.* (divided into 7,000 shares of 20*l.* each, in this resolution called ordinary shares, and 8,000 preference shares of 5*l.* each) to 110,000*l.*, divided into 7,000 shares of 10*l.* each, and 8,000 preference shares of 5*l.* each, and that such reduction be effected by cancelling pd-up capital which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of 5*l.* per share on each of the ordinary shares, and by extinguishing the liability in respect of uncalled capital to the extent of 5*l.* per share on each of the ordinary shares, and by reducing the nominal amount of the ordinary shares from 20*l.* to 10*l.* each. Form 492

Reduction confirmed by Chitty, J., 12th May, 1888; R. Madulacema Coffee and Cinchona Co., Limited.

Where by the memorandum or articles, or terms of issue, the preference shares are made preferential, not only as regards dividend, but as regards capital, a cancellation of lost capital should prima facie, as in the above resolution, be thrown on the ordinary shares exclusively. American Pastoral Co., 62 L. T. 625. But in the absence of such special circumstances the reduction ought to be an all-round reduction pari passu on all classes of shares, as in Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co., 34 C. Div. 287; Direct Spanish Cable Co., 34 C. Div. 307; Barrow Hematite Co., 39 C. D. 382; Credit Assurance Guarantee Corp., (1902) 2 Ch. 601.

It was, however, held by North, J., in Quebrada Land Co., 40 C. D. 263, that even when the preference shares are given no preference as regards capital, it is competent to the company, by special resolution, to throw the loss exclusively on the ordinary shares; and that this view is correct has now been decided by the House of Lords. British and American Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399. Any mode of reduction which is not inequitable may be confirmed by the Court. ibid.; see Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 46 (1); Neale v. Birmingham Tramways Co., (1910) 2 Ch. 464; and Peole v. National Bank of China, (1907) A. C. 229.

There is, of course, no objection to throwing a loss on certain shares if the holders assent thereto. It has often been done, e.g., Virian & Co., W. N. (1886) 32; Llynvi Co., 26 W. R. 55; and Gatling Gun Co., 43 C. D. 628. Such a reduction hurts no one, and when confirmed and the minute registered it is unimpeachable.

Preference shares may be paid off and cancelled in pursuance of a contract in the memorandum and articles binding on both preference and ordinary shareholders by applying for the purpose a portion of the profits of the company. Re Didco Pier Co., (1891) 2 Ch. 354.

That the capital of the coy be reduced to 1,691,737*l.*, divided into 169,767 ordinary shares of 10*l.* each, and 84,067 general founders' shares of 1*l.* each, and that the remainder of the capital, namely, the 27,833 ordinary shares, numbered, &c., and the 29,933 general founders' shares, numbered, &c., be pd off (the capital represented thereby being in excess of the wants of the coy), and that such last-mentd ordinary and general founders' shares resply. and all liability thereon, be wholly extinguished. Form 493.

Reduction of capital by paying off and extinguishing specified ordinary and founders' shares.

The above resolution was confirmed by the House of Lords. British and American, &c. Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399. The company was possessed of assets in America and in England, and the object of the resolution was to pay off the American shareholders out of the American assets. It was held that this was in effect a purchase by the company of its own shares, but that the Court had, under the Companies Acts, 1867 and 1877, jurisdiction to sanction such a reduction of capital, or any other kind of reduction.

That the capital of the coy be reduced from 163,618*l.* to 50,700*l.* and that such reduction be effected by cancelling capital which has been lost, or is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of, and by the cancellation of the whole of the 5,943 ordinary shares of 3*l.* 10*s.* each, and the whole of the 20,521 second preference shares of 3*l.* 10*s.* each, and the sum of 1*l.* per share upon each of the 20,284 first preference shares of 3*l.* 10*s.* each, and by reducing the nominal amount of the sd first preference shares from 3*l.* 10*s.* to 2*l.* 10*s.* each

The above resolution was confirmed by Chitty, J., 13th Feb., 1895. See Floating Dock of St. Thomas, (1891) 1 Ch. 691. The first preference shares were, by the articles, given a preference both as regards capital and dividend, and, it being proved that the assets were worth less than the capital paid up on the preference shares, the order was made. The case was followed by Stirling, J., in London and New York Investment Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 860, followed by Farwell, J., in National Bank of China (Times, Feb. 14th, 1905).

That the capital of this coy be reduced by the cancellation or extinguishment of 1,482 shares, purchased in pursuance of the special resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting of the coy, held on the 4th day of February, 1882, and confirmed at a subsequent extraordinary general meeting, held on the 25th day of February, 1882.

Albert New Mills Co., Limited and Reduced, confirmed by Kay, J., July 30, 1887. An effort was made to get this reduction through on the footing that creditors were not interested; but the learned judge held that they were, and required the usual proceedings.

Pope and Pearson, Limited, confirmed 24th December, 1881, by the High Court.

Where capital has been improperly returned, it is desirable to get the sanction of the Court as above, so as to get rid of the liability on the part of the directors for the breach of trust in misapplying the funds of the company.

There have been several subsequent cases in which this has been done, but the creditors are, of course, in all such cases interested, and the formal procedure must be followed.

That the capital of the coy be reduced to 850,000*l.*, divided into 99,800 ordinary shares of 8*l.* 10*s.* each, and 2,000 deferred shares of 1*l.* each, and that such reduction be effected by cancelling capital to the extent of 1*l.* 10*s.* in respect of each of the ordinary shares which have been issued and are now outstanding, and by reducing the nominal amount of all the ordinary shares in the coy's capital from 10*l.* to 8*l.* 10*s.*, but such reduction to be without prejudice to the coy's right to sue for and recover all arrears of calls now outstanding and due in respect of the sd shares or any of them. Form 498.

This was the resolution in Credit Assurance and Guarantee Corporation, Limited. The reduction was sanctioned by the Court of Appeal, 30th July, 1902. See report, (1902) 2 Ch. 601.

That the capital of the coy be reduced to 1,345,000*l.*, divided into 1,500,000 preference shares of 13*s.* each, and 1,350,000 ordinary shares of 5*s.* each, and 650,000 deferred shares of 1*s.* each, and that such reduction be effected as follows:— Form 499.

- (1) By cancelling pd-up capital which is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of 7*s.* in respect of each of the preference shares, and by reducing the nominal amount of such preference shares accordingly to 13*s.* each.
- (2) By cancelling pd-up capital which is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of 15*s.* in respect of each of the ordinary shares in the coy, and by reducing the nominal amount of such ordinary shares to 5*s.* per share.
- (3) By cancelling pd-up capital which is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of 19*s.* in respect of each of the deferred shares in the coy, and by reducing the nominal amount of such deferred shares and of the unissued deferred shares to 1*s.* per share.

Form 499. The above is a resolution settled by the author in Welsbach Incandescent Gas Light Co., Limited, (1904) 1 Ch. 87. The reduction was sanctioned by the Court of Appeal.

The memorandum of association defined the rights of each class, but power to modify was inserted. Meetings of each class were held approving of the proposed resolution for reduction, and of resolutions making corresponding alterations in the articles, and special resolutions were passed accordingly, declaring, amongst other things, that the provisions thereby made in regard to the rights of the members of each class as regards dividends and distribution of assets in a winding-up should take effect by way of modification of the rights originally attached thereto, and accordingly such members should not be entitled to any rights inconsistent therewith, and in particular all arrears of undeclared dividends up to the time when the said order and minute should be registered should be extinguished.

The provisions in sect. 46 (1) (b) of the Companies Act, 1908, empowering a company to cancel "any lost capital or any capital unrepresented by available assets" are alternative provisions, and the latter is not explanatory of the former. Re Hoare & Co., Limited, (1904) 2 Ch. 208.

Reducing without prejudice to liability.

That the capital of the coy be reduced from 2,000,000*l.*, divided into 200,000 shares of 10*l.* each, to 1,846,875*l.*, divided into 25,000 shares of 10*l.* each (being the shares at present unissued) and 175,000 shares of 9*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* each. And that such reduction be effected by cancelling paid-up capital which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of 17*s.* 6*d.* per share in respect of each of the 175,000 shares which have been issued, and by reducing the nominal amount of each of the said shares from 10*l.* to 9*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, and that the conditions contained in the coy's memdum of asson be modified accordingly.

Form 501.

Cancellation of unissued
shares.

That the capital be reduced from &c. to &c., by cancelling 10,000 of the existing preference shares which have not been taken or agreed to be taken by any person.

Under sect. 41 (1) (e) of the Companies Act, 1908, a special resolution as above operates without the sanction of the Court. And where the articles give the requisite power (e.g., by resolution of a general meeting), a special resolution is not requisite.

Form 502.

Cancellation of shares and consolidating others.

1. That the capital of the coy be reduced by cancelling the 100 founders' shares of 1*l.* each.

2. That the ordinary shares in the capital of the coy be consolidated in such manner that every five thof shall constitute one 5*l.* share.

The above resolution for reduction was confirmed by Chitty, J., in Islington, &c. Co., 10th May, 1892. The founders' shares had been surrendered.

That the capital of the coy be reduced from 30,000*L.*, divided into 160 ordinary and 140 preference shares, all of 50*L.* each, to 23,000*L.*, divided into 460 ordinary shares of 50*L.* each, and that such reduction be effected by returning to the holders of the 140 preference shares that have been pd up capital to the extent of 50*L.* per share out of the net profits of the coy set apart under clause 116 of the arts of issn of the coy, and by cancelling the capital represented by the sd preference shares.

Form 503.

Reduction by payment off of one of two classes.

The above resolution was confirmed by Chitty, J. See Didido Pier Co., (1891) 2 Ch. 351. The articles provided for setting aside a portion of the profits as a sinking fund to redeem the preference shares. Held, that the Court could sanction the reduction.

1. That the capital of the coy be reduced from 780,000*L.*, divided into 7,800 shares of 100*L.* each, with 87*L.* 16*s.* paid thereon and 12*L.* 4*s.* uncalled, to 546,000*L.*, divided into 7,800 shares of 70*L.* each, with 65*L.* 16*s.* paid up thereon and 4*L.* 4*s.* uncalled, and that such reduction be effected—

Form 504.

Reduction by payment off and issue of debentures.

(a) By extinguishing the liability in respect of the uncalled capital to the extent of 8*L.* per share on each of the shares of the coy;

(b) By returning to the shareholders pd-up capital to the extent of 22*L.* per share.

2. That the sd 7,800 shares of 70*L.* each, with 65*L.* 16*s.* pd thereon, be subdivided into 54,600 shares of 10*L.* each, with 9*L.* 8*s.* pd up on each share.

3. That the directors be and they are hby authorized to create an issue of debentures for a total sum not exceeding 139,000*L.* [subject to certain specified provisions].

4. That the directors be and they are hby authorized to issue the debentures to such of the shareholders as shall consent to accept the same at par, in part satisfaction of the cash to be repd to them on their shares as hereinbefore provided, but so that the amount per share to be so satisfied should not exceed 18*L.*, and that as regards any debentures which shall not be so accepted by the shareholders, the directors shall be authorized to dispose of them to such persons, whether shareholders or not, and upon such terms as they think fit.

Confirmed by Stirling, J., Nixon's Navigation Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 872.

That the capital be reduced, &c. by cancelling the pd-up shares numbered —, as provided by the provisional agreement, &c.

Form 505.

Cancellation of issued shares.

In such a case the sanction of the Court must be obtained; but if the shares are fully paid up and nothing has been paid for the surrender, the consent of creditors may not be requisite. See sect. 48 of the Companies Act, 1908, and Levi Co., 26 W. R. 55; 37 L. T. 373; Vivian & Co., 34 W. R. 411; W. N. (1886) 32; Islington Electric Co., W. N. (1892) 83. But having regard to Form 505. Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409, it is very clear that such a transaction ought not to be carried out without the prior sanction of the Court, and the same observation applies to Form 506. In Fisvan & Co. there was a provisional agreement that the company should be at liberty to cancel some of the vendor's shares by special resolution sanctioned by the Court.

Form 506.Cancellation
of shares

That the capital of the coy be reduced to 58,520*l.*, divided into 2,926 shares of 20*l.* each, and that such reduction be effected by cancelling all the unissued shares, and also the 640 shares which from time to time have been surrendered to or for the benefit of the coy, and that the conditions contained in the coy's memorandum of association be modified accordingly.

Mediterranean Hotel Co. Carson, J., 3rd August, 1885. In this case also the shares had been purchased out of the reserve fund. See also York Glass Co., Limited, 60 L. T. 744.

Form 507.Paying off capital out of profits

That out of the accumulated profits of the coy there be returned to each member a sum equal to 10 p.c. on the capital paid up on the shares held by him in reduction of such capital, and to the intent that the unpaid capital may be increased by a similar amount.

See sect. 40 of the Act of 1908, infra. Appx.

Form 508.Provision for issue of income certificates in respect of arrears of preference
dividend.

That if the capital of the coy shall be reduced to 1,870,000*l.*, the holders of preference stock shall be given and accept in satisfaction and discharge of their right to receive out of past or future profits any dividends or preference stock in respect of the years ending 30th June 1901, 30th June, 1902, and 30th June, 1903, funded income certificates equal in nominal amount to 9 p.c. of the amount of the preference stock held by them resp'y, such certificates to bear interest at the rate of 4 p.c.p.a. (non-cumulative) as from the 30th June, 1903, payable out of surplus profits remaining in the year ending 30th June, 1901, and in every subsequent year, after providing for the dividend on the preference stock and arrears, if any, other than arrears hereby discharged, the coy to be at liberty at any time, without prejudice to the preference dividend, to redeem such certificates or any of them out of profits; and in case the whole of such certificates are not redeemed by 30th June, 1918, the coy shall set aside out of surplus profits remaining after payment of the cumulative preference dividend and the interest on the said certificates in the year ending 30th June, 1919, and every subsequent year, an amount not exceeding 5,000*l.* in each year so far as the profits extend, to be applied in redeeming the certificates for the time being outstanding.

The above was one of the features of the scheme for reduction of capital sanctioned by the Court in 1903. See Allsopp & Sons, Limited, 51 W. R. 644.

That the 20,000 preference shares in the coy of 1*l.* each and 2,000 deferred shares in the coy of 1*l.* each be reorganized and consolidated into one class of 22,000 shares of 1*l.* each, to be called ordinary shares, and to rank as regards dividend and capital pari passu, and each share to confer one vote, and that the coy's memorandum and articles be altered accordingly.

Form 508a.

Resolution for reorganization of capital.

The above resolution is to operate under sect. 45 of the Act—the reorganization of capital section. It has to be approved by a resolution passed by a majority in number of shareholders of each class holding three-fourths of the share capital of that class, and confirmed in the same manner as a special resolution, and requires the confirmation of the Court.

Sometimes where founders' shares have become very valuable it is urgently desired in the general interest of the company to convert them into ordinary shares. Thus, if there be 100 l. founders' shares, worth in the market 100*l.* each, it may be desired to issue to the holders 10,000*l.* in nominal value of ordinary shares, credited as fully paid up, as the consideration for the surrender or cancellation of the founders' shares, so that the possible conflict of interests arising from the division into two classes may be terminated.

Conversion of founders' shares.

But such a transaction is beset with difficulties, for it amounts to a purchase by the company of its own shares, and is therefore ultra vires unless sanctioned by the Court as a reduction of capital. Trevor v. Whitworth, 12 App. Cas. 409; Famatina Co. v. Bury, (1910) A. C. 439. Where, however, the ordinary shares are at a large premium the conversion may be effected in a regular manner by arranging with the holders of the founders' shares that they shall be at liberty to subscribe at par for a number of ordinary shares, sufficient regard being had to their premium value to give to the founders their equivalent for their founders' shares, the founders undertaking in consideration of this liberty to allow the founders' shares to be cancelled. Then let the shares be subscribed for and paid up at par, and let it be sanctioned by the Court. Such sanction can be obtained without consent of creditors, for the reduction of capital by cancelling the founders' shares does not involve any diminution of liability or payment off of any paid-up capital. See infra, p. 1261. The following forms indicate the mode in which such a conversion may in such circumstances be effected. Sometimes the transaction is carried into effect by a private Act of Parliament.

1. That the agree^{ment} of the ——— day of ———, and made between A. B. on behalf of the coy of the one part, and C. D. on behalf of himself and all other the holders of founders' shares in the capital of the coy of the other part (being an agree^{ment} providing for the cancellation of the 300 founders' shares of 1*l.* each, and the subscription at par by the holders of such founders' shares of new ordinary shares in the capital of the coy to be created as therein mentd, which agree^{ment} has been ratified by all the holders of the sd founders' shares other than the sd C. D.), be and the same is hereby approved of and sanctioned, and that the directors be and they are hereby authorized to affix the seal of the coy to such agree^{ment} and carry the same into effect if and when the same becomes absolute.

Form 509.

Resolution cancelling founders' shares.

The agreement referred to in the above resolution was as follows:—

Form 510.

Provisional agreement for cancelling founders'
shares.

AN AGREEMENT made the — day of —, between A. B. on behalf of the — Coy, Limtd (huftr called the coy), of the one pt, and C. D., of, &c., on behalf of himself and all others the holders of founders' shares in the capital of the coy, of the other pt. WHEREAS the coy was incorporated in 19— and has a nominal capital of £— divided into — preference shares of 1*l.* each and — ordinary shares of 1*l.* each and — founders' shares of 1*l.* each; AND WHEREAS all the sd shares have been issued and are fully pd up; AND WHEREAS it is apprehended that the market value of each of the sd founders' shares is £— or thbts, and of each of the sd ordinary shares is £— or thbts; AND WHEREAS it is deemed expedient that the sd founders' shares shall be cancelled, and that the holders thof shall subscribe for and be allotted ordinary shares in the capital of the coy upon the terms huftr set forth, and that for such purposes the capital of the coy shall be increased by the creation of — new ordinary shares of 1*l.* each:

NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED as follows:—

1. When this agreement becomes absolute the sd A. B. and each of the other holders of founders' shares afsd who shall ratify this agreement (huftr referred to as a "ratifying holder") shall in respect of every founders' share held by him be deemed to apply for an allotment of — of the sd new ordinary shares upon the footing and condition that he is to pay up the full nominal amount thof by two instalments, namely, 10*s.* per share on allotment and 10*s.* per share thirty days after allotment, and the coy shall allot the same accordingly without further applicon, and the allottees shall duly and punctually pay such instalments.

2. The coy is to be at liberty to pass a special resolution cancelling the founders' shares afsd, and to apply to the Ct for an order confirming such cancellation, and the coy shall convene the requisite meetings for the purpose, and the sd A. B. and each ratifying holder shall concur in the passing of such special resolution and also a resolution for increasing the capital by the creation of the sd — new ordinary shares of 1*l.* each.

3. This agreement is conditional:

- (1) On its being ratified by all the holders of founders' shares afsd other than the sd A. B.; and
- (2) On its being approved by the coy in general meeting; and
- (3) On a resolution of a general meeting of the coy being passed for the creation of — new ordinary shares of 1*l.* each;
- (4) On a special resolution being passed for the reduction of the capital by the cancellation of the sd — founders' shares; and
- (5) On the sanction of the Ct being obtained to such reduction

And if all these conditions are not fulfilled within six calendar months from the date hof, this agreement shall at the expiration of such period become void; and if all these conditions are fulfilled within the sd period of six calendar months, then immediately on such fulfilment this agreemt shall become absolute Form 510.

As WITNESS, &c.

Reserve Capital.

That capital of the coy to the extent of 10*l*. in respect of each of the issued shares shall not be capable of being called up except in the event of and for the purpose of the coy being wound up. Form 511.

Reserve liability.

Change of Name.

That the name of the coy be changed to The Coy, Limtd. Form 512.

As to change of name, see sect. 8 (3) of the Companies Act, 1908, replacing sect. 13 of the Act of 1862. The proper course is to ascertain from the Registrar that there is no objection to the proposed name, apply to the Board of Trade for liberty to make the change, and then to finally pass a special resolution as above. Liberty is readily granted. The change is not complete until the new certificate of incorporation for which the section provides is issued (sect. 8 (4)). Shuckleford, Ford & Co. v. Douglassfield, L. R. 3 C. P. 107.

Change of name.

Borrowing and Debenture Stock.

That the directors' power to borrow conferred by clause 49 of the arts of asson be extended, so that the amount at any one time owing in respect of moneys so borrowed or raised shall not, without the sanction of a general meeting, exceed £- . Form 513.

Extension of
power.

That the directors be and they are hby authorized, in addition to any sums already borrowed for the purposes of the coy, to borrow to an amount not exceeding in the aggregate 10,000*l*., by the issue of 200 debentures of 50*l*. each, redeemable on the 1st January, 19 , such debentures to bear interest at the rate of 10 p.c.p.a. payable half-yearly, and to be in the form of the draft, a print whereof has been produced to this meeting and identified by the signature of the secretary of the coy. Form 514.

Creation of debentures to pay off old debentures.

That the repayment of the money payable according to the tenor of the sd debentures be secured by a trust deed in the form of the draft submitted to this meeting and identified by the signature of the secretary of the coy, and expressed to be made between the coy of the one part and — of the other part, and that the directors be and they are hby authorized to execute, under the seal of the coy, a deed in the terms of the sd draft.

Form 515.

Another.

That the directors be and they are hby authorized to borrow the sum of 10,000*l.* for the purpose of paying off the debentures of the coy which fall due on the 1st January, 19—, and that such sum be raised by the issue of new debentures payable on 1st January, 19—, and bearing interest at the reduced rate of 4 p.c.p.a., such debentures to be secured by trust deed, and that the new debentures and trust deed also be framed in accordance with the forms submitted to this meeting, and identified by the signature of the coy's secretary; and that the directors be and they are hby authorized to issue any of the sd new debentures in exchange, at par, for any of the existing debentures the holders of which may desire to renew, and that, pending the placing of the new debentures, the directors be and they are hby authorized to borrow from the coy's bankers or otherwise, on such terms as they think fit, any moneys required to pay off any of the existing debentures which fall due.

Acquisition of a Business.Form 516.

Authority to directors to acquire by amalgamation another concern, and sanction of provisional agreement, and when latter absolute to increase capital.

That it is expedient to acquire and take over by way of amalgamation the undertaking of the — Coy, Limtd, and that the provisional agreement for the purpose submitted to this meeting be and the same is hby approved; and that the directors of this coy be and they are hby authorized to adopt and ratify and to affix the seal of this coy to the sd agreement and to carry the same into effect, with full power to assent to any modifications in the agreement which they think expedient in the interests of this coy, either before or after the adoption thereof; and that if the sd agreement becomes absolute the directors be and they are hby empowered to increase the capital of the coy to 1,500,000*l.*, by the creation of 33,800 new shares of 20*l.* each; and that the directors be and they are hby authorized to deal with any portion of the shares so created in accordance with the sd agreement in so far as the same shall be required for the purposes of such agreement, and to deal with any surplus as the directors may think expedient in the interests of the coy, and without being under any obligation to offer the same in accordance with clause 23 of the arts of asson of this coy.

Division in Specie in a Winding-up.Form 517.

Winding-up in view of provisional agreement having been sanctioned for sale of undertaking to another company.

1. That, having regard to the provisional agreement of the — day of —, entered into by A. on behalf of this coy for the sale of the undertaking of this coy to the N. Coy, Limtd, which agreement was ratified by the general meeting of the coy held on this — day of —, it is desirable to wind up this coy, and accordingly that this coy be wound up voluntarily, and that B. and C., directors of this coy, be and they are hby appointed the liqrs for the purpose of such winding-up.

See "Reconstruction," infra, and notes to Form 43, p. 372, supra.

2. That the sd liqrs be and they are hby authorized (when and so soon as the debts and liabilities of this coy shall have been pd and satisfied or duly provided for) to distribute in specie or kind amongst the contributories of this coy in accordance with their respective rights and interests therein, the 50,000 ordinary shares of 5*l.* each in the capital of the N. Coy, Limtd (credited as fully pd up), which form pt of the consideration for the sd sale, and so that each contributory shall be entld to elect to have his or her proportion thof allotted to himself or herself, or to his or her nominee or nominees, such election to be declared by notice in writing to the sd liqrs within twenty-one days after the passing of this resolution.

3. That the sd liqrs do sell the shares not so allotted, and do pay the net proceeds of sale to the contributories who would have been entld to the shares sold, rateably in proportion to the number of the shares sold which they would have been entld to call for.

Form 517.

Distribution in specie of sale consideration and sale by liquidator of unclaimed assets (shares of other company).

Debenture Holders' Resolutions.

That this meeting of the holders of the debentures of the — Coy, Limtd, secured by trust deed, dated, &c., and made, &c., hby sanctions the provisional agreemt submitted to this meeting, which agreemt is dated the — day of —, and made between the sd coy of the one pt, and A. B., purporting to contract on behalf of all the holders of the sd debentures, of the other pt, and assents to the modifications of the rights of the debenture holders and of the provisions of the sd trust deed to be effected by the sd agreemt [or hby assents to the proposed modifications of the sd trust deed, and authorizes the trees thof to concur with the coy in executing a supplemental trust deed in the terms of the draft submitted to this meeting for effecting such modifications].

Resolution of directors giving instructions to bankers as to mode of company's dealings with them.

2. That the sd bank be instructed to pay and honour all bills and promissory notes payable at the sd bank, and expressed to be accepted or made on behalf of this coy, at any time or times, whether the banking account or accounts of this coy are overdrawn by the payment thof or are in credit or otherwise, provided they are signed by two directors, and countersigned by the secretary for the time being.

3. That as regards bills and promissory notes expressed to be made, drawn, endorsed, or accepted on behalf of this coy, the sd bank be instructed to treat such bills and promissory notes as having been duly made, drawn, endorsed, or accepted, as the case may be, on behalf of this coy, and to discount or otherwise deal with the same accordingly, provided they are signed by two directors, and countersigned by the secretary for the time being.

4. That the sd bank be instructed to treat all cheques, drafts, and orders expressed to be endorsed on behalf of this coy as having been duly endorsed on behalf of this coy, provided they are signed by one director and the secretary for the time being.

5. That the said bank be furnished with a list of the names of the directors, secretary, and other officers of this coy, and that they be from time to time informed in writing, signed by the chairman and secretary of this coy, of any change which may take place in them.

6. That these resolutions be communicated to the sd bank and remain in force until notice in writing to the contrary, signed by the chairman and secretary of this coy for the time being, be given to the sd bank.

Share-Warrants.Form 541.

Resolutions as to conditions for issue of share-warrants.

Resolutions declaring the conditions on which share-warrants will be issued:—

The following are conditions suitable to be made by the directors under Form 251, clause 40, supra, p. 680.

That the following conditions as to the issue of share-warrants be made pursuant to clause — of the arts of assen of the coy.

Form 541.

Upon whose request warrant to be issued.

1. No share-warrant shall be issued except upon a request in writing by the person for the time being upon the register of members as the holder of the share or stock in respect of which the share-warrant is to be issued, and it shall be no objection that the request is signed by the person making the same before his name was entered in the register as such holder.

For form of share-warrant, see infra, p. 1150.

There can be no doubt that if the company issue a share-warrant to a person who is not entitled it will be estopped from denying the right of any purchaser from him. See further, introductory notes to Chap. XIV. The utmost care ought therefore to be used. Sometimes these clauses are embodied in the articles of association.

2. The request shall be in such form, and authenticated by such statutory declaration or other evidence as to the identity of the person making the same, and of his right or title to the share or stock, as the directors shall from time to time require, and shall be lodged at the office of the coy.

Regulations as to request.

3. Before the issue of a share-warrant the certificate (if any) then outstanding in respect of the shares or stock inter led to be included in it shall be delivered up to the directors, unless they dispense with this condition.

Certificates to be surrendered

If the certificate is left outstanding it will involve a risk to the company, and the directors may reasonably require an indemnity.

4. Any person applying to have a share-warrant issued shall at the time of application pay to the directors the stamp duty payable in respect thereof, and also such fee, not exceeding 1s. for each share-warrant, as the directors shall from time to time fix.

Stamp duty.

By the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, a share-warrant is chargeable with duty of an amount equal to three times the amount of the ad valorem stamp duty which would be chargeable on a deed transferring the share or shares or stock specified in the warrant or certificate if the consideration for the transfer were the nominal value of such share or shares or stock.

By the same Act:—"If a share-warrant is issued without being duly stamped, the company issuing the same, and also every person who at the time when it is issued is the managing director, or secretary, or other principal officer of the company, shall forfeit the sum of 50l."

Under sect. 115 of the Stamp Act, 1891, a composition in respect of this duty may be made in some cases.

5. Share-warrants shall be issued under the seal and be signed by one director and countersigned by the secretary or some other officer in the place of the secretary appointed by the board for that purpose.

Execution.

6. Each share-warrant shall contain such number of shares or amount of stock, and be in such language and form as the directors shall think fit. The number originally attached to each share shall be stated in the share-warrant.

Number.

Form 541. Coupons.	7. Coupons payable to bearer of such number as the directors shall think fit, shall be attached to share-warrants providing for the payment of the dividends upon and in respect of the shares or stock included therein, and the directors shall provide as they shall from time to time think fit for the issue of fresh coupons to the bearer, for the time being of share-warrants when the coupons attached thereto shall be exhausted.
Number of coupons.	8. Each coupon shall be distinguished by the number of the share-warrant to which it belongs, and by a number showing the place it holds in the series of coupons belonging to the warrant. The coupons shall not be expressed to be payable at any particular period, nor shall they contain any statement as to the amount which shall be payable.
Payment of dividends.	9. Upon any dividend being declared to be payable upon the shares or stock specified in any share-warrant, the directors shall publish an advertisement in one daily newspaper published in London, and in such other newspapers, if any, as they shall think fit, stating the amount per share or per cent. payable, the date of payment, and the serial number of the coupon to be presented; and thereupon any person presenting and delivering up a coupon of that serial number at the place, or one of the places, stated in the coupon, or in the sd advertisement, shall be entitled to receive at the expiration of such number of days (not exceeding five) after so delivering it up as the directors shall from time to time direct, the dividend payable on the shares or stock specified in the share-warrant to which the sd coupon shall belong, according to the notice which shall have been so given by advertisement.
Bearer of coupon alone recognized.	10. The coy shall be entld to recognize an absolute right in the bearer for the time being of any coupon so advertised as afd for payment to such amount of dividend on the share-warrant whereto the sd coupon shall belong as shall have been as afd declared payable upon presentation and delivery of the coupon, and the delivery of such coupon shall be a good discharge to the coy accordingly.
As to worn or defaced warrant.	11. If any share-warrant or coupon be worn out or defaced, the directors may, upon the surrender thof for cancellation, issue a new one in its stead.
As to lost or destroyed warrant.	12. If any share-warrant or coupon be lost or destroyed, the directors may, upon the loss or destruction being established to their satisfaction, and upon such indemnity being given to the coy as they shall think adequate, issue another share-warrant or coupon in lieu thof.
Fee on issue of new warrant.	13. In every case provided for by conditions 11 and 12 a fee of 2s. 6d., exclusive of all expenses attending the investigation of evidence of loss or destruction, and of an indemnity to the coy, shall be pd to the coy by the person availing himself of those conditions.
On what conditions holder of warrant may vote.	14. No person shall as bearer of a share-warrant be entld to attend, or vote, or exercise in respect thof any of the rights of a member, at any general meeting of the coy, or sign any requisition for or aid in calling any general meeting, unless three days at least before the day appointed for the meeting, in the first case, and unless before the requisition is left at the office, in the second case, he shall have deposited the share-warrant at the office, or such other place as the directors appoint, together with a statement in writing of his name and address, and unless the share-warrant shall remain so deposited until after the general meeting, or any adjournment thereof shall have been held. The names of more than one as joint holders of a share-warrant shall not be received. Form 541.

This and the following clause are found to work well. They prevent peroration, and are convenient both to the holders of share-warrants and to the company. The certificate requires no stamp.

15. There shall be delivered to every person so depositing a share-warrant a certificate stating his name and address, and the number of shares or the amount of stock represented by the share-warrant so deposited by him, and such certificate shall entitle him to attend and vote at a general meeting in the same way as if he were a registered member of the company in respect of the shares or stock specified in the said certificate. Upon delivering up of the said certificate to the company, the share-warrant in respect whereof it shall have been given shall be returned. Certificates of deposit.

The certificate may be as follows:—

The — Coy, Limtd.

No. —.

This is to certify that A. B., of —, has, in accordance with the regulations of the company, deposited the under-mentioned share-warrants, in respect of which he is entitled to attend the general meeting of the company, to be held at —, on the — day of —.

Dated, &c

—, Secretary.

[Particulars of share-warrants deposited.]

16. No person as bearer of any warrant shall be entitled to exercise any of the rights of a member (save as herebefore expressly provided in respect of general meetings) without producing such warrant and stating his name and address, and (if and when the directors so require) permitting an indorsement to be made thereon of the fact, date, purpose, and consequence of its production. When warrant to be produced.

The above clause is occasionally used.

17. If the bearer of a share-warrant shall surrender it to be cancelled, and shall therewith lodge at the office a declaration in writing, signed by him, in such form, and authenticated in such manner as the Surrender of warrants.

Form 541. directors require, requesting to be registered as a member in respect of the shares or stock specified in the sd share-warrant, and stating in such declaration his name, address, and occupation, he shall be entld to have his name entered as a member in the register of members of the coy in respect of the shares specified in the share-warrant so surrendered.

Sect. 37 (3) of the Act provides that "The bearer of a share-warrant shall, subject to the articles of the company, be entitled, on surrendering it for cancellation, to have his name entered as a member in the register of members" [hence it is necessary to provide for the surrender], "and the company shall be responsible for any loss incurred by any person by reason of the company entering in its register of members the name of any bearer of a share-warrant in respect of the shares or stock specified therein without the warrants being surrendered and cancelled."

Meaning of share-warrant.

18. In the above conditions, share-warrant means a warrant in respect of a share or shares, or of stock of the coy, issued pursuant to the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 37, and the arts of asson of the coy.

Share-warrants to bearer are always treated as negotiable instruments. Whether they are so or not, under the Act of 1908, is not quite clear, but there is a valid mercantile custom to treat them as negotiable, and this is effective Webb, Hale & Co. v. Alexandria Water Co. (1905), 21 T. L. R. 572.

Holding a share-warrant will not qualify a director where a share qualification is required. Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 37 (4).

The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, provides in sect. 26 as to the particulars to be contained in the annual summary where share-warrants have been issued; and sect. 38 provides penalties for forgery and personation.

Forged Transfers Acts.

Form 542.

Adoption of Forged Transfers Acts.

That the coy do adopt the provisions of the Forged Transfers Acts, 1891 and 1892, and that the directors be and they are hby authorized, subject to the provisions of those Acts, to make compensation out of the funds of the coy for any loss arising from a transfer of any of the stock or security of the coy in pursuance of a forged transfer, or of a transfer under a forged power of attorney, whether such loss shall arise, and whether the transfer or the power of attorney were forged before or after the passing of the Forged Transfers Acts, 1891 and 1892, and that, subject to further resolution at any future general meeting, no additional charge be made upon the registration of transfers. And also that the directors be and are hby further authorized, if they think fit, to provide a fund to meet claims, proved to their satisfaction, for such compensation by insurance, or in any other manner that the directors may resolve upon. Supra, p. 673.

CERTIFICATES.

CHAPTER XIV.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

The articles of a company usually give the members the right to a Certificate of share certificate. See supra, p. 653. Moreover, under sect. 92 of the Act (1908), a company is bound under penalty to issue certificates within two months after allotment or registration of transfer. And prima facie the shareholder is entitled to a "clean" certificate, e.g., one undefaced by a memorandum that the company is entitled to a lien on the shares. W. Kay & Son, Ltd., (1902) 1 Ch. 467.

This power of granting certificates is to give shareholders the opportunity of more easily dealing with their shares in the market, and to afford facilities to them of selling their shares by at once showing a marketable title; and the effect of this facility is to make the shares of greater value. The power of giving certificates is, therefore, for the benefit of the company in general; and it is a declaration by the company to all the world that the person in whose name the certificate is made out, and to whom it is given, is a shareholder in the company, and it is given by the company with the intention that it should be so used by the person to whom it is given, and acted upon in the sale and transfer of shares." Per Cockburn, C. J., Bahia, &c. Ry. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 595.

By sect. 23 of the Act of 1908, a certificate under the common seal of the company, specifying any shares or stock held by any member, is to be prima facie evidence of the title of the member to the share or shares or stock; and sect. 30 provides for the keeping of a register of members.

Certificates
prima facie evidence of title;
object of.

"A certificate" is "a solemn affirmation under the seal of the company that a certain amount of shares or stock stands in the name of the individual mentioned in the certificate." Per Lord Cairns, L. C., in Shropshire Union, &c. Co. v. The Queen, L. R. 7 H. L. 196, 509. And Lord Hatherley (p. 512) adds: "The certificate does not tell you anything more than the register itself told you. The register told you that he was owner, and the certificate tells you he is owner. The certificate tells you that he is on the register, and that he is on the register for a certain number of shares; that is apparent upon the face of the register itself."

The difference is that the register remains at the office of the company. The share certificate the member can take about with him as evidence of ownership.

The certificates "in companies of this kind are the proper (and indeed the only) documentary evidence of title in the possession of a shareholder." Per Lord Selborne, Société Générale de Paris v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 20, 29.

And in the same case (p. 44) Lord Fitzgerald says: "The statute and the articles must be taken together. The former shows that the certificates are to be primâ facie evidence of the title to the shares; and the latter that the certificates are the only instruments and evidence of title which the member is entitled to have delivered to him."

Responsibilities in issuing.

Forged
transfer.

company.

The share certificate being thus made the proper evidence of a member's title, it behoves the directors to use the utmost care in issuing certificates; for on the principle illustrated by Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & E. 649, and Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Ex. 654, the company is estopped from denying the truth of the representation contained in the certificate as against any person dealing with the shares in reliance thereon. Thus in Bahia, &c. Ry. Co., ubi supra, the company, acting upon a forged transfer, issued a certificate to the transferee. A., in reliance on this certificate, purchased and paid for the shares specified in it, and they were duly transferred into his name. The forgery was subsequently discovered, and the company was, under sect. 35 of the Act of 1862 (now sect. 32 of the Act of 1908), ordered to restore the name of the real owner to the register. It was held, in an action by A. against the company, that he was entitled to recover as damages for the loss of the shares the value of the shares at the time the company first refused to recognize him as a member, with interest at 4 per cent. from that time.

See also Burkinshaw v. Nicolls, 3 App. Cas. 1004, 1011; Hart v. Frontino, L. R. 5 Ex. 111; Eaglesfield v. Marquis of Londonderry, 4 Ch. Div. 693; Cottam v. Eastern Counties Rail. Co., 1 J. & H. 243; Johnston v. Renton, 9 Eq. 181; Ottos Kopje Diamond Mines, (1893) 1 Ch. 618; Re Coasters, Ltd., (1911) 1 Ch. 86; Seton, 6th ed. 2310.

The rule, however, does not apply where the person to whom the certificate is issued is a trustee for the company, for the certificate does not say that the company has no equitable interest. In such a case the company may refuse to register the transfer. Shropshire Union, &c. Co. v. The Queen, L. R. 7 H. L. 496.

Nor is there any estoppel where the seal of the company is affixed without authority, e.g. by the secretary of the company for his own purposes. Ruben v. Great Fingall Co., (1906) A. C. 430, overruling Shaw v. Port Philip Co., 13 Q. B. D. 103.

And it must be shown that the party acted on the certificate; for if he merely relies on a forged transfer, and is registered and receives a certificate of title, the company is not estopped as against him, unless he acts on the certificate. Simm v. Anglo-American Telegraph Co., 5 Q. B. Div. 188; Coates v. L. & S. W. Rail. Co., 41 L. T. 553; Vulcan Ironworks Co., W. N. (1885) 120. But where the plaintiff claiming under a forged transfer, received a certificate from the company and bonâ fide acted thereon by selling the shares, he was held by the House of Lords entitled to recover damages from the company. Tompkinson v. Balkis, (1893) A. C. 396. As to forged transfers, see further, pp. 667, 673-676, supra.

So, also, where the plaintiff had been put to rest by the certificate issued to him until it was too late to get redress against the real wrongdoer, it was held that the company was estopped. Dixon v. Kennaway & Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 833.

Again, where B. advanced money to a company upon the footing that he was to have as security 10,000*l.* of paid-up shares, and the company issued to him a certificate that he was entitled to 10,000*l.* of paid-up shares, it was held that, although these shares were not in fact paid up, the company were estopped by its certificate on which B. had advanced bonâ fide in the belief that it was true. Bloomenthal v. Ford, (1896) A. C. 156. The company has no right in such a case to say: "I told you so-and-so, but you ought not to have believed me." See also Parbury's case, (1896) 1 Ch. 100, in which the company was held estopped in favour of an original allottee who had acted on the certificate issued to him.

Where a certificate has been issued describing a share as fully paid up or partly paid up, a purchaser of the share acting on the faith of the certificate is entitled to hold the share as paid up, or partly paid up, as the case may be. Burkinshaw v. Nicolls, 3 App. Cas. 1004; Bloomenthal v. Ford, supra. But where A., being entitled to an allotment of paid-up shares under a contract which required filing but was not filed, procured an allotment to B., who received a certificate accordingly, the company was held not to be estopped as against B. Rowland's case, W. N. (1880) 80. See also Markham & Darter's case, (1897) 1 Ch. 414.

A person who acts with knowledge or notice that the representation in a certificate is not correct, cannot invoke the doctrine of estoppel in his favour. Crickmer's case, 10 Ch. 614. But the onus of proving knowledge or notice lies on the person setting it up. Hall & Co., 37 C. D. 712.

Where directors issue a certificate of title to shares or stock which do not in fact exist, or which the company has no power to issue, they may be held personally liable in damages on an implied warranty of authority to any person who acts on such certificate. Firbank v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. Div. 54, and cases there cited. And see supra, Chap. XIV.

So, too, where directors issued shares at a discount, and issued certificates stating the shares to be fully paid, whereby the company was estopped, the directors were held liable to compensate the company. Hirsche v. Sims, (1894) A. C. 654.

Non-existent shares.

Directors' liability.

As to compelling the company to reinstate the true owner as the holder where his name has been wrongfully removed by reason of a forged transfer, see Barton v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., 38 C. D. 144.

Stamp.

A certificate that a person is the holder of shares or stock in a company does not require any stamp. It is not a deed. The Queen v. Morton, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 22. But a scrip certificate or other document entitling any person to become the proprietor of any share of any company or proposed company, requires a 1*d.* stamp; and any person who executes, grants, issues, or delivers out any such document before the same is stamped, is liable to a penalty of 20*l.* Stamp Act, 1891, s. 79. See clauses as to certificates, supra, p. 65.

Scrip certificate.

Deposit.

As to the effect of depositing share certificates as security for an advance, see Colonial Bank v. Whinney, 11 App. Cas. 426; France v. Clark, 20 Ch. D. 263; Williams v. Colonial Bank, 38 Ch. D. 395; London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, (1892) A. C. 201; Sheffield v. London Joint Stock Bank, 13 App. Cas. 333; De Verges v. Sandeman, Clark & Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 579; and infra, p. 1186.

Certification.

As to certifying transfers of shares, namely, noting on the transfers that the certificates for the shares therein have been deposited with the company, see supra, p. 675.

As to estoppel by such "certification," see supra, p. 675.

Lost
certificate.

As to renewing lost or defaced certificate, see supra, p. 653.

A share certificate commonly has a foot-note to the effect that before any transfer is registered the certificate must be produced. This note is only a warning to the shareholder to take care of the certificate. It is not addressed to outsiders, and therefore does not create a contract or estoppel against the company on which they—outsiders—can rely that the company will not register a transfer without production of the certificate. Rainford v. James Keith, (1905) 1 Ch. 296.

NOTE.— No transfer of any portion of the shares comprised in this certificate can be registered unless accompanied by this certificate.

A company cannot safely disregard such a rule. Société Générale v. Walker, 1 App. Cas. 20; Colonial Bank v. Whinney, ibid. 441. But according to Farwell, J., in Rainford v. James Keith and Blackman Co., (1905) 1 Ch. 296, 303, such a note as above is only "addressed as a warning to the registered owner of the shares bidding him take care of his certificate because he cannot compel the company to register a transfer without its production," and is not a contract with all persons to whose hands the certificate may come. The case was appealed, but the point was not dealt with by the Court on appeal, (1905) 2 Ch. 147. However, in Guy v. Waterlow Brothers, 25 T. L. R. 515, where shares were transferred to A. with the certificate, and afterwards to B., who by means of a forged certificate got first on to the register, it was held that B. had a complete title, and stood first. So, in a way, the note is somewhat misleading.

 C. C. R. 22.

The Revenue authorities do not object to bearer scrip where the debentures are to be to bearer. But they throw every possible obstacle in the way of those who desire, in accordance with the established practice of nearly half a century, to issue bearer scrip in respect of securities not intended to be to bearer. Under the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), a share-warrant to bearer is liable to three times the ad valorem duty on a transfer for a consideration of the nominal value of the share or stock.

For the ad valorem duty on transfers, see now the Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, under "Conveyance or Transfer on Sale." It is as follows:—

Where the amount or value of the consideration for the sale does			£	s.	d.
not exceed £5			0	0	6
Exceeds £5 and does not exceed £10			0	1	0
" 10	"	15	0	1	6

" 100	"	125	0	12	6

And so forth.

Sect. 73 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, does not double the duty. See p. 339, supra.

Sect. 107 of the Stamp Act, 1891, provides that: "If a share warrant is issued without being duly stamped the company issuing the same, and also every person who, at the time when it is issued, is the managing director or secretary, or other principal officer of the company, shall incur a fine of 50/."

But the duty may be commuted under sect. 115 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Where an English company acquires the undertaking of an American company, or all the shares in an American company, and a considerable part of the price consists of shares in the English company, the vendor may want to sell such shares in America. In some cases, to facilitate this, the vendor has obtained share-warrants to bearer at great expense (3% per cent.), but has found that such warrants, bearing a British revenue stamp, are not liked, and are found inconvenient, as they cannot be split. Accordingly, in other cases the vendor has vested the shares in an American trust company, and obtained certificates on the lines of the above. Such certificates can be freely sold and dealt with in America, and they want no stamp there, nor does the transfer from the vendor to the trustee want more than a 10s. stamp.

Alteration of Objects or Form of Constitution.*

(Pursuant to Sects. 264 and 9 (6) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.)

No. --- .

The --- Stock Bank, Limtd, having by special resolution altered the form of its constitution by an Order made in the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division, bearing date the --- day of ---, I hereby certify the registration of the sd Order and of a printed copy of the memorandum and articles of association as substituted for its deeds of settlement.

Given under my hand at London this --- day of ---, 19 ---.

A. B.,

Registrar of Cos.

The above is the form of certificate issued where a company adopts, under sects. 264 and 9 (6) of the Companies Act, 1908 (replacing the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890), a memorandum and articles in place of a deed of settlement.

POWERS OF ATTORNEY.

CHAPTER XV.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

Powers of attorney are frequently required in connection with companies. Primâ facie any company can appoint an attorney to act on its behalf, for the attorney is an agent, and, as a company can only act by agents, it has an implied power to appoint such agents (supra, p. 36).

Power for company to appoint.

Whether, however, in any particular case the directors of a company have power to execute a power of attorney on the company's behalf depends on the articles. The general rule is Delegatus non potest delegare. But directors are generally invested with wide general powers (see supra, pp. 746, 747), and in virtue of such powers they are usually in a position to grant a power of attorney; otherwise the sanction of a general meeting must be obtained. See supra, p. 37. Sect. 78 of the Act of 1908 gives express power to any company to appoint an attorney to execute deeds abroad. See also sect. 79, replacing the Companies Seals Act, 1864, infra.

The following extracts from the Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882, should be borne in mind:

I. CONVEYANCING, &c. ACT, 1881.

46. (1) The donee of a power of attorney may, if he thinks fit, execute and do any assurance, instrument, or thing in and with his own name and signature and his own seal, where sealing is required, by the authority of the donor of the power; and every assurance, instrument, and thing so executed and done shall be as effectual in law, to all intents, as if it had been executed or done by the donee of the power in the name and with the signature and seal of the donor thereof.

Execution under power of attorney.

(2) This section applies to powers of attorney created by instruments executed either before or after the commencement of this Act.

47.—(1) Any person making or doing any payment or act, in good faith, in pursuance of a power of attorney, shall not be liable in respect of the payment or act by reason that before the payment or act the donor of the power had died, or become lunatic, of unsound mind, or bankrupt, or had revoked the power, if the fact of death, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, bankruptcy, or revocation was not at the time of the payment or act known to the person making or doing the same.

Payment by attorney under power, without notice of death, &c., good.

(2) But this section shall not affect any right against the payee of any person interested in any money so paid; and that person shall have the like remedy against the payee as he would have had against the payer if the payment had not been made by him.

(3) This section applies only to payments and acts made and done after the commencement of this Act.

Deposit of original instruments creating powers of attorney.

48.—(1) An instrument creating a power of attorney, its execution being verified by affidavit, statutory declaration, or other sufficient evidence, may, with the affidavit or declaration, if any, be deposited in the Central Office of the Supreme Court of Judicature.

(2) A separate file of instruments so deposited shall be kept, and any person may search that file, and inspect every instrument so deposited, and an office copy thereof shall be delivered out to him on request.

(3) A copy of an instrument so deposited may be presented at the office, and may be stamped or marked as an office copy, and when so stamped or marked shall become and be an office copy.

(4) An office copy of an instrument so deposited shall, without further proof, be sufficient evidence of the contents of the instrument and of the deposit thereof in the Central Office.

(5) General rules may be made for purposes of this section, regulating the practice of the Central Office, and prescribing with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, the fees to be taken therein. [See ANNUAL PRACTICE.]

(6) This section applies to instruments creating powers of attorney executed either before or after the commencement of this Act.

II. CONVEYANCING ACT, 1882.

Effect of power of attorney, for value, made absolutely irrevocable.

8.—(1) If a power of attorney, given for valuable consideration, is in the instrument creating the power expressed to be irrevocable, then, in favour of a purchaser—

(i) The power shall not be revoked at any time, either by anything done by the donor of the power without the concurrence of the donee of the power, or by the death, marriage, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy, of the donor of the power; and

(ii) Any act done at any time by the donee of the power, in pursuance of the power, shall be as valid as if anything done by the donor of the power without the concurrence of the donee of the power, or of the death, marriage, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy of the donor of the power, had not been done or happened; and

(iii) Neither the donee of the power nor the purchaser shall at any time be prejudicially affected by notice of anything done by the donor of the power, without the concurrence of the donee of the power, or of the death, marriage, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy of the donor of the power.

(2) This section applies only to powers of attorney created by instruments executed after the commencement of this Act.

Effect of power of

9.—(1) If a power of attorney, whether given for valuable consideration or not, is in the instrument creating the power expressed to be irrevocable for a fixed time therein specified, not exceeding one year from the date of the instrument, then, in favour of a purchaser—

- attorney for value or not, made irrevocable for fixed time.
- (i) The power shall not be revoked for and during that fixed time, either by anything done by the donor of the power without the concurrence of the donee of the power, or by the death, marriage, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy of the donor of the power; and
 - (ii) Any act done within that fixed time, by the donee of the power, in pursuance of the power, shall be as valid as if anything done by the donor of the power, without the concurrence of the donee of the power, or the death, marriage, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy of the donor of the power, had not been done or happened; and
 - (iii) Neither the donee of the power nor the purchaser shall at any time be prejudicially affected by notice either during or after that fixed time of anything done by the donor of the power during that fixed time, without the concurrence of the donee of the power, or of the death, marriage, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or bankruptcy of the donor of the power within that fixed time.
- (2) This section applies only to powers of attorney created by instruments executed after the commencement of this Act.

As to the Construction of a Power of Attorney.

Such an instrument is strictly construed. Its operation may for example be limited by a recital, e.g., where the instrument recites that the appointor is going abroad and desires to appoint an attorney to act during his absence, the power, however wide, may be held ineffective after the appointor's return, and therefore evidence of his non-return may have to be produced (see Danby v. Coutts, 29 C. Div. 500), unless, indeed, the instrument otherwise provides.

So, where the instrument gives authority to do certain specified things, or appears to have been intended to be used for certain specified purposes, any general words contained in it may be cut down in their operation, and held only to authorize the doing of what is incidental to that which is specifically mentioned. Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278; Esdaile v. La Nauze, 1 Y. & C. Ex. 394; Harper v. Godsell, 5 Q. B. 422; Jonmenjoy v. Watson, 9 App. Cas. 561; Bryant v. Banque du Peuple, (1893) App. Cas. 170; Jacobs v. Morris, (1902) 1 Ch. 816; 86 L. T. 275; Hambro v. Burnand, (1904) 2 K. B. 14.

Thus, under a power to sell, assign, or transfer certain shares or securities, the attorney cannot pledge them (De Bouchout v. Goldsmid, ubi supra; Jonmenjoy v. Watson, 9 App. Cas. 561); or barter them (Guerreiro v. Serle, 3 B. & Ad. 616); or sell them on credit (Wiltshire v. Sims, 1 Camp. 258). A power to buy, sell, and charter vessels does not include power to borrow (Bryant v. Banque du Peuple, supra); and a power to sell property gives no power to sell under a mortgage (Hippisley v. Knee Bros., (1905) 1 K. B. 7; but see Davy v. Waller, 81 L. T. 107). A power to receive all salaries and money belonging to the principal does not enable the attorney to negotiate or indorse a bill (Hogg v. Smith, 2 Taunt. 347); nor does a power given by a mortgagee to recover and receive all sums of money and "to sell any real or personal property now or hereafter belonging" to the principal enable the attorney to exercise the power of sale contained in the mortgage (Dowson and Jenkins' Contract, 1904, 2 Ch. 219); and a power to borrow for certain purposes does not import a general power to borrow. (Jacobs v. Morris, 1907, 1 Ch. 261.)

It was held, however, in Bank of Bengal v. Macleod, 7 Moo. P. C. 35, 71, that a power to sell, indorse, and assign, is a power to sell, a power to indorse, and a power to assign. And it seems that a power to sell a business as a going concern probably gives power to insert a clause in the contract restraining the vendor from competing within a certain distance. Per Lindley, L. J., Hawkesley v. Outram, (1892) 3 Ch. 359. Instructions by a principal to an agent to receive payment in cross cheques and not in cash must be explicit to bind a customer. International Sponge Importers v. Watt, (1911) A. C. 279. Prima facie the death of the principal ipso facto revokes the power. Watson v. King, 4 Camp. 272.

So also the bankruptcy of the principal is prima facie a revocation. Parker v. Smith, 16 East, 382; Elliott v. Turquand, 7 App. Cas. 79.

In equity, however, apart from the above events, a power of attorney for valuable consideration cannot be revoked. Bromley v. Holland, 7 Ves. 28; Abbott v. Stratton, 3 Jo. & Lat. 613; Carter v. White, 20 C. D. 228.

Thus where an agreement is entered into for sufficient consideration, and either forms part of a security or is given for the purpose of securing some benefit to the donee of an authority, the authority is irrevocable. Frith v. Frith, (1906) A. C. 254.

As to validity of acts done before notice of revocation, see Salle v. Field, 5 T. R. 215; Elliott v. Turquand, 7 App. Cas. 79; Oriental Bank, 28 C. D. 634; Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 43, and the Conveyancing Act, 1882.

A power of attorney executed in one country with a view to its use in another country is prima facie to be construed in accordance with the law of the country where it is to be used. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co., Limited, 63 L. T. 275; 39 W. R. 65.

The Court will not take judicial cognizance of the notarial seal of a notary public of a foreign country. Earl's Trust, 4 K. & J. 300. There must be an affidavit verifying the attestation, or a certificate, e.g., by the British consul. Haggett v. Miff, 5 D. M. & G. 910; Cooke v. Welby, 25 C. D. 769; Magee, 15 Q. B. D. 332; and see Ann. Pr.; notes to Ord. XXXVIII. r. 6 of the R. S. C.; and Stringer's Oaths.

In Lord Kinnaird v. Lady Saltoun (1816), 1 Madd. 227, a power of attorney executed in Paris in the presence of two witnesses, and authenticated by a notary public there, was ordered to be acted on in England on an affidavit being forthcoming that the notary was such. According to the law of England, the mere production of the certificate of a notary public stating that a deed had been executed before him would not in any way dispense with the proper evidence of the execution of the deed. Per Lord Cairns, L. C., Nye v. Macdonald, 1 R. 3 P. C. 331.

Prima facie those who deal with a person acting under, or purporting to act under, a power of attorney are bound to inquire into the authenticity of the power. De Bouchout v. Goldsmid, 5 Ves. 213, per Lord Eldon; Sheffield v. Joint Stock Bank, 13 App. Cas. 333; Bryant v. Banque du Peuple, (1893) App. Cas. 170; and see sect. 25 of 1708 of Exchange Act, 1882, as to bills and notes.

But where the agent is acting under a written authority, and what he does comes within the terms of that authority, the principal cannot repudiate the act on the ground that the agent acted in his own interests and not in those of the principal, and this rule applies even where the other party to the transaction was not aware of the written authority. Hambro v. Burmand, (1904) 2 K. 10.

And where the agent has powers exercisable in special circumstances, it seems that a person dealing with him bona fide need not inquire whether those special circumstances have arisen. Montaignac v. Shilla, 15 App. Cas. 357.

By sect. 77 of the Act of 1908, "A bill of exchange or promissory note is to be deemed to have been made, accepted, or indorsed on behalf of a company if made, accepted, or indorsed in the name of or by or on behalf of or on account of the company by any person acting under its authority." But, according to Premier Industrial Bank v. Crabtree, (1909) 1 K. B. 106, the authority in such case must be an authority in fact. Surely, however, the rule in Royal British Bank v. Turquand, 6 E. & B. 327, supra, p. 79, applies, and entitles a person dealing with the company in good faith to assume that the person signing on the company's behalf is duly authorized. That rule applies to contracts made under sect. 76, and the wording of the two sections is substantially the same.

As to a stockbroker's liability to indemnify the Bank of England where he had induced the bank to act on a forged power of attorney, see Olicer v. Bank of England, (1902) 1 Ch. 610; also Bank of England v. Cutler, (1908) 2 K. B. 208; and S. C., 25 T. L. R. 509.

Although the execution of a deed by an attorney may be presumed from the antiquity of the deed, there is no presumption, if the power of attorney is not produced, that the attorney was duly authorized. Drey, (1897) 1 Ch. 164.

An attorney is an agent, and is therefore subject to the well settled rule that an agent cannot, without the knowledge and consent of his principal, be allowed to make any profit out of the matter of his agency beyond his proper remuneration (see supra, p. 732), nor is accountable

be allowed to put himself in a position in which his interest and duty will—or may—conflict (Parler v. McKenna, 10 Ch. 96, 118; Gray v. Ford, (1896) A. C. 44; King v. Howell, 27 T. L. R. 114, C. A.), and he is accountable for any secret profits (see the cases collected supra, p. 732); so also if he delegates his authority to a sub-agent that sub-agent may be liable to the principal for any secret benefit he obtains. Powell & Thomas v. Evan Jones & Co., (1905) 1 K. B. 11.

Powers of attorney, whether executed here for use abroad, or executed abroad for use here, are usually executed in the presence of a notary public, who certifies the execution. If executed abroad a further certificate should be obtained from the British consul identifying and certifying as to the status of the notary; and a power of attorney executed here may be fortified by the certificate of the consul or agent-general of the foreign country or colony where it is to be used. The great point is to afford those who deal with the attorney the fullest assurance that the instrument is authentic; and it is desirable with this view in each case to ascertain whether the local law or practice requires any special formalities.

Under the Stamp Act, 1891, a power of attorney generally requires a 10s. stamp.

3. To arrange the consen for the transfer, and whether the same shall consist of cash, shares, debenture stock, debentures, or other consen, and when the transfer shall be completed, and when possession shall be given, and either with or without power of rescission, and whether the sd shares shall be freely transferable, or subject to any restrictive conditions.
4. To arrange how the sd persons shall be secured and indemnified against their liabilities under or in respect of any leases, agreements, Form 567. and contracts in relation to the sd partnership undertaking.

5. To borrow or raise money on the security of the sd premises to be applied for any of the purposes hof.

6. To give complete receipts and discharges for all moneys, shares, debentures, debenture stock, or other consen for any such transfer.

7. To arrange as to the distribution amongst the partners of all moneys, shares, debentures, debenture stock, and other consen for the transfer.

8. To arrange with all landlords and others for their consent to the assignment or sub-demise of any leasehold premises, pt of the assets of the sd partnership undertaking.

9. To arrange the terms for the dissolution of the sd partnership undertaking, and for the winding-up of the affairs thof.

10. To assent from time to time to any modifications of any agreements or contracts, or transfers, and in the exercise of any power of rescission contained therein to rescind the same.

11. To obtain legal advice, and to act thon or not as may seem expedient.

12. Generally to do all such acts and things not specifically mentd as in the opinion of the sd attorney may be necessary or convenient for any of the purposes afsd.

AND IT IS HBY DECLARED that this power of attorney shall be irrevocable for the period of one year from the date hof, and, &c. See Form 566.

Power, from MINING OWNER abroad, for promoting COMPANY in ENGLAND to purchase the Property.

Form 569.

Promotion of
com. any in England and to sell.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME, A. B., of, &c., sends greeting: WHEREAS A. B. is the registered proprietor in --- of certain mining claims, whereof the following are the particulars, namely: The exclusive right to, &c., &c., granted by, &c. [Instrument or licence giving the concession.] AND WHEREAS C. D., of, &c., Form 569. about to proceed to England, and A. B. has determined to appoint him to be his attorney for the purposes and in manner hereinafter appearing.

Now THESE PRESENTS WITNESS that A. B. doth hereby appoint
C. D. to be the attorney of A. B., in his name and on his behalf to do all or any of the things following, that is to say:

1. To contract for the sale of the sd mining claims on such terms as C. D. may think fit.

2. To make any such sale, either on conditions or unconditionally, to any person, or partnership, or assen, or coy, whether incorporated or not.

3. To arrange the terms of sale, and, in particular, the price or consen, and whether the same shall consist of cash, shares, debentures, debenture stock, or other consen, and when the purchase shall be completed, and when the ppty shall be conveyed, and either with or without power of rescission.

4. To execute all conveyances, transfers, or other assurances for carrying the sale into effect.

5. To promote any coy for the purpose of its acquiring the sd ppty, and, in particular, to subscribe for any shares or securities of any such coy, and to pay, or contract to pay, the whole or any part of the expense of forming and floating any such coy, and of placing the capital thof, and to grant, or agree to grant, to any promoter any remuneration, whether in cash, shares, or otherwise, for services rendered, or to be rendered, in relation to any such coy, and to give any guarantee as to the placing or subscription of any such coy's capital or securities.

6. To borrow or raise money on the security of the sd premises, to be applied for any of the purposes aforesaid.

7. To give complete receipts and discharges for all moneys, shares, debentures, or other consen for any such sale, or borrowed or raised as aforesaid.

8. To assent to any modification of any agreement or contract for sale, and, in the exercise of any power of rescission contained therein, to rescind the same, and to resell the premises.

9. To take proceedings to enforce or rescind, or obtain damages for the breach of any such agreement or contract, and to compromise, settle, discontinue, or abandon any such proceedings.

10. To do all such other things as may seem expedient in the exercise of any of the above powers.

AND IT IS HEREBY DECLARED that the sd attorney shall be at liberty, in contracting for the sale of the sd mining claims, or in promoting any coy for the purpose of its acquiring the same, to make stipulations for his own remuneration out of the consen for such sale or acquisition, whether such consen shall be in cash, shares, debentures, debenture stock, or otherwise, and either directly with such coy, or with any person, persons, syndicate, or other coy, which may promote

Form 569. such coy, but so nevertheless that such remuneration shall not exceed — p.c. of the principal sum or nominal value of the shares, debentures, or other conson receivable by the said A. B. or his assigns in respect of such sale: AND ALSO that the said attorney may accept office as a director of any such coy, at such remuneration for his services and on such terms as he may arrange. AND IT IS HBY ALSO DECLARED, &c. as in Form 561.

IN WITNESS, &c.

If the attorney is to be at liberty to obtain remuneration as above, express power must be given, for, being an agent, he cannot otherwise make any such bargain. See supra, p. 732. Sometimes the power of attorney fixes a reserve price, and says that the attorney may get anything he can beyond that. See also the form next following.

AND WHEREAS it is desirable to vest in the said A., B., C., and D. the powers, authorities, and discretions hntfr expressed to be vested in them. NOW THESE PRESENTS WITNESS and declare that the coy hby appoints the sd A., B., C., and D., and every two and every three of them, to be the attorneys of the coy in South Africa, on behalf of the coy to do all such things as in the opinion of such attorneys may reasonably be necessary for the purposes of carrying on the coy's business in South Africa, and, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing expressions, to do all or any of the things following, that is to say:

- (1) To accept, execute, and authenticate, and to register and record in the proper offices in South Africa, all proper transfers and assurances to the coy, or as it may direct, of any ppty real or personal, which the coy may from time to time acquire.
- (2) To negotiate and make with persons and coys, authorities and others requiring the supply of — such contracts and arrangements as may seem to the sd attorneys expedient.

- (3) To apply for and obtain all such concessions, sanctions, powers, and authorities from any government, municipal, or local authority in South Africa as may be desirable for carrying on or enlarging or extending the operations of the coy.
- (4) To do all such things as in the opinion of the sd attorneys may be necessary or convenient for protecting and furthering the interests of the coy in South Africa.
- (5) To appoint, employ, and instruct solers and counsel for all or any of the purposes of this power, and for such other purposes as the sd attorneys may think expedient in the interest of the coy.
- (6) To open, in the name of the coy, one or more accounts with such bank or banks in South Africa as the sd attorneys may think fit, and to pay into such account or accounts all moneys of the coy in the hands of the sd attorneys, and to draw out of such bank or banks any moneys of the coy which may be standing to the credit of such account or accounts (but not to overdraw such account or accounts).
- (7) To subscribe, indorse, and negotiate all cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bills of lading, and other negotiable and mercantile instruments payable or receivable by or for the purposes of the coy.
- (8) To insure all or any pt of the ppty of the coy which may be of an insurable nature against such risks as the sd attorneys may think fit to insure against, and to pay the premiums on such insurances.
- (9) To open a suitable office at _____, and to engage and from time to time dismiss such clerks as may be requisite for such office.
- (10) To commence, prosecute, and sue and be sued in respect of, defend, compound, and abandon all actions, suits, claims, demands and proceedings, and to appear and be pleaded in any Ct in any civil or commercial proceedings whatsoever, or before any arbitrator or persons having, by law or consent of parties, authority to hear evidence.
- (11) To adjust, settle, compromise, and submit to arbitration all actions, suits, claims, disputes, and matters which may arise at any time as afd between the coy and any person or persons in South Africa.
- (12) To enter into and make, execute, and do all such contracts, agreements, receipts, payments, instruments, and things whatsoever, and also all such assurances, transfers, and conveyances to the coy, and to do such other things as may, in the opinion of the sd attorneys, be necessary or convenient for any of the purposes of this power.

THE — COY, LIMITED

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, that I, A. B. of, &c., a share- Form 573.
holder in the above-named coy, do hby appoint C. D. of, &c., to be my attorney, and in my name and on my behalf to appoint any person or persons to act as my proxy at any general meeting of the above-named coy which may be held before the — day of —, 19—, and at which I shall not be present in person or by proxy appointed under my own hand; and I authorize my sd attorney at his discretion, to revoke any appointment made by him under these presents; and I declare that this power of attorney shall be operative only up to and including the sd — day of —, 19—.

IN WITNESS, &c.

Where the articles of a company are framed as above (p. 705), it is open to a shareholder to execute a power of attorney in this form, but where the clause as to proxies is as in the old Table A of 1862, it was not clear that an instrument of proxy could be signed by the shareholder's attorney, for Table A. (clause 49) says that the instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing "under the hand of the appointor"; and it may be that this expression means under the appointor's own hand. See Wilson v. Wallcut, L. R. 5 Ex. 164, and supra, p. 705. The new Table A. (1908) (following the writer's form, supra, p. 705) meets the difficulty by adding (clause 65) the words after "under the hand of the appointor" "or of his attorney duly authorized in writing."

AND WHEREAS the Trust desires to appoint J. BANKING AND ADVANCE SECURITIES.

CHAPTER XVI.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

AN enormous and constantly increasing volume of business in the way of temporary advances is done every year chiefly by banks and finance and other companies registered under the Act of 1862, now replaced by the Act of 1908, and a very large proportion of the loans are made to companies so registered.

Advance
business

The securities for such advances vary with the circumstances. Where the borrower does not object to give a legal mortgage, the lender is not likely to refuse to make the advance on what his lawyer will tell him is the safest kind of security; but where the loan is only required for a short time, the borrower very commonly objects to the expense and delay incident to a legal mortgage, especially of land, and in these days of competition and low rates of interest, people with capital lying idle are often not inclined to impose onerous conditions on a borrower lest by doing so they should drive good business elsewhere. Accordingly, temporary advances are, to a large extent, secured by equitable mortgages or charges to the mutual satisfaction of borrowers and lenders.

Legal mortgages

Equitable mortgages

No doubt the security afforded by an equitable mortgage or charge is as good as that of a legal mortgage, but experience has shown that dishonesty is comparatively rare, and that where advances are made with discrimination equitable securities, though occasionally displaced and nullified by fraud, can generally be relied on as a convenient and effective mode of affording to lenders an adequate assurance for the repayment of their advances.

How, then, may an equitable mortgage or charge be created?

How created

Subject to the subordinate rules below mentioned, it may be stated that a valid equitable mortgage or charge on property can in England be created by contract in writing, or even by verbal contract. All that is required, according to the principles of equity, is that there shall be a binding contract charging the property, and that the property charged shall be capable of identification (either the time when the charge is created, or, in the case of future property, at the time when it comes into existence as that which it is intended to charge. If these two conditions are fulfilled the property is bound in equity. Nor is equity particular as to the words used.

Thus, if A. says to B., "lend me 1000*l.*, and you shall have a charge on my shares in the Company, Limited" or, "on my share in the partnership business of ," and B. advances the amount, he has in equity a valid charge. But the charge would in equity have been just as valid if A. had said, "you shall have as security my shares," or "I will give you a mortgage on my shares," or "I consider my shares as a security for the amount," or "I make over to you as security my shares," or "I bind my shares with the payment," or "I charge my shares with the payment" (Florence Land Co., 10 C. Div. 330, 546), for equity looks to the intention and not to the particular form of words used. Strand Music Hall 3 D. J. & S. 447, infra p. 1186; Fleming v. Bank of New Zealand, 1904 A. C. 577.

And if the intention to charge is sufficiently clear the absence of words of charge will not defeat the intention. Cordock v. Seal 10 Prob. C. 69 L. T. 30, and see infra p. 1186.

Consideration

Where a charge is created by deed no consideration is requisite to support the deed, but, where the charge is created by contract, whether under seal (i.e. by what is called a simple contract), whether in writing or oral, a valuable consideration for the charge must be proved; for consideration is, under English law, an essential element in a simple contract. Consideration here means some consideration, which, in a legal sense, is of value.

A valuable consideration, in the sense of the law, may consist either in some right, interest, profit or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss or responsibility given, suffered or undertaken by the other." Currie v. Misa, L. R. 10 Ex. p. 162. "Any act of the plaintiff from which the defendant derives a benefit or advantage, or any labour, detriment or inconvenience sustained by the plaintiff, provided such act is performed or such inconvenience suffered by the plaintiff with the consent, either express or implied, of the defendant, is a consideration in point of law." Per Tindal, C. J., Laythorpe v. Bryant, 3 Scott, 250.

Hence, if A. is indebted to a bank, and the bank requests him to give security, and he complies with this request by writing to the bank a letter saying that it shall have a charge for the amount on a specified property, the Court will treat the transaction as importing a contract that A. shall give the security, and that in consideration thereof the bank shall forbear for a time to enforce payment, and inasmuch as this giving of time or forbearance is an inconvenience sustained by the bank at the implied request of the debtor, it affords a sufficient consideration for the contract.

Thus, in Alliance Bank v. Broom, 2 Dr. & S. 289, a banker had required security from his customer for an overdrawn account. The customer, by letter, promised to hypothecate certain goods. Upon proceedings by the bank to enforce this promise, it was objected that there was no consideration for it, since the bank did not in terms agree to give time; but it was held that the circumstances implied an understanding that there should be some forbearance, and that this was sufficient to prevent the promise to hypothecate from being void as a nudum pactum.

Kindersley, V.-C., said: "The ground of the demurrer to this bill is, that the contract said to have been contained in the letter of the 19th of September was nudum pactum, and one which the Court could not therefore enforce, and it was contended that the promise to hypothecate the goods was without consideration, and there was no promise on the part of the plaintiffs that they would abstain even for a single day from bringing their action against the defendants for the money owing to them and which they might no doubt have brought. It is true there is nothing beyond the demand for payment and the promise to give security, but the question is, whether there must be a promise on the part of the plaintiffs to abstain from bringing an action in order to constitute a valid consideration. According to the statements in the bill it appears that there was a demand by the creditors for payment and a promise by the debtors that they would hypothecate certain goods, and upon being asked for the documents necessary for constituting a valid security the debtors made an excuse on the ground of their not being able at that time to obtain the papers. Now what is the effect of the letter written by the defendants? It appears to me that when a creditor demands payment of a debt, and the debtor in consequence of that demand agrees to give a certain security, although there is no promise by the creditor to abstain from suing for any given time, yet the effect is that the creditor does in fact give or must be assumed to give, and the debtor receives or must be assumed to receive the benefit of some degree of forbearance, although for no definite or fixed period. If the debtor had refused to give any security at all, the creditor might, of course, have taken immediate steps to enforce payment, but in consequence of the promise to hypothecate the debtor does receive some degree of forbearance. It is true that at any time notwithstanding the promise the creditor might insist upon immediate payment, and bring an action, even after the security given, but still the circumstances necessarily imply or involve the attainment on the part of the debtor of a certain amount of forbearance which he would not otherwise receive; and that, in my opinion, prevents this transaction from being a nudum pactum. On these grounds the demurrer must be overruled."

And in Oldershaw v. King, 2 H. & N. 399, 517 E.R. 1 and

"Looking at the whole letter and the circumstances under which it was written, and considering the importance of further advances, I come to the conclusion that the consideration contemplated was that further advances should be made, and time given by the creditor before he would press for payment of the existing debt. Though the contract did not bind the creditor to make further advances or to give time, unless he chose to do so, it is clear that, if he did make the advances and did give time, that which was contingent at the time when the instrument was written became an absolute and binding contract."

These cases were approved and illustrated in Fullerton v Provincial Bank of Ireland, (1903) A. C. 309. In that case the customer of a bank in Ireland having overdrawn his account and being pressed by the bank undertook by letter addressed to the bank manager to deposit a title deed of an Irish estate as security for his overdraft.

He deposited the deed with the bank, which did not register the charge. It was held that there was a binding agreement by the customer to give this security. "In such a case as this it is not," said Lord Macnaghten, "necessary that there should be an arrangement for forbearance for any definite or particular time. It is quite enough if you can infer from the surrounding circumstances that there was an implied request for forbearance for a time and that forbearance for a reasonable time was, in fact, extended to the person who asked for it. That proposition seems to me to be established in the case of Alliance Bank v. Broom, supra; and . . . Oldershaw v. King, supra, with the observations on that case, and on the case in Drewry and Smale by Bowen, L. J., in Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., 32 C. D. 266, 290, and I may add that the proposition seems to be good sense."

On the same principle, if A., not being indebted to B., writes a letter to B., stating that he sends B. certain title-deeds in order that B. may have a security for any advance he may make to A., B. on making any advance obtains a charge on the property comprised in the deeds, for the letter is regarded as a continuing offer which, when accepted by the making of an advance, matures into a contract. See Carlill v. Carbolic, &c. Co., (1893) 1 Q. B. 270.

Again, if A. is indebted to B., and C. requests B. to forbear from suing A., and offers to give B. a security, and B., although he does not at the time bind himself not to sue, does in fact afterwards forbear to sue A. for a time, there is a good consideration for the contract. Per Lord Esher, M. R., Crears v. Hunter, 19 Q. B. D. 341, 344.

This case shows that the request, compliance with which affords a sufficient consideration to support the contract, may be either express or implied. "If a request is to be implied from the circumstances, it is the same as if there were an express request." Per Lord Esher, M. R., Crears v. Hunter, 19 Q. B. D. p. 345.

What property to be charged.

As to the property to be charged, equity allows the utmost freedom. It matters not whether the property be real or personal; whether it be present, future or contingent; whether it be situate in England or abroad. Whatever the property may be, it can, as a general rule, be bound in equity by a contract of charge made in England. Thus, if the property be land, or some interest in land or chattels, or stock-in-trade, or ships, patents, copyrights, book debts, policies, salaries, shares, stocks, securities, or reversions, it can, as a general rule, be charged in equity. But equity goes still further, for it allows a charge on future property, or on an expectancy or a possibility. Hence, a valid charge in equity may be given by A. on "any legacy that may be left me by A. B.," or, for that matter, "on any legacies that may hereafter be left me by anyone." Bennett v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 252; Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. C. 191; Tailby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523. So, a charge can be created on future property, as in the everyday case of a debenture issued by a company charging all its property present and future for the repayment of an advance. See p. 401, infra. And a charge may be given by apt words on uncalled capital, although the uncalled capital is in a strict sense not property of a company, only potentially property. See infra, p. 1233.

And, as we have seen above, there is no difficulty in equity in creating a charge good in this country on property situate abroad, even though according to the local laws the charge would be ineffective. See Part III., p. 62.

The creation, however, of an equitable charge on property is subject to certain subordinate rules, for the most part established by statute. Of these rules the following may be specified as those which are most frequently applicable:

1. In the case of personal chattels within the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, the charge, if in writing, will be ineffective unless the requirements of these Acts, where applicable, are satisfied. But a company under the Act of 1908 may give an effective charge on chattels without complying with the Bills of Sale Acts of 1878 and 1882. Standard Manufacturing Co., (1891) 1 Ch. 627.

Subordinate rules as to equitable charges.

Bills of Sale Acts.

2. Where the charge is given by such a company, it must, if requiring registration under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (supra, p. 616), be duly registered.

Registration under Act of 1908.

3. A floating charge created by a limited company within three months of winding-up is only valid to the extent of any cash paid to the company at the time of, or subsequently to, the creation of the charge. Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 212; and see Orleans Motor Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 41.

4. The rules as to fraudulent or undue preference of creditors within three months of a bankruptcy or winding-up, as established by sect. 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 210, must be borne in mind.

Fraudulent preference.

5. If the charge is a charge on land, or any interest in land, the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4, must be borne in mind. See further as to this, infra.

Statute of Frauds.

6. As to various classes of property, it must be borne in mind that unless the charge is made effective according to the special statutory provisions it will be liable to be displaced: - e.g., in the case of a charge on landed property in a register county which is not duly registered (Part III., p. 130); a charge on ships which is not in the statutory form, and duly registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; a charge on a patent which is not duly registered as required by the Patents Act, 1883; a charge on shares in any company which is not made effective by transfer or by notices when notices are receivable; a charge on a chose in action which is not perfected by notice to the trustee or debtor; or a charge on property abroad which is not duly registered or perfected in accordance with the requirements of the local law.

As to the Statute of Frauds in relation to Equitable Charges.

Statute of Frauds as to land.

Sect. 4 of this Act (29 Car. 2, c. 3) provides (inter alia) that no action shall be brought upon any contract or sale of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized. The object of this statute was not vexatious, but to prevent certain important classes of contracts resting on "the frail testimony of memory." With reference to the construction and application of this section to equitable mortgages, the following propositions are established:

(1) The section applies, subject as below mentioned, to a contract by way of equitable mortgage of land, or of any interest in land.

(2) The section does not make a contract which is within its provisions void if not in writing; it only requires that if one party sues another on the contract, the plaintiff must, if required, (a) prove that the contract was in writing signed by the defendant or his duly authorized agent, or (b) must show that by some memorandum in writing so signed the parties to and terms of the contract have been admitted. See infra, and Maddison v. Alderson, 8 App. Cas. 471.

Hence, a proposal in writing signed by one party and accepted orally by the other party is a sufficient memorandum within the statute. Reuss v. Pickshy, L. R. 1 Ex. 342. The memorandum need not be contemporaneous with the agreement; all that is wanted is evidence under the hand of the party sued, or his agent duly authorized, that he entered into the agreement. For instance, a letter by the defendant, before action brought, to a third person admitting or casually mentioning the terms of the agreement is sufficient. Gibson v. Holland, L. R. 1 C. P. 1. And so is a minute of a resolution of the directors of a company mentioning the terms of the agreement. Jones v. Victoria Dock Co., 2 Q. B. D. 314. An acknowledgment in the will of the party to be charged will suffice. Hoyle v. Hoyle, (1893) 1 Ch. 84.

An acknowledgment in an affidavit or pleading in proceeding against some third party will be sufficient. Barkworth v. Young & Drew, 1.

"And I should say that an entry in a man's own diary, if it were signed by him, and the contents were sufficient, will do." Per A. L. Smith, L. J., Hoyle v. Hoyle, supra.

Equity, led by the imperious Thurlow, L. C., has by certain important decisions qualified and relaxed the operation of the section, and enabled parties in some cases to sue on agreements without complying with the requirements of the statute. Thus,

a) It is well settled that a parol agreement may be sometimes enforced when the plaintiff shows that he has partly performed his obligations under the contract. Lester v. Forcroft, 1 Coll. P. C. 108; 1 White & Tudor, L. C. Eq. 768. But it is not every act of part performance which will suffice to take a contract out of the statute. For example, payment by the plaintiff of part of the consideration is not sufficient. Chinn v. Cooke, 1 S. & L. 40; Hughes v. Morris, 2 De G. M. & G. 356.

The acts of part performance relied on must be unequivocally, and in their own nature, referable to some such agreement as that alleged per Lord Selborne, L. C., Maddison v. Alderson, 8 App. Cas. 467, 479, e.g., when the plaintiff has been admitted into possession pursuant to the contract the statute does not apply, and a fortiori it does not apply where he has, pursuant to the contract, laid out money or built on the premises. Lester v. Forcroft, ubi supra. The reason is that such acts are explicable on no other hypothesis than that there was a contract between the parties.

But part performance, to take a case out of the statute, always presupposes a complete agreement. There can be no part performance where there is no complete agreement in existence. Thyne v. Earl of Glenall, 2 H. L. C. 158. Companies are equally bound with individuals by acts of part performance. Wilson v. West Hartlepool Ry. Co., 2 De G. J. & S. 475.

b) It is also well settled that a contract for an equitable mortgage of land, evidenced by the deposit of title deeds, can be enforced by the depositor without compliance with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Russel v. Russel, 1 Bro. C. C. 269; 1 White & Tudor, L. C. 674. Such a deposit of deeds to secure money imports prima facie a contract that the depositor's interest shall be liable to the debt and that he will perfect the security. Pryce v. Bury, 2 Drow. 42; Adton v. Dalton, 2 Coll. 568; Wallwyn v. Shepherd, 4 Ves. 119; Farmer v. Pitt, 1902 1 Ch. 954.

The section does not apply to personality. Hence a valid charge may in the case of personality be created by parol. Parish v. Parish, 31 L. T. 37.

As to oral or parol agreements, see also pp. 335-337, supra.

Equitable Mortgages by Deposit generally.

A valid equitable mortgage by deposit may be created, though some only of the documents necessary to prove the title be deposited. Lacon v. Allen, 3 Drow. 379; Daw v. Terrell, 33 Beav. 218; and a deposit of documents of earlier date will give a good charge, even though those of later date be not deposited. Dixon v. Muckleston, 8 Ch. 15 and see Robert v. Croft, 21 Beav. 223; 2 De G. & J. 1, in which the conveyance to the depositor was not deposited. A deposit will only affect the beneficial interest of the depositor. Ex parte Farley, 1 M. D. & De G. 683.

Equitable mortgages by deposit.

The deposit of deeds with A., as trustee for B., who advances the money, will create a valid security in favour of B. Ex parte Whitbread, 19 Ves. 209.

Equitable mortgages by deposit are not confined to title deeds relating to land. An equitable mortgage of stock, shares, debentures, debenture stock, policies, bonds, and other securities may be and are every day created without writing by depositing the certificates or instruments relating thereto. Ex parte Moss, 3 De G. & Sm. 599 (shares); Carter v. Wake, 4 Ch. D. 605 (railway bonds); Pryce, 1 C. D. 685 (debentures); Shand v. Stansfield, Seton, 1702 (policy of assurance); such a mortgage gives the right to foreclosure. Harrold v. Plenty, (1901) 2 Ch. 314; London & Midland Bank v. Mitchell, (1899) 2 Ch. 161.

If, however, the deposit is made without any written memorandum or agreement as to its object, there is ample room for dispute in the future (Farmer v. Pitt, (1902) 1 Ch. 954), and accordingly the depositor should take care to get an agreement or memorandum specifying the terms of deposit duly signed by the depositor. Where there is such a contract or memorandum it defines and governs the arrangement. Shaw v. Foster, L. R. 5 H. L. 321; Burton v. Gray, 8 Ch. Ap. 932. And parol evidence is not admissible to contradict it (Ex parte Cumble, 17 Ves. 369); though such evidence is admissible to extend the security, e.g., to further advances. Ex parte Kensington, 2 V. & B. 79; Ex parte Nettleship, 2 M. D. & De G. 121.

Where the memorandum stated that the deeds relating to freeholds and leaseholds were deposited, both properties were held charge though only the deeds relating to the leaseholds were in fact deposited. It is a question, of intention which must govern, thus, where the memorandum only related to one set of deeds, whereas all the deeds were deposited, the charge was held to extend to the one set only. Wylde v. Radford, 9 Jur. N. S. 1169.

A good equitable security may also be created by a written agreement to deposit, e.g., an agreement to deposit a lease when granted (Ex parte Orrett, 3 M. & A. 153); or by deposit of an agreement for a lease. Unity, &c. Assoc. v. King, 25 Beav. 72, and see Finck v. Tranter, (1905) 1 K. B. 427.

A deposit of a lease containing a proviso against assignment is effective as against the depositor and does not avoid the lease. Ex parte Baglehole, 1 Rose, 432; Ex parte Sherman, Buch. 462.

Where deeds are deposited to secure the payment of accommodation bills, and the bills are renewed at the request of the depositor, the security will extend to the fresh bills. Ex parte Skinner, 1 D. & C. 103.

A mortgage by deposit may be created in the case of lands abroad when the depositor is here (Ex parte Pollard, 1 Deane 27), for a Court of Equity acts in personam.

As regards a mortgage by deposit of negotiable instruments, the rule is that the title of the mortgagor, if he takes in good faith and for value, is unimpeachable. London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, 1892 A. C. 201; Venables v. Baring Bros., (1892) 3 Ch. 527; Bentock v. London Joint Stock Bank, (1893) 2 Ch. 120. Nor is negligence or forgetfulness sufficient to affect his title. Raphael v. Bank of England, 17 C. B. 161.

Where a person, whose honesty there is no reason to doubt, offers negotiable securities to a bank or any other person, the only question likely to engage his attention is whether the security is sufficient to justify the advance required; and I do not think that the law lays upon him the obligation of making any inquiry into the title of the person he finds in possession of them. Of course, if there is anything to arouse suspicion, to lead to a doubt whether the person purporting to transfer them is justified in entering into the contemplated transaction, the case would be different." Per Lord Herschell, London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, ubi supra. And see Sheffield v. London Joint Stock Bank, 13 App. Cas. 333, where a bank, knowing that it was dealing with an agent having limited authority, were held bound to inquire into the extent of his authority.

An equitable security is not lost where the debt is barred by statute. London and Midland Bank v. Mitchell, (1899) 2 Ch. 161.

An equitable mortgage of leaseholds does not come under liability to the lessor. Car v. Bishop, 8 De G. M. & G. 815; Hand v. Blow, (1901) 2 Ch. 721.

Equitable Mortgages by Registered Companies and Societies.

In making advances to statutory companies and societies, including those registered under the Act of 1908, it must be borne in mind that the lender is fixed with notice of the contents of the company's memorandum and articles, or rules or Act of Parliament, and accordingly it is necessary to see Deposits by companies.

- (1) That the company has by its constitution the necessary powers to borrow and give security (see supra, pp. 472, 509, 685 et seq.); and
- (2) That the directors are in a position to exercise the company's powers (see supra, pp. 686, 746 et seq.).

Usually the company has express or implied power (supra, p. 509), and the directors have either specific or general powers (see supra, pp. 686, 746 et seq.) without any limit, and such general powers justify an equitable mortgage, whether by deposit or otherwise Patent File Co., 16 Ch. 13.

Sometimes, however, though the company has the requisite powers, the directors' power to borrow or mortgage is limited by the articles, so that the power cannot be extended except by special resolution. In such case the lender should require the passing of a special resolution.

More commonly the directors' powers are limited in a qualified manner: e.g., they may borrow and give security, but so that the amount owing shall not, without the sanction of a general meeting, exceed a specified amount. In such case the lender is not bound to ascertain whether the proposed loan is within the limit, for he is entitled to assume that if it is beyond the limit the requisite authority has been obtained (see supra, p. 79); but if he has notice that the loan will be beyond the limit, and that no resolution of a general meeting has been passed, he cannot hold the company to the contract; and this being so, there are cases in which it is considered desirable to inquire and ascertain whether the loan is within or beyond the prescribed limit, and in the latter case whether the requisite resolution has been passed.

Where there is by the articles a fixed limit to the directors' borrowing powers (i.e., not capable of extension by resolution of a general meeting), a bank or individual who takes a mortgage to secure a current account or future advances must be extremely careful. In strictness the bank or other lender should, whenever making a further advance, ascertain that it is within the limit. Otherwise it may find that, although originally its advance was fully secured, yet by subsequent events its further advances are not secured. For instance, suppose the directors' powers are limited to 100,000*l.*, and they borrow from the bank by way of overdraft 100,000*l.*, and afterwards by payment into their general account the balance is reduced to 50,000*l.*, and subsequently the directors, without the knowledge of the bank, raise 50,000*l.* elsewhere, and afterwards the bank allows further overdrafts up to 100,000*l.* in all: in such case the loan of the last 50,000*l.*, being in excess of the limit, will be ultra vires the directors, and the bank will have no claim for it as against the company, though it may sue the directors personally for damages for breach of their implied warranty of authority.

That, however, which has been done by the directors in excess of their powers is capable of ratification by the company, e.g., by special resolution or by resolution of a single meeting (see supra, p. 37); but that which has been done ultra vires the company cannot be ratified and is absolutely void (see supra, pp. 463, 464); but in the latter case there may be a personal remedy against the directors (see supra, p. 710), and the lender may have a right of surrogation, that is, to stand in the place of creditors of the company or society who have been paid out of the ultra vires borrowed moneys. See Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee, 19 Q. B. D. 155.

Investigation of Title.

Where temporary advances are made on the security of deposited title deeds or other documents, it is not usual to investigate the title, as in the case of a legal mortgage. Nevertheless, lenders' legal advisers generally look through the documents and satisfy themselves that the title appears prima facie good.

A banker in dealing with a customer is not fixed with notice of the contents of a document deposited with him as security by another customer. Valletort Sanitary Laundry Co. (1903) 2 Ch. 654.

Investigation of title.

Fortifying Equitable Securities.

An equitable security may be fortified in various ways, for example:—

Fortification of equitable securities.

1. Where it is not in writing, by getting a memorandum of the terms of the contract signed by the mortgagor.
2. By obtaining possession of the title deeds or other documents relating to the property mortgaged, or by having an indorsement made thereon.
3. By giving notices to prior mortgagees (if any).
4. In case of any charge on choses in action, by giving prompt notice of the charge to the trustees or debtors.
5. By giving notice, in the case of shares or stock, to the company. See supra, p. 651.
6. By distringas proceedings in the case of shares and securities. See infra, p. 1220.
7. In the case of bills and other securities to order, deposited without indorsement, by procuring the depositor to indorse the same.
8. In the case of a company, by getting the company to pass a special or extraordinary resolution referring to the charge, and declaring that no mortgage or charge in priority thereto shall be created. This in effect gives notice to all persons dealing with the company. See supra, p. 77.
9. In the case of patents, or land in a register county, by registering the security at the patent office or in the proper register.
10. By getting the mortgagor to convert the security into a legal mortgage, or by taking a transfer from some other mortgagee who has got the legal estate.
11. By issuing a writ and registering the action as a lis pendens pursuant to 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 7. A purchaser or mortgagee is treated as having notice of a duly registered lis pendens so far as regards the land, but not as regards personal property. Wigram v. Buckley, (1894) 3 Ch. 483.

12. By bringing an action for sale or foreclosure, and obtaining a receiver or an injunction restraining the mortgagor from parting with the legal estate pendente lite. London and County Banking Co. v. Lewis, 21 C. D. 490. Such an injunction should be obtained where there is danger that the mortgagee will part with the legal title.
13. By registering where registration is required. Supra, p. 616

Appropriation of Payments.

Appropriation of payments.

In relation to banking and other securities, where there is an account current between the parties (Cory Bros. & Co. v. Mecca Owners, (1897) A. C. 286, 295), it is necessary to bear in mind the rules as to appropriation of payments made by a debtor to a creditor. These are as follows:-

- (a) The debtor in making payment can direct its appropriation as he chooses, e.g., to a debt not guaranteed in preference to one that is guaranteed (Kirby v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 M. & S. 18; Re Sherry, 25 C. D. 692); to a debt bearing interest in preference to one that does not (Chase v. Box, Freem. Rep. 261); to a new instead of to an old debt (Peters v. Anderson, 5 Taunt. 596); to a debt barred by statute in lieu of one not so barred (Mills v. Fowkes, 5 Bing. N. C. 455), but as to appropriation by the creditor to statute-barred items, see Friend v. Young, (1897) 2 Ch. 421; to a secured debt instead of to an unsecured debt. Peters v. Anderson, 5 Taunt. 596; see also as to what is appropriation Galata v. Plutus, 104 L. T. R. 57. An express statement by the debtor is not necessary. Parker v. Guinness, 27 T. L. R. 120. Appropriation once made by agreement cannot be altered except by consent. Mahomed Jan v. Ganga Reshun Singh, L. R. 38 Ind. App. 80 P. C.
- (b) If the debtor at the time of payment makes no appropriation, express or implied, the creditor may at any time appropriate as he thinks fit (Mills v. Fowkes, 5 Bing. N. C. 455; Cory Bros. & Co. v. Mecca Owners, (1897) A. C. 286; Deeley v. Lloyds Bank, (1910) 1 Ch. 648); the creditor may make the appropriation up to the "very last moment," even when being examined as a witness in an action by him against the debtor (Seymour v. Pickett, (1905) 1 K. B. 715, C. A.); but the appropriation once made by him and communicated to the debtor, e.g., by letter or by writ, is final. Ibid. Entries made by a man in books which he keeps for his own private purposes are not conclusive against him until he has made a communication on the subject of those entries to the opposite party (e.g., by sending him a pass book or account showing the appropriation), and until that time he continues to have the option of altering the appropriation. Simson v. Ingham, 2 B. & C. 65. Even the accounts rendered are only evidence of the appropriation to the earlier items, which may be rebutted by evidence to the contrary. Henniker v. Wigg, 4 Q. B. 792; City Discount Co. v. McLean, L. R. 9 C. P. 692; Cory Bros. & Co. v. Mecca Owners, supra. How the money is to be applied is governed by the intention of the creditor, expressed, implied, or presumed. Cory's case, supra.

- (c) When neither party makes an appropriation, the English law will appropriate the payment to the earlier, and not, as the Roman law, to the most burdensome, debt. Clayton's case (Devaynes v. Noble), 1 Mer. 585; Tudor's L. C. Merc. 3rd ed. 1, 25; Smith's Merc. Law, 11th ed. 747.

In the case of a banking account . . . all the sums paid in form one blended fund, the parts of which have no longer any distinct existence. Neither banker nor customer ever thinks of saying 'This draft is to be placed to the account of the 500*l.* paid in on Monday, and this other to the account of the 500*l.* paid in on Tuesday.' There is a fund of 1,000*l.* to draw upon, and that is enough. In such a case, there is no room for any other appropriation than that which arises from the order in which the receipts and payments takes place, and are carried into the account. Presumably, it is the sum first paid in that is first drawn out. It is the first item on the debit side of the account that is discharged or reduced by the first item on the credit side. The appropriation is made by the very act of setting the two items against each other. Upon that principle all accounts current are settled, and particularly cash accounts." Per Sir William Grant, M. R., Clayton's case, 1 Tud. L. C. Merc. 15.

The rule in Clayton's case is very material to bankers, especially where the bank holds a security from the customer or from a surety. Clayton's case. For, if the debt secured is brought into the account, payments in will prima facie go in satisfaction thereof, and in the result the security will be discharged. Kinnaird v. Webster, 10 C. D. 139; Medewe's Trust, 26 Beav. 588; The Mecca, (1897) A. C. 286; London and County Banking Co. v. Radcliffe, 6 A. C. 722. But the rule in Clayton's case is based on the pre-umed intention of the parties, and accordingly it may be excluded or modified by arrangement or by evidence of intention, express or implied. City Discount Co. v. McLean, L. R. 9 C. P. 692; Re Sherry, 25 C. D. 692; Cory Bros. & Co. v. Mecca Owners, supra. For instance, it is not to be applied in a case where it is proved by the conduct of the parties that the creditor had no such intention. Deeley v. Lloyds Bank, (1910) 1 Ch. 648.

By sect. 104 (2) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, debentures deposited by a company whether before or after the Act to secure advances "on current account or otherwise," are not to be deemed redeemed by reason only of the company's account ceasing to be on debit.

The intention to appropriate to a later rather than to an earlier item may be inferred from the course of business between the parties (Taylor v. Kynner, 3 B. & Ad. 333), or from the fact that the earlier item was secured and intended to be kept separate. City Discount Co. v. McLean, L. R. 9 C. P. 692.

Order of appropriation where intention not shown.

Unless some other appropriation is made or arranged, payments by the debtor will be taken to be appropriated as follows:—

- (a) To payment of interest before principal (Bower v. Morris, 1 Cr. & Ph. 351), unless the account is overdrawn. Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, (1898) 2 Q. B. 460.
- (b) The earlier items of one entire account before the later items. Clayton's case, 1 Mer. 585.
- (c) Money from realization of a particular security will be taken to be appropriated to the payment of the amount thereby secured (Pearl v. Deacon, 24 Beav. 186; 1 De G. & J. 461; Young v. English, 7 Beav. 10); but where there is one security for several debts, the creditor can appropriate. Ex parte Dickinson, 20 Eq. 767.

The rule in Clayton's case only applies to an entire unbroken account, and not to several accounts. Re Sherry, 25 C. D. 702; Cory's case, supra.

And the way to avoid the application of the rule is to break the account and open a new and distinct account. This, in the absence of contract with the surety to the contrary, may be done. Re Sherry, ubi supra. And there is nothing to prevent the appropriation of subsequent payments to the new account, thus stopping the flow of payments into the guaranteed account in relief of the surety and of the security.

Combining two or more accounts.

Although, in the absence of notice of fraud or irregularity, a bank is bound to honour its customer's cheque if his account be in funds (Gray v. Johnson, L. R. 3 H. L. 1), yet where a customer has several accounts at a bank, the bank, unless otherwise agreed, may at any time combine them, so as to apply the credit balance on one to the satisfaction of the debit balance on the other (Garnett v. McKewan, L. R. 8 Ex. 10; European Bank, Agra Bank claim, 8 Ch. 41; British Guiana Bank v. British Guiana Ice Co., 104 L. T. R. 754), unless there is a waiver of the right. Johnson & Co., (1902) 1 Ir. R. 439; Mutton v. Peat, (1900) 2 Ch. 79.

But not where the bank knows that one of the accounts is a trust account. Ex parte Kingston, 6 Ch. 632; Forton v. Manchester, &c. Banking Co., 44 L. T. N. S. 406, 408; Coleman v. Bucks. &c. Bank, (1897) 2 Ch. 253. And see Union Bank of Australia v. Murray

Aynsley, (1898) A. C. 693; Bank of New South Wales v. Goulburn Valley Co., (1902) A. C. 543.

As to what is closing an account, see Barry v. Halifax Commercial Banking Co., (1900) 1 Ch. 188.

Sect. 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, protects from liability a banker who in good faith and without negligence receives payment "for a customer" of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself, although the customer has no title or a defective title thereto; and the banker does not lose this protection because the customer's account is overdrawn at the time, even when the cheque is applied in reduction of the overdraft. Clarke v. London and County Bank, (1897) 1 Q. B. 552.

Crossed cheques to which not entitled.

Compound Interest.

In order to justify a claim for compound interest a contract must be shown. A customer is not bound or affected by his bankers charging interest upon interest, by making periodical rests, unless it be proved that he was aware that this was their custom. Moore v. Foughton, Stark. 487; Bruce v. Hunter, 3 Camp. 467; Fergusson v. Fyffe, 8 C. & F. 121.

Compound interest.

Where the account of a customer is kept at compound interest, and the customer dies or closes the account, the final balance only carries simple interest, unless otherwise agreed. Crosskill v. Bower, 32 Beav. 86; Williamson v. Williamson, 7 Eq. 542, 545. Hence it seems wise to provide expressly for half-yearly rests. It appears, too, that the debt does not carry interest at all from the time of the death of the debtor, unless there is a special contract to that effect. But an agreement for payment may be inferred from the course of dealing, e.g., if it has been frequently charged and paid without objection in former and similar accounts. Calton v. Bragg, 15 East, 223; Bruce v. Hunter, 3 Camp. 467; Eaton v. Bell, 5 B. & Al. 34.

As to Notice before Calling In or Paying Off.

In the case of a mortgage with a regular proviso for redemption, the mortgagee, after default, is entitled to six months' notice before he is bound to accept payment, or to six months' interest in lieu of notice (Browne v. Lockhart, 10 Sim. 420); but this is not so in the case of an equitable mortgage by deposit (Fitzgerald's Trustee v. Meilersh, (1892) 1 Ch. 385); or where the mortgagee takes proceedings to enforce payment (Re Alcock, 23 C. D. 372); or where the mortgagee has entered into possession. Bovill v. Endle, (1896) 1 Ch. 648. The rules as to disentitling a mortgagee to notice applies whether the time fixed for payment in the proviso for redemption has expired or not. Ib. Where there are several accounts the rule applies to each account whilst they are kept separate.

A mortgagee who has given notice to the mortgagor to pay off the principal money and interest, is not entitled to withdraw the notice without the mortgagor's consent. Santley v. Wilde, (1899) 1 Ch. 477.

Statute of Limitations.

Limitation.

Where a bank had an equitable charge on shares in a limited company to secure a simple contract debt, and after the debt was barred brought an action to enforce their security by foreclosure or sale, Stirling, J., held that the bank were not deprived of their remedy against the property by the fact that the personal remedy for the debt was barred, and that, there being no Statute of Limitations applicable to foreclosure of a mortgage of personal property, the security was enforceable. London and Midland Bank v. Mitchell, (1899) 2 Ch. 161. And see Higgins v. Scott, 2 B. & Ad. 413; Smith v. Betty, (1903) 2 K. B. 317; and Lloyd's Estate, (1911) 1 Ir. R. 153. C. A.

Bankers' Lien.

Bankers' lien.

In framing bankers' securities, the fact must be remembered that "bankers most undoubtedly have a general lien on all securities deposited with them, as bankers, by a customer, unless there be an express contract, or circumstances that show an implied contract, inconsistent with the lien." Brandao v. Barnett, 12 Cl. & Fin. 787; Leese v. Martin, 17 Eq. 224; City Bank case, 3 D. F. & J. 629; London Chartered Bank v. White, 4 App. Cas. 422 (J. C.); Currie v. Misa, 1 A. C. 564.

The implied lien is excluded where the securities are deposited for a specific purpose (Brandao v. Barnett, ubi supra), e.g., for safe custody (Leese v. Martin, ubi supra), or were left casually or by mistake. Lucas v. Dorrien, 7 Taunt. 278.

And where an agent deposits securities belonging to his principal in his bank with the object of raising a loan on behalf of his principal for a special purpose and the banker is cognizant of the special purpose, the banker cannot hold the securities against the principal as security for an overdraft of the agent for his own purposes. Cuthbert v. Roberts, Lubbock & Co., 25 T. L. R. 583; W. N. (1909) 11.

But even where the securities are deposited by way of specific security the lien will, it seems, attach for any balance due after the specific security is satisfied, unless the deposit was for a purpose inconsistent with such lien. Young v. Bank of Bengal, 1 Dea. 622, 677; Jones v. Peppercorne, Johns, 430, 438; European Bank, 8 Ch. 41; London Chartered Bank of Australia v. White, 4 App. Cas. 413; Bowes, 33 C. D. 586.

In the case last mentioned, it was held that a deposit with a banker of securities, accompanied by a memorandum to the effect that they were deposited to secure money advanced or to be advanced, not exceeding a specified amount, excluded by implication the bankers' general lien, i.e., disabled the bankers from claiming a lien on the deeds in respect of any sum beyond the specified limit.

Sometimes such a construction is negated by the insertion of a special provision in the security, e.g., that the security is not by implication or otherwise to exclude or cut down the general lien of the bank.

The lien arises where the customer is in debt to the bank, even though the indebtedness is only made out by aggregating several accounts of the customer. European Bank, 8 Ch. 44; Garnett v. McKean, L. R. 8 Ex. 10. But a banker has no lien upon a trust account (to be such) for the debt due on an overdrawn private account. Re Kingston, 6 Ch. 632.

The lien extends to promissory notes, bills of exchange (indorsed in blank and payable to bearer), and exchequer bills (Brandao v. Barnett, ubi supra), coupons, bonds of foreign governments (Jones v. Peppercorne, 28 L. J. Ch. 150), cheques (Scott v. Franklin, 15 East, 428), share certificates (United Service Co., 6 Ch. 212), debentures, debenture stock, mortgages, conveyances, leases, and money (Roxburghe v. Cox, 17 C. D. 520 C. A.), and marginal receipt notes. Jeffreyes v. Agra, &c. Bank, 2 Eq. 674.

The lien is not a mere right to retain possession; it more resembles the right of a pawnee (Donald v. Suckling, L. R. 1 Q. B. 585; Halliday v. Holgate, L. R. 3 Ex. 299), for the banker may realize the security, and may sue on it. Holland v. Bygrave, 6 M. & G. 653; Scott v. Franklin, 15 East, 428. And it seems that he may sell the security when the customer makes default in payment after notice. Kemp v. Walbrook, 1 Ves. 278; Martin v. Reid, 11 C. B. N. S. 730; Piggott v. Cubley, 15 C. B. N. S. 701.

As regards bills of exchange, the question whether there is a lien or not is only material when the bills are the property of the customer. As to this, bills paid into a bank before maturity are primâ facie the property of the customer. Giles v. Perkins, 9 East, 14. But if indorsed to the bank the property in the bill primâ facie passes to the bank. Ex parte Schofield, 12 C. D. 337. It is for the banker to make out the intention with which a bill was paid in (Ex parte Sargeant, 1 Roll. 153); entries in his books may afford evidence against him, though such entries, if not communicated to the customer, cannot be evidence in the banker's favour.

The implied lien is subject to the rule in Hopkinson v. Rolt, 9 H. L. C. 514, supra, p. 663.

Guarantees.

Guarantees.

In many cases temporary advance to a borrower are further secured by guarantees, sometimes given by one, and sometimes by several persons. Occasionally, the guarantors give the lender security by equitable mortgage, or otherwise, for the due payment of the debt guaranteed. See Form 602, infra.

A guarantee is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt or the performance of some duty in case of the failure of another person, who is himself in the first instance liable to such payment or performance. Sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2. c. 3) requires that an agreement to answer for the debt of another person, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, signed by the person to be charged therewith, or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized. See supra, p. 1184. But the consideration for the promise need not appear in writing, or by necessary inference from a written document. Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 3). As to the Scotch law, see Mercantile Law (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1856, s. 6, and Wallace v. Gibson, (1895) A. C. 354.

Unless, however, the guarantee is under seal, valuable consideration must be shown. See supra, p. 1180.

In framing a guarantee by a firm it is necessary to bear in mind sect. 4 of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, which is as follows:

"No promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another made to a firm consisting of two or more persons, or to a single person trading under the name of a firm, and no promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of a firm consisting of two or more persons, or of a single person trading under the name of a firm, shall be binding on the person making such promise in respect of anything done or omitted to be done after a change shall have taken place in any one or more of the persons constituting the firm, or in the person trading under the name of a firm, unless the intention of the parties that such promise shall continue to be binding notwithstanding such change shall appear either by express stipulation or by necessary implication from the nature of the firm or otherwise."

Hence, in the case of a firm, it is desirable to add the words, "the guarantee is to continue, notwithstanding any change in the constitution of the firm, whether by retirement or admission of partners."

In the case of a guarantee for advances, the lender is not, as a rule, bound to make full disclosure of all material facts to the proposed surety (Davies v. London and Provincial Co., 8 C. D. 475; North British Insurance Co. v. Lloyd, 10 Ex. 923), e.g., a suspicion that the principal has been guilty of forgery. Bank of Scotland v.

Morrison (1911), 8 C. 593, Ct. of Sess. But any misrepresentation, or any concealment of some material part of the principal's contract, at any rate if it amounts to fraud, will avoid the guarantee. Pidcock v. Bishop, 3 B. & C. 605; Lee v. Jones, 17 C. B. N. S. 482.

Thus the guarantee was avoided when the surety was informed, contrary to the fact, that the borrower was not at the time indebted to the lender. Stone v. Compton, 5 Bing. N. C. 142.

And a guarantee will not hold good where the lender stands by and allows a fraud to be practised on the proposed guarantor. Oman v. Homan, 4 H. L. C. 997.

And where there was a continuing guarantee by A. for the liabilities of B., and the fact that B. was already largely indebted was concealed, and the documents were misleading and showed a studied effort to conceal the truth, it was held that the guarantee was void. Lee v. Jones, 17 C. B. N. S. 482.

It is not necessary, unless questions are asked, for bankers who are about to be guaranteed to inform the guarantor how the account of the customer has been kept, or whether the debtor was in the habit of overdrawing, whether he was punctual in his dealings, &c. Hamilton v. Watson, 12 Cl. & F. 109, 119. In this case the guarantee was for a cash account, and the amount was applied in paying off an old debt to the bank, and it was held by the House of Lords that there was no obligation on the bank to disclose the information to the proposed surety.

Nor is the person guaranteed bound to inform the proposed guarantor that the guaranty is to be substituted for a previous one given by another person. North British, &c. Co. v. Lloyd, 10 Ex. 523.

But a contract of guarantee may under special circumstances be one of those contracts in which uberrima fides is required on the part of the person with whom the contract is made, e.g., in the case of guarantee policy for a premium paid by the lender. Seaton v. Heath, (1899) 1 Q. B. 782, reversed sub nom. Seaton v. Burnand, (1900) A. C. 135.

Payment to a surety, before he has been called upon to pay as such, may be a fraudulent preference. Ex parte Read. Re Paine, (1897) 1 Q. B. 122. But a payment made to a creditor with the dominant motive of relieving a surety for the debt is not a fraudulent preference. Re Warren, 7 Manson, 137.

Where a father joined with a son in a promissory note to secure as guarantor an advance to the son, the note is enforceable against the father, though the son, as a minor, is protected by the Infants' Relief Act. Wauthier v. Wilson, 27 T. L. R. 582.

Generally a continuing guarantee, unless containing an express stipulation to the contrary, is revocable by the surety (Offord v. Davies, 12 C. B. N. S. 748), but a continuing guarantee under seal, where the consideration is given once for all, is not determined by the death of the guarantor. Re Crace, Balfour v. Crace, (1902) 1 Ch. 733.

As to the effect of the Statute of Limitations on a guarantor's liability for interest, see Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, (1898) 2 Q. B. 460.

See further as to guarantees, infra, p. 1244 et seq., and Smith's Mercantile Law, 11th ed. p. 611.

Building Societies.

The recent catastrophe of the Birkbeck Building Society has drawn a good deal of attention to borrowing by building societies, and emphasised the importance of using great care in making advances to such societies. The following are some precautions recommended.

As to societies under the Act of 1836.

1. As to those certified under the Act of 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32), and not subsequently re-registered under the Building Societies Act, 1874

- (a) It must be seen that the society was certified prior to the 1st January, 1857, for by sect. 25 (2) of the Building Societies Act, 1894, passed 25th August, 1894, the Act of 1836 is repealed as from 25th August, 1896, as to all societies certified under the Act of 1836 after the year 1856. Hence, a society registered after the 31st December, 1856, is irregular, unless, prior to 25th August, 1896, it was re-registered under the Act of 1874.
- (b) The rules must be examined to ascertain whether they give borrowing powers, for, unless there is in the rules an express or implied power, borrowing is ultra vires. Murray v. Scott, 9 App. Cas. 519; Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Building Society, 9 App. Cas. 857; Re Mutual Aid P. B. B. Society, 29 Ch. D. 182; Re National P. B. B. Society, 5 Ch. 309.
- (c) A borrowing rule usually gives a limited power to borrow, but an unlimited power is valid. Murray v. Scott, supra.
- (d) A lender is fixed with notice of the rules, and accordingly, if there is no power in them to borrow, a lender cannot safely lend, and if there is a limited power a lender must ascertain that his loan is within the limits. Chapleo v. Brunswick, &c. Society, 6 Q. B. D. 696.
- (e) To borrow where there is no power given by the rules, and to borrow in excess where there is limited power given by the rules, is ultra vires, and the lender has no remedy against the society, except by subrogation, and any security given to him by the society must be given up (Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Building Society, 9 App. Cas. 857; Chapleo v. Brunswick Building Society, 6 Q. B. D. 696); and where a security is given for an ultra vires loan, the fact that the society has subsequently acquired borrowing powers is not sufficient to validate a new security for the loan. Ex parte Watson, 21 Q. B. D. 301. As to subrogation, see Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Building Society, and Baroness Wenlock v. River Dee, 19 Q. B. D. 155, supra, pp. 43, 686.

- (f) It should also be seen that there is power express or implied to give security for money borrowed. As a general rule, a power to borrow would seem to imply a power to give security. See Durham County Society, 12 Eq. 516, and the cases mentioned supra, p. 509; but Blackburn, J., in Murray v. Scott, 9 App. Cas. 519, at p. 556, doubted whether this implication arose. It was not, however, necessary to decide the point.
- (g) It should also be seen that the rules do not contain a provision to the effect that all loans and advances are to rank pari passu in point of security on the properties, or any provision to the like effect; for such a provision negatives any implied power to give specific security to any one lender. Murray v. Scott, 9 App. Cas. 519.
- h) An overdraft from the society's bankers is a borrowing of money. Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Building Society, 9 App. Cas. 857.
- (i) Where the rule only allows borrowing for specified purposes, the lender must see that the money is borrowed for such purposes. Durham County Society, 12 Eq. 516. It is not easy to reconcile this view with the decisions in regard to companies referred to above at p. 79.
- (j) Where a society borrows in excess of its powers, the directors may be held personally liable on an implied warranty of authority. Richardson v. Williamson, L. R. 6 Q. B. 276; Chapleo v. Brunswick, &c. Society, 6 Q. B. D. 696. And see Firbank v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. D. 154.
- (k) Where the rules only give a limited power of borrowing, it is dangerous to allow a building society an overdraft on its current account.

2. As to those societies which are registered under the Acts of 1874 and 1894, the following points must be borne in mind:—

As to societies under the Acts of 1874 and 1894.

- (a) It must be seen that the rules give power to borrow and fix a limit (see sect. 16 (2) of Act of 1874, and sect. 1 (2) of Act of 1894), and that the limit is within the limits prescribed by the Building Societies Acts.
- (b) As to the limits prescribed by the Acts, see sect. 15 of the Act of 1874, and sect. 14 of the Act of 1894.

Reading the two sections together, the limits prescribed are as follows:—

- (1) In a permanent society the total amount for the time being owing on deposit or loan is not to exceed two-thirds of the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members. See West Riding, &c. Building Society, 45 C. D. 463.
- (2) In a terminating society the total amount for the time being owing in respect of deposits or loans is not to exceed two-thirds of the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members, or a sum not exceeding twelve months' subscriptions on the shares for the time being in force.
- (3) In calculating the amount for the time being "secured to the society by mortgages from its members," the amount secured on properties the payments in respect of which were upwards of twelve months in arrear at the date of the society's last preceding annual account and statement, and the amount secured on properties of which the society had been twelve months in possession at the date of such account and statement, are to be disregarded. And see Neath Building Society v. Luce, 43 Ch. D. 158; and West Riding of Yorkshire P. B. B. Society, 39 W. R. 74.
- (4) An unlimited power to borrow is ultra vires. See the above sections. That a lender is fixed with notice of the rules, see supra, p. 79.
- (5) Borrowing in excess of the limits is ultra vires, and the lender has no remedy save so far as he can prove that the amount has been applied in paying off valid debts of the society. See supra, p. 686, and the cases following; see also Owen v. Roberts, 57 L. T. 81; and Re Sheffield P. B. B. Society, 21 Q. B. D. 301.
- (6) Overdrawing is borrowing. Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Building Society, 9 App. Cas. 857; Lock v. Wrigley, 9 Q. B. D. 397.
- (7) Sect. 43 of the Act of 1874 provides that if any society under this Act receives loans or deposits in excess of the limits prescribed by this Act, the directors or committee of management of such society receiving such loans or deposits on its behalf shall be personally liable for the amount so received in excess. See Cross v. Fisher, (1892) 1 Q. B. 467.
- (8) To allow a society which has only a limited power to borrow a continuing overdraft on a current account with a bank is dangerous, for it is not practicable for the directors of the bank to watch the transactions of the society from day to day; and although the overdraft when first allowed may be within the limits, yet at some subsequent period the overdraft may exceed the limits, and to that extent the bank will have no security.

- (9) The statutory receipt given by a building society under sect. 42 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, on payment off of a legal mortgage vests the legal estate in the person having the best right to call for a conveyance thereof, and for this purpose a third party who pays off such a legal mortgage at the request of the mortgagor has a better title than the mortgagor. Crosbie-Hill v. Sayer, (1908) 1 Ch. 866.

A borrowing power must not be used for a purpose which is outside the objects of the society, e.g., banking. Birkbeck Permanent Building Soc., 28 T. L. R. 46.

These observations are sufficient to show that dealings with building societies require very great caution. If it is proposed to make a loan to a building society it is desirable to make the loan of specified amount on specified security, and not to make the loan by allowing an overdraft on a current account. If a loan is made on specified security, to secure such loan the lenders will, of course, ascertain that the loan is within the limits prescribed at the time when it is made, and if the society should afterwards transgress those limits as regards other persons, the security to the bank will not be affected.

Advances on Bills of Lading, Dock Warrants, and other Documents of Title.

In making such advances, questions frequently arise as to the operation of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), and it may, therefore, be convenient here to set it out. The Factors Act, 1889.

AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONSOLIDATE THE FACTORS ACTS.

BE it enacted, &c.

Preliminary.

1. For the purposes of this Act—

Definitions.

- (1.) The expression "mercantile agent" shall mean a mercantile agent having in the customary course of his business as such agent authority either to sell goods, or to consign goods for the purpose of sale, or to buy goods, or to raise money on the security of goods:
- (2.) A person shall be deemed to be in possession of goods or of the documents of title to goods, where the goods or documents are in his actual custody or are held by any person subject to his control or for him or on his behalf:
- (3.) The expression "goods" shall include wares and merchandise:
- (4.) The expression "document of title" shall include any bill of lading, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, and warrant or order for the delivery of goods, and any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented:

- (5.) The expression "pledge" shall include any contract pledging, or giving a lien or security on, goods, whether in consideration of an original advance or of any further or continuing advance or of any pecuniary liability:
- (6.) The expression "person" shall include any body of persons corporate or unincorporate.

Dispositions by Mercantile Agents.

Powers of mercantile agent with respect to disposition of goods.

2.—(1.) Where a mercantile agent is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of goods or of the documents of title to goods, any sale, pledge, or other disposition of the goods, made by him when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be as valid as if he were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same: provided that the person taking under the disposition acts in good faith, and has not at the time of the disposition notice that the person making the disposition has not authority to make the same.

(2.) Where a mercantile agent has, with the consent of the owner, been in possession of goods or of the documents of title to goods, any sale, pledge, or other disposition, which would have been valid if the consent had continued, shall be valid notwithstanding the determination of the consent: provided that the person taking under the disposition has not at the time thereof notice that the consent has been determined.

(3.) Where a mercantile agent has obtained possession of any document of title to goods by reason of his being or having been, with the consent of the owner, in possession of the goods represented thereby, or of any other documents of title to the goods, his possession of the first-mentioned documents shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be with the consent of the owner.

(4.) For the purposes of this Act the consent of the owner shall be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Effect of pledges of documents of title.

3. A pledge of the documents of title to goods shall be deemed to be a pledge of the goods.

Pledge for antecedent debt.

4. Where a mercantile agent pledges goods as security for a debt or liability due from the pledgor to the pledgee before the time of the pledge, the pledgee shall acquire no further right to the goods than could have been enforced by the pledgor at the time of the pledge.

Rights acquired by exchange of goods or documents.

5. The consideration necessary for the validity of a sale, pledge, or other disposition of goods, in pursuance of this Act, may be either a payment in cash, or the delivery or transfer of other goods, or of a document of title to goods, or of a negotiable security, or any other valuable consideration; but where goods are pledged by a mercantile agent in consideration of the delivery or transfer of other goods, or of a document of title to goods, or of a negotiable security, the pledgee shall acquire no right or interest in the goods so pledged in excess of the value of the goods, documents, or security when so delivered or transferred in exchange.

Agreements through clerks, &c.

6. For the purposes of this Act an agreement made with a mercantile agent through a clerk or other person authorized in the ordinary course of business to make contracts of sale or pledge on his behalf shall be deemed to be an agreement with the agent.

Provisions as to consignors and consignees.

7.—(1.) Where the owner of goods has given possession of the goods to another person for the purpose of consignment or sale, or has shipped the goods in the name of another person, and the consignee of the goods has not had notice that such person is not the owner of the goods, the consignee shall, in respect of advances made to or for the use of such person, have the same lien on the goods as if such person were the owner of the goods, and may transfer any such lien to another person.

(2.) Nothing in this section shall limit or affect the validity of any sale, pledge, or disposition by a mercantile agent.

Dispositions by Sellers and Buyers of Goods.

8. Where a person, having sold goods, continues, or is, in possession of the goods or of the documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer by that person, or by a mercantile agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, or under any agreement for sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of the previous sale, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same. (Re-enacted in sect. 25 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.)

Disposition by seller remaining in possession.

9. Where a person, having bought or agreed to buy goods, obtains with the consent of the seller possession of the goods or the documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer, by that person or by a mercantile agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title, under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, or under any agreement for sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of any lien or other right of the original seller in respect of the goods, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were a mercantile agent in possession of the goods or documents of title with the consent of the owner. (Re-enacted by sect. 25 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.)

Disposition by buyer obtaining possession.

10. Where a document of title to goods has been lawfully transferred to a person as a buyer or owner of the goods, and that person transfers the document to a person who takes the document in good faith and for valuable consideration, the last-mentioned transfer shall have the same effect for defeating any vendor's lien or right of stoppage in transitu as the transfer of a bill of lading has for defeating the right of stoppage in transitu.

Effect of transfer of documents on vendor's lien or right of stoppage in transitu.

Supplemental.

11. For the purposes of this Act, the transfer of a document may be by endorsement, or, where the document is by custom or by its express terms transferable by delivery, or makes the goods deliverable to the bearer, then by delivery.

Mode of transferring documents.

12.—(1.) Nothing in this Act shall authorize an agent to exceed or depart from his authority as between himself and his principal, or exempt him from any liability, civil or criminal, for so doing.

Saving for rights of true owner.

(2.) Nothing in this Act shall prevent the owner of goods from recovering the goods from an agent or his trustee in bankruptcy at any time before the sale or pledge thereof, or shall prevent the owner of goods pledged by an agent from having the right to redeem the goods at any time before the sale thereof, on satisfying the claim for which the goods were pledged, and paying to the agent, if by him required, any money in respect of which the agent would by law be entitled to retain the goods or the documents of title thereto, or any of them, by way of lien as against the owner, or from recovering from any person with whom the goods have been pledged any balance of money remaining in his hands as the produce of the sale of the goods after deducting the amount of his lien.

(3.) Nothing in this Act shall prevent the owner of goods sold by an agent from recovering from the buyer the price agreed to be paid for the same, or any part of that price, subject to any right of set-off on the part of the buyer against the agent.

Saving for common law powers of agent.
Repeal.

13. The provisions of this Act shall be construed in amplification and not in derogation of the powers exercisable by an agent independently of this Act.

14. The enactments mentioned in the schedule to this Act [4 Geo. 4, c. 83; 6 Geo. 4, c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39] are hereby repealed as from the commencement of this Act, but this repeal shall not affect any right acquired or liability incurred before the commencement of this Act under any enactment hereby repealed.

Commencement.

15. This Act shall commence and come into operation on the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

Extent of Act.
Short title.

16. This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

17. This Act may be cited as the Factors Act, 1889.

Operation of the Act.

The above Act repeals and re-enacts, with extensive and far-reaching amendments, the prior Factors Acts (4 Geo. 4, c. 83; 6 Geo. 4, c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39; and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39). In relation to those Acts there were a great number of decisions, and if it were necessary to keep all those decisions in mind in interpreting the Act of 1889, the difficulty of interpretation would indeed be great. But it is well settled that in construing a statute like the Factors Act, 1889, we are, in the first place, to look to the language of the Act itself without reference to the old cases, and that it is only necessary and proper to refer to them on some special ground, e.g., where there is some ambiguity in the Act which the old cases may assist in solving. Thus, in Bank of England v. Vagliano, (1891) App. Cas. 144, Lord Herschell said:—

“I think that the proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. . . . I am, of course, far from asserting that resort may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the code. If, for example, a provision be of doubtful import, such resort would be perfectly legitimate. Or, again, if in a code of the law of negotiable instruments words be found which have previously acquired a technical meaning or been used in a sense other than their ordinary one in relation to such instruments, the same interpretation might well be put upon them in the code. I give these as examples merely; they, of course, do not exhaust the category. What, however, I am venturing to insist upon is, that the first step taken should be to interpret the language of the statute, and that an appeal to earlier decisions can only be justified on some special ground.”

Same principle applies both to codi-

These observations were made in relation to the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, which was intended to codify the law as to bills of exchange, but the same principle applies to a consolidating and amending Act. In considering such an Act in Thames Conservators v. Smad, Dean & Co., (1897) 2 Q. B. 346, Chitty, L. J., said:—

“fying, and consolidating and amending Acts.”

“In this Act clauses of the repealed Acts are found repeated, but often in altered form and with amendments whereby the sense may be in great measure changed. Speaking generally, I think that the enactments must be dealt with as they now stand, and that a minute critical examination of repealed clauses ought not to be entered upon for the purpose of interpretation except upon special grounds.”

See also Ex parte Griffith, Re Wilkinson, 23 C. D. 69; Aveling v. Wood, (1891) 1 Ch. 115; Greaves v. Tofield, 14 Ch. D. 571; Dale's case, 6 Q. B. D. 453; Rosenberg v. Northumberland Land Building Co., 22 Q. B. D. 373; Hodgson v. Bell, 24 Q. B. D. 528; and Re v. Abrahams, (1904) 2 K. B. 859.

It should be remembered, however, that some provisions of the Factors Act, 1889 (ss. 8 and 9), have been re-enacted in sect. 25 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71): that by that section and in it the term “mercantile agent” has the same meaning as in the Factors Acts (which sect. 62 defines as meaning the Factors Act, 1889, the Factors (Scotland) Act, 1890, and any enactment amending or substituted for the same); and that decisions on the Sale of Goods Act may often be usefully referred to to interpret the Factors Acts. Indeed, one eminent commercial judge includes the Sale of Goods Act in the legislation known as the Factors Acts.

“That the Factors Acts, commencing as they do in the year 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 83), and finishing up with the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, were passed to afford protection to persons dealing in good faith and without notice with factors, cannot be disputed; and that additional protection to persons so dealing, not only with factors, but also with buyers of goods, has by these Acts from time to time been afforded is equally clear; and the first question is whether the plaintiffs are within the protection of the last of these Acts—namely, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893—coupled with the Factors Act, 1889. I would point out that it is only in cases where an owner has in some way been deprived of his goods without his authority that the Factors Acts are required; for if he is not so deprived, the Acts are not needed to protect bonâ fide transactions with agents and buyers.” Per A. L. Smith, L. J., in Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol, &c. Co., (1899) 1 Q. B. 643, 652. And in the same case (p. 658) Collins, L. J., says: “The Factors Act, 1889, which is thus referred to, and as to part of it again enacted in the Sale of Goods Act, is the last of a series of statutes whereby the Legislature gradually enlarged the powers of persons in the actual possession of goods or documents of title, but without property therein, to pass the property in the goods to bonâ fide purchasers. Possession of, not property in, the thing disposed of is the cardinal fact." And at p. 661 he adds: "The later legislation is clearly an attempt to bring the law more nearly into line with mercantile opinion, and to extend the statutory implication of mis-leading to the case where persons, not agents at all, have been permitted by the owners to obtain possession of goods or documents of title."

Further, it must be noted, that as Lord Halsbury says: "The [Factors] Act, which is a consolidation Act, and also an amending Act, is separated into [four] parts . . . and each of the sections included in [a] separate portion of the statute must be read as only applicable to the cases of persons indicated by that separate part of the statute." Inglis v. Robertson, (1898) A. C. 616, 624. The headings of the four parts "are not, in my opinion, mere marginal notes, but the sections in the groups to which they belong must be read in connection with them, and interpreted by the light of them." Per Lord Herschell, ibid. 630.

Questions on the Act.

Premising thus much, it will be convenient to touch on a few of the leading questions that arise on the Act.

1. "Mercantile Agent."

Mercantile agent.

A mercantile agent as defined by the Act is a "mercantile agent having in the customary course of his business as such agent authority either to sell goods or to consign goods for the purpose of sale, or to buy goods or to raise money on the security of goods." This definition does not qualify the provisions of sub-sect. (2) of sect. 2 of the Act so as to invalidate a transaction under that sub-section merely because the agent disregards the instructions, expressed or implied, of his principal. For example, a person entrusted with diamonds for sale, being a mercantile agent within the definition, can confer a good title to the diamonds on a pawnbroker with whom he pledges them, though the pledge is in fraud of his principal and contrary to the custom of the diamond trade. Oppenheim v. Attenborough & Son, (1908) 1 K. B. 221. This decision has recently been followed in Weiner v. Harris, W. N. (1909) 234, in which case jewellery was entrusted to a travelling agent for sale or return, but on terms which showed that he was not to be a purchaser, but an agent, and a pledge by such a mercantile agent with a money-lender advancing in good faith without notice, was held to be good against the principal. Hastings v. Pearson, (1893) 1 Q. B. 62, has been overruled.

2. Possession of Goods.

Possession.

When is a person to be deemed to be "in possession of goods or of the documents of title"? (See sects. 8 and 9, and paragraph (2) of sect. 1.) The concluding words of the sect. 1 (2) as to control are intended inter alia to confirm the law established in Portalis v. Tetley, 5 Eq. 140, 147.

"If the factor pledges the goods to A. for half their value, and then pledges them for the remainder of their value or for some further security to B., it would, I apprehend, be an exceedingly narrow construction to say that he is not at that time in possession of the documents and goods, both of them being in his control as against his principal until the principal withdraws them." said Page-Wood, V.-C., in that case.

Possession of, not property in, the thing disposed of is the cardinal fact. From the point of view of the bonâ fide purchaser, the ostensible authority based on the fact of possession is the same, whether there is property in the thing, or authority to deal with it in the person in possession at the time of the disposition or not. Per Collins, L. J., in Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol, &c. Co., (1899) 1 Q. B. 643, 658. "Actual physical custody" is the construction adopted by A. L. Smith, L. J., in the same case.

3. "Documents of Title to Goods."

"Documents of title" are defined by the Act, sect. 1 (4). Stock and share certificates are not documents of title to goods within the Act. Freeman v. Appleyard, 32 L. J. Ex. 175. A mere receipt for purchase-money is not a document of title (Kemp v. Falk, 7 App. Cas. 585); nor is a wharfinger's certificate that goods are lying at the works of the manufacturer ready for shipment (Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., 10 Ch. 492), unless it can be made out that such a certificate is used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods. Merchant Banking Co. v. Phoenix, &c. Co., 5 C. D. 205.

A bill of lading is expressly mentioned in the definition in sect. 1 (4) of the Factors Act, and in the Sale of Goods Act "documents of title to goods" has the same meaning as it has in the Factors Act (sect. 62). And see Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol, &c. Co., supra. As to delivery orders in blank, see Union Credit Bank v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, (1899) 2 Q. B. 205.

As to what is a pledge, see paragraph (5) of sect. 1. The term Pledge goes far beyond its technical meaning, for it includes "any security on goods," e.g., an equitable security. As to the meaning of a pledge of goods, see sect. 3 and observations below. As to a pledgee's rights in Scotland, see Inglis v. Robertson, (1898) A. C. 616.

4. Power to Pledge.

Power of mercantile agent to pledge. See sect. 2 of the Factors Act, 1889, p. 1202, supra.

Agent's power to pledge.

Consent.

Paragraph (1) of the section is the vital one. In dealing with a mercantile agent under the Act, the first point to be borne in mind is whether the agent is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of goods or documents of title. Bankers very commonly assume consent, at any rate when they are dealing with a mercantile agent who is a customer; and it is apprehended that in most cases this assumption may safely be made even where goods or documents of title are placed by the owner in the possession or under the control of a mercantile agent not as such for sale or pledge, but for some other purpose, e.g., for safe custody or for transmission. It would seem that such agent is, nevertheless, in possession "with the consent of the owner." The old law was different. Cole v. L. & N. W. Bank, L. R. 10 C. P. 369, 370; Johnson v. Crédit Lyonnais Co., 3 C. P. D. 32. So, too, the agent is in possession with consent even though such consent has been obtained by fraudulent representations to the owner. Sheppard v. Union Bank, 7 H. & W. 661; Baines v. Swainson, 4 B. & S. 270 (approved by Collins, L. J., in Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol, &c. Co., sup.).

The Act of 1889 goes somewhat beyond 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39; but even under that Act it was held that "an agent may be treated as the owner of the property in accepting from him a pledge of goods known to have been deposited with him, or transmitted to him as agent, if the transaction is bonâ fide (it is assumed to be in the ordinary course of business), and there is no notice that the agent is making the contract either malâ fide or beyond his authority." Per Lord St. Leonards, Narulshaw v. Brownrigg, 2 De G. M. & G. p. 450.

"Under the Act," said Lord Herschell, referring to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, in Simmons v. London Joint Stock Bank, (1892) A. C. 217, "a document of title to goods may safely be taken by way of pledge from one known to be an agent without any inquiry as to his authority. . . . The truth is, in my opinion, that what the Factors Acts have done is to attach some of the elements of negotiability to documents of title to goods, to render the mere possession of them evidence of authority, to deal with them in the ordinary course of business, and to preclude the necessity for any further inquiry."

The question was further considered in Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol, &c. Co., (1899) 1 Q. B. 643. That case arose under sect. 25, subsect. 2, of the Sale of Goods Act, which is a re-enactment of sect. 9 of the Factors Act. There, in fulfilment of a contract for the sale of copper, the sellers forwarded to the buyer a bill of lading indorsed in blank for copper shipped on the defendant's ship, together with a draft for the price of the copper for acceptance. The buyer, who was insolvent, did not accept the draft, but he delivered the bill of lading to the plaintiffs in fulfilment of a contract which he had, previously to obtaining possession of the bill of lading, made for the sale to them of copper, and they thereupon paid him the price of the copper. The plaintiffs took the bill of lading in good faith, and without notice of the rights of the original sellers in respect of the copper. The sellers stopped the copper in transitu. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for non-delivery of the copper, the Court of Appeal held that, the buyer having obtained possession of the bill of lading with the consent of the sellers, the transfer of it by him to the plaintiffs gave them a good title to the copper under sect. 25, sub-sect. 2, of the Act of 1893, and that the sellers had no right to stop it in transitu.

That was the case of a buyer; but as A. L. Smith, L. J., said (p. 656), a mercantile agent includes a buyer, and he and the rest of the Court carefully considered the meaning of the Factors Act.

After reading sect. 2, sub-sect. 1, he says (p. 657): "In other words, as if the disposition had been made by the owner of the goods himself or by his lawfully authorized agent."

And (at p. 654) he says: "The bill of lading was not obtained by Pintscher," the original purchaser, "from Steinmann & Co.," the original vendors, "by any trick or device; in which case it could not, I think, be said that Pintscher had obtained the actual custody of it, with Steinmann & Co.'s assent."

Collins, L. J., probably did not intend to go further, but he is more explicit in the following observations (at p. 658): "The Legislature has not carried the rights of a purchaser under these Acts so far as to make the sale equivalent to a sale in market overt. The purchaser must accept the risk of his vendor having found or stolen the goods, or documents, or otherwise got possession of them without the consent of the owner. But if a mercantile agent, or one of the persons whose disposition is made as effectual as that of a mercantile agent, has obtained possession by the consent of the owner, even though it were under a contract voidable as fraudulent (see Baines v. Swainson and Sheppard v. Union Bank of London), he is able to pass a good title to a bonâ fide purchaser. However fraudulent the person in actual custody may have been in obtaining the possession, provided it did not amount to larceny by a trick, and however grossly he may abuse confidence reposed in him, or violate the mandate under which he got possession, he can by his disposition give a good title to the purchaser."

If, however, the documents have been stolen, there being no consent, there is no power to pledge; and so also where A., being in possession of goods stored in the cellars of B., and C., by false statements to B., obtains possession, he is not in possession "with the consent of A." Robinson v. Restell (1896), 12 T. L. R. 174, Mathew, J. See also Oppenheimer v. Frazer, (1907) 2 K. B. 50.

It is to be noted that if litigation ensues, the onus of proving that the goods or documents of title were not in possession of the agent with the consent of the owner is on those who aver the absence of consent; for the Act provides, in paragraph (4) of the same section.

Presumption of consent.

that "for the purposes of this Act the consent of the owner shall be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary." See Robinson v. Restell, supra, in which evidence to the contrary was given and held sufficient. See also Oppenheimer v. Fraser, (1907) 2 K. B. 50.

5. Ordinary Course of Business.

Ordinary course of business.

The next point is whether the pledge is "in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent," not, be it noted, in the ordinary course of business as between him and his principals. That it is in the ordinary course of business for brokers, factors, and other mercantile agents of various kinds to obtain advances is well known. The words "when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent" in sect. 2 (1), mean acting as a mercantile agent in the way in which such an agent would act if that particular transaction were one duly authorized by his principal. Oppenheimer v. Attenborough, (1908) 1 K. B. 221; and see Turner v. Sampson, 27 T. L. R. 200.

Good faith and no notice of defect.

The next point is whether the bank or other party making the advance is acting in good faith without notice of want of authority.

See the proviso to paragraph (1) of sect. 2: "provided that the person taking under the disposition acts in good faith and has not, at the time of the disposition, notice that the person making the disposition has not authority to make the same." The test of good faith is honesty, and mere carelessness will not negative good faith. Jones v. Gordon, 2 App. Cas. 616; Tatum v. Haslar, 23 Q. B. D. 343; London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, (1892) A. C. 201. As to notice, there were similar words in 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, above referred to, and in relation thereto the following words were used by Lord Tenterden in Evans v. Trueman, 1 Moo. & R. 10:

"The expression of the statute is, that a party is to be entitled to its protection if he shall not have notice by the documents or otherwise that the pledgor was not the actual and bona fide owner of the goods pledged. A person may have knowledge of a fact either by direct communication, or by being aware of circumstances which must lead a reasonable man, applying his mind to them and judging from them, to the conclusion that the fact is so; knowledge acquired in either of these ways is enough, I think, to exclude a party from the benefit of the provisions of this statute; slight suspicion, I think, will not."

Lord St. Leonards, referring to these words in a subsequent case, said:—

"This last statement appears to be laid down a little too much at large; I do not mean to say that circumstances may not be equivalent to an actual notice, because they may be stronger than any words; but I should say that no mere suspicion would affect the transaction." Navulshaw v. Brownrigg (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 451.

Nevertheless, it is not safe to act on the footing that suspicion can in all cases be ignored

"If the facts and circumstances are such that the jury, or whoever has to try the question, comes to the conclusion that he was not honestly blundering; but that he must have had a suspicion that there was something wrong; and that he refrained from asking questions, not because he was an honest blunderer, but because he thought in his own secret mind: I suspect there is something wrong, and if I make further inquiry it will be no longer my suspecting it but my knowing it, and then I shall not be able to recover. I think that is dishonesty." Per Lord Blackburn, Jones v. Gordon (1877), 2 App. Cas. at p. 629.

"One word I would say upon the question of notice and being put upon inquiry. I should be very sorry to see the doctrine of constructive notice introduced into the law of negotiable instruments. But regard to the facts of which the taker of such instruments had notice is most material in considering whether he took in good faith. If there be anything which excites the suspicion that there is something wrong in the transaction, the taker of the instrument is not acting in good faith if he shuts his eyes to the facts presented to him, and puts the suspicions aside without further inquiry." Per Lord Herschell in London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, (1892) A. C. 221.

No doubt that was said in relation to negotiable instruments, but if suspicion is enough in regard to them, it is a fortiori enough in regard to documents of title which have only some of the incidents of negotiability attaching. See Sheffield v. London Joint Stock Bank, 13 App. Cas. 333, as explained in London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, supra, as to the danger of dealing with an agent with notice of want of authority.

The equitable doctrines of constructive 'notice' are common enough in dealing with land and estates, with which the Court is familiar; but there have been repeated protests against the introduction into commercial transactions of anything like an extension of these doctrines, and the protest is founded on perfect good sense. In commercial transactions possession is everything, and there is no time to investigate title; and if we were to extend the doctrine of constructive notice to commercial transactions, we should be doing infinite mischief and paralysing the trade of the country." Per Lindley, L. J., in Manchester Trust v. Furness, (1895) 2 Q. B. 539, 545.

Withdrawal of consent. See paragraph (2) of sect. 2. Under the old law, it was held that the secret revocation of the agent's authority prior to the pledge defeated the right of bonâ fide pledgees (Fuentes v. Montis, L. R. 4 C. P. 93); but this paragraph negatives that doctrine.

Where a mercantile agent "has been in possession with consent, the determination of the consent does not, while he retains possession, defeat his disposition." Per Collins, L. J., in Cahn and Mayer v. Pockett's Bristol, &c. Co., (1899) 1 Q. B. 643, 665.

Para. (3) of sect. 2

Paragraph (3) of sect. 2, in effect, reproduces sect. 4 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, passed to overrule Hatfield v. Phillips, 9 M. & W. 617. See Cole v. N. W. Bank, L. R. 10 C. P. 370.

As regards sect. 3, providing that "a pledge of the documents of title to goods shall be deemed to be a pledge of the goods," does not relate to all pledges of documents, but only to those effected by mercantile agents. Inglis v. Robertson, (1898) A. C. 616, 630.

As to sect. 4, see Jewan v. Whitworth, 2 Eq. 692; Macev v. Gorst, 4 Eq. 315; Kattenbach v. Lewis, 10 App. Cas. 617.

As to sect. 5, note that this, like 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, covers exchanges. Bonzi v. Stewart, 4 M. & Gr. 295, shows the necessity for the provision.

Transfer.

As to transfer by indorsement. See sect. 11.

Bills of Sale
Acts.

As to Bills of Sale Acts and their bearing on dealings by factors—

The expression "bill of sale" in the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), does not include "transfers or assignments of any ship or vessel or any share thereof, transfers of goods in the ordinary course of business of any trade or calling, bills of sale of goods in foreign parts or at sea, bills of lading, India warrants, warehouse-keepers' certificates, warrants or orders for the delivery of goods, or any other documents used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by indorsement or by delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented." Sect. 4.

And these documents of title are not within the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882. See sect. 3 of that Act.

An instrument charging or creating any security on or declaring trusts of imported goods given or executed at any time prior to their deposit in a warehouse, factory, or store, or to their being re-shipped for export, or delivered to a purchaser not being the person giving or executing such instrument, shall not be deemed a bill of sale within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882. Bills of Sale Act, 1890, s. 1, as amended by Bills of Sale Act, 1891. See further supra.

A few precautions.

In making advances to a mercantile agent on documents of title or goods, the lender will do well to adopt the following safeguards. Require evidence of the consent referred to in sect. 2 of the Act, unless he is prepared to take that risk. Where there is any suspicion, make due inquiry. Where the lender's position can be fortified by notice or registration, take the requisite steps at once. Beware of prior lien charges for warehousing, &c., which may have accumulated.

Stamps.

The Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), imposes a duty of Stamp duties. 2s. 6d. per cent. on a mortgage other than an "equitable mortgage" as defined in sect. 86 (see infra); and by the section last referred to, the term "mortgage" is defined in very wide terms. Under sect. 88, "a security for the payment or repayment of money to be lent, advanced, paid, or which may become due upon an account current, either with or without money previously due, is to be charged, where the total amount secured or to be ultimately recoverable is in any way limited, with the same duty as a security for the amount so limited," and if not limited, the security is to be good for advances up to the amount of the duty impressed, and in respect of further advances there must be further duty impressed.

The Stamp Act, whilst imposing a duty of 2s. 6d. per cent. on Stamp duties. ordinary mortgages, provides that an "equitable mortgage" is only to require a duty of 1s. per cent., and in sub-s. (2) of sect. 86 of the Act an equitable mortgage is specially defined as follows:—

"For the purposes of this Act the expression 'equitable mortgage' means an agreement or memorandum, under hand only, relating to the deposit of any title deeds or instruments constituting or being evidence of the title to any property whatever (other than stock or marketable security), or creating a charge on such property."

The revenue authorities hold, that to be an equitable mortgage, subject to the 1s. duty, the instrument must contain little, if anything, more than a memorandum of the deposit of the deeds, with an undertaking to execute a legal mortgage if called on, and that if a power of sale be inserted, the instrument can no longer be considered an equitable mortgage within the definition, and is liable, therefore, to the higher duty of 2s. 6d. per cent. It is not easy to understand how this construction of sub-s. (2) of sect. 86 of the Act can be justified, though a certain fable of the Wolf and the Lamb makes it quite intelligible. The words "relating to" are wide. They are used in other portions of the Act, and there have been various decisions in regard to their meaning. Thus, the Act contains an exemption from the agreement duty of any "agreement, letter, or memorandum made for or relating to the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandise," and on these words it has been held that the exemption covers an agreement by vendors of goods to indemnify the purchaser or broker against loss (Curry v. Edensor, 3 T. R. 524); a guarantee for payment of goods supplied to another (Warrington v. Furber, 8 East, 242); and an agreement to share in profit or loss upon goods already purchased. Venning v. Leckie, 13 East, 7. And it would seem that a provision in the agreement or memorandum by way of equitable mortgage conferring a power of sale is quite as much a matter relating to the deposit of the deeds as the agreements referred to in the above cases were agreements relating to the sale of goods. However, the commissioners always refuse to adjudicate an instrument as duly stamped with the 1s. duty where a power of sale is inserted, and no one has yet been courageous enough to obtain a legal decision on the question.

But there is, of course, nothing to prevent the giving of a power of sale to the equitable mortgagee by a separate power of attorney on a 10s. stamp, and this is not uncommonly done.

And as to security by written proposal, see infra, p. 1222.

Section 23 of the Stamp Act, 1891, provides as follows:—

- (1.) Every instrument under hand only (not being a promissory note or bill of exchange), given upon the occasion of the deposit of any share warrant or stock certificate to bearer, or foreign or colonial share certificate, or any security for money transferable by delivery, by way of security for any loan, shall be deemed to be an agreement, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.
- (2.) Every instrument under hand only (not being a promissory note or bill of exchange) making redeemable or qualifying a duly stamped transfer, intended as a security, of any registered stock or marketable security, shall be deemed to be an agreement, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.
- (3.) A release or discharge of any such instrument shall not be chargeable with any ad valorem duty.

This section, and more especially sub-s. (2) thereof, is largely made use of. In construing it, it should be remembered that by sect. 122 of the Act "stock" includes any share in any stocks or funds transferable at the Bank of England or at the Bank of Ireland, and India promissory notes, and any share in the stocks or funds of any foreign or colonial state or government, or in the capital stock or funded debt of any county council, corporation, company, or society in the United Kingdom, or of any foreign or colonial corporation, company, or society. And "marketable security" is by the same section declared to mean "a security of such description as to be capable of being sold in any stock market in the United Kingdom."

See also as to marketable securities, sect. 82 (1) of the Act, and Brown, Shipley & Co. v. C. I. R., (1895) 2 Q. B. 598. The commissioners hold that the "duly stamped" transfer referred to in sect. 23 means a transfer bearing a duty of 10s.; or where the ad valorem mortgage duty would be less than 10s., then such less amount. They also hold that where the transaction is effected by the deposit of share certificates or scrip, or bills or notes with a covering memorandum under hand stating that the deposit has been made as security for a loan, the memorandum is liable to the duty of 6d. as an agreement merely. Alpe, p. 62.

*General Deposit Clauses.Form 578.

Agreement for deposit subject to bank's usual clauses (set out) [applicable to land].

1. Where documents of title are deposited with the bank by way of security the property comprised therein, or to which the same relates, is (unless otherwise arranged) to stand as a continuing security for the due satisfaction of the depositors' liabilities to the bank, whether incurred before or after the deposit, and whether matured or not, and whether incurred by the depositors alone or jointly with others, and whether as principals or sureties, and whether absolute or contingent, including liabilities in respect of advances and in respect of cheques, bills, notes, and other negotiable or non-negotiable instruments drawn, accepted, indorsed, or guaranteed, and in respect of interest, commission, and other usual banking charges.

Sometimes the words following are added: "and in respect of all costs, charges, and expenses incurred by the bank in paying any rent, rates, taxes, or other outgoings in respect of the mortgaged property, or in insuring, repairing, maintaining, managing, or realising any of the mortgaged property, or in investigating the title to such property."

Sometimes a less extensive clause is used, e.g., for the due payment to the bank of the balance which shall for the time being be owing from the depositors to the bank on their account current with the bank for cheques, bills, or notes drawn, accepted, or indorsed by the depositors, or for advances made to them, or for their accommodation or benefit or otherwise, including interest with half-yearly rests, commission, and other customary banking charges.

An equitable mortgagee, as a general rule, is entitled to the same costs as a legal mortgagee. Louis v. John, 9 Sim. 366; Wade v. Ward, 4 Drew. 602. He has, by implication of law, and without special stipulation, a charge on the mortgaged premises—

- (1) For his costs of preparing a legal mortgage. National, &c. Bank v. Games, 31 C. D. 582.
- (2) For the expenses of investigating the title with a view to such mortgage, unless the agreement was only to give a mortgage of the depositors' interest. S.C.
- (3) For expenses of proceedings to establish or defend the mortgagee's title. Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 517; Blackford v. Davis, 4 Ch. 304.
- (4) For incidental legal proceedings [or expense with a view thereto], e.g., action against surety (Ellison v. Wright, 3 Russell, 450); correspondence with a surety. National, &c. Bank v. Games, ubi supra.
- (5) For sums expended to protect the security from forfeiture or detriment, e.g., premium on a life policy (Bellamy v. Brickenden, 2 J. & H. 137; Gill v. Downing, 17 Eq. 317); and for lasting repairs when in - possession. Shepard v. Jones, 21 C. D. 470; Henderson v. Aylward, (1904) A. C. 163; White v. Metcalf, (1903) 2 Ch. 587.

- 6) For costs of abortive sale. Farrer v. Lacy, Hartland & Co., 25 C. D. 636.
- 7) For his costs of an action of redemption or foreclosure. Cotterell v. Stratton, 8 Ch. 295; National, &c. Bank v. James, 31 C. D. 582.
- But where the mortgage is not by deed, there is no implied charge for moneys expended in insuring the mortgaged premises. Dobson v. Land, 8 Ha. 216; Bellamy v. Brickenden, 2 J. & H. 137. (As to a mortgage by deed, see now sect. 19 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.)

Form 578.

It is therefore sometimes desirable to insert a special provision in the contract that the charge shall extend to additional matters besides those; and it is to be borne in mind that in the event of the Court at any time directing an account of what is due to the mortgagee, reasonable expenditure on the additional matters will, without further directions by the Court, be allowed to the mortgagee in the account as just allowances. Blackford v. Davis, 4 Ch. 304 (insurance and management); Bompas v. King, 33 C. D. 279.

In the case last mentioned, the mortgage contained power to "manage" the premises, which consisted of a large building let out in flats, and managed somewhat like a residential club. When the mortgagees took possession, it was found that many of the tenants held under agreements which entitled them to the supply of cooked food at a fixed tariff, and to the use of domestic servants employed by the landlord, and the existence of a power to manage was held to authorize the mortgagees to carry on the concern and to claim, out of the proceeds of sale, losses incurred in so carrying on the undertaking.

2. All moneys from time to time owing by the depositors to the bank are to carry interest (with half-yearly rests), at such rate as may from time to time be agreed on, or otherwise at the rate of one p.c.p.a. above the minimum rate of the Bank of England from time to time prevailing, but never less than — per cent.

Or, "At the rate of five per cent. per annum, or such higher rate as shall be the current rate of interest for the time being payable to bankers."

The depositors, on the request of the bank, are to execute a legal mortgage of the premises comprised in the deposited deeds or documents, such mortgage to be prepared by the bank's solicitors at the expense of the depositors, and to be in such form and to contain such provisions, including full powers of sale, as the said solicitors in the bank's interest may deem expedient.

the effect of such a clause in excluding the consolidation section (sect. 17) of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, see Farmer v. Pitt, (1902) 1 Ch. 954.

As to inserting in an equitable mortgage a declaration of trust with a power to appoint a new trustee, see London and County Banking Co. v. Goddard (1897) 1 Ch. 642.

4. Any notice by way of request, demand, or otherwise, may be served by the bank on the depositors in the manner specified in sect. 67 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.

1. Where any shares, stocks, bonds, debentures, or other securities (below referred to as "mortgaged premises") are, by a deposit of the documents of title thereto, or by transfer thereof to the bank or trees for the bank, or otherwise, made a security, they are (unless otherwise arranged) to stand as a continuing security, &c., as in clause 1 of Form 578.

2. All moneys from time to time owing by the depositors to the bank are to carry interest, &c., as in clause 2 of Form 578.

Form 580.

3. If at any time the value of the mortgaged premises, taken at the lowest market price of the day, as certified by a stockbroker employed by the bank, shall not exceed the amount of the depositor's liabilities to the bank by a margin of at least £—, the bank is to be at liberty to notify the fact to the depositors, and they are within — hours afterwards to give the bank additional securities approved by the bank to make up the required margin, or, in the alternative, are to pay to the bank so much cash as shall restore the required margin.

4. The bank is to have a power to sell the mortgaged premises in the terms of sub-sect. 1 of sect. 19 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and sects. 21 and 22 of the sd Act are to be applicable as if the power of sale were conferred by the sd Act, but such power is not to be exercised unless and until the depositors have made default for more than seven days in the payment of some money hereby secured, or in the performance of their obligations to the bank, and sect. 20 of the sd Act is not to be applicable.

Where the power of sale is made exercisable when the account is closed either party may close the account, and the customer can close it though in debit. Berry v. Halifax Commercial Bank, (1901) 1 Ch. 188.

5. Upon any sale under the power aforesaid, a statutory declaration made by a director, manager, or cashier of the bank that the depositors have made default as aforesaid, and that the power of sale is exercisable, shall be conclusive evidence in favour of any purchaser or other person deriving title to the premises under such sale.

6. The depositors are to execute and sign from time to time all transfers, powers of attorney, and other documents which the bank may require for perfecting the bank's title to the mortgaged premises, or vesting the same, or any of them, in any purchaser.

7. As regards transfers in blank handed to the bank of any of the mortgaged premises, which are not transferable by deed exclusively, the bank is at liberty to fill up the blanks in favour of itself or its nominee.

8. Any notice by way of request, demand, &c., as in clause 4 of Form 578.

9. In the above clauses words importing the plural number include the singular, and vice versa.

List of Securities.

NOTE.—It is easy to embody the conditions in the letter if preferred, as in Form 579.

Notice in Lieu of Distringas.

Under Order 46, r. 4, of the Supreme Court Rules, any person claiming to be interested in any stock, shares, or securities of any company, or dividends thereon, may obtain and serve a notice in lieu of distringas as follows:—

- (a) He should make an affidavit himself, or procure his solicitor to make an affidavit as below (Form A), with such variations as the circumstances may require.
- (b) He should file, or procure the filing thereof, in the Central Office of the Royal Courts of Justice, with a notice, as below (Form B), with such variations as the circumstances may require, and
- (c) He should obtain there an office copy of the affidavit, and a duplicate of the filed notice authenticated by the seal of the Central Office.
- (d) He should serve such office copy and duplicate notice on the company by leaving the same at the registered office of the company.

The effect of serving these documents is, that the company is bound to abstain from complying with a request to register a transfer of the shares [or to pay the dividends thereon when the notice extends thereto] until after due notice of the request has been given to the claimant; but the company may not, by virtue of such service, refuse to register or pay for more than eight days after the request (r. 10). Nevertheless, after the eight days, where the company sees that there is a bona fide dispute, it may rest neutral, and leave the parties to fight the matter out in Court. Immediately on receiving any such request, the company, acting by its secretary or otherwise, should give notice in writing to the claimant, or his solicitors, stating that a request has been made for registration of a transfer or for payment of the dividends, and that unless an injunction is obtained and served on or before a specified day, usually within the eight days above mentioned, the distringas notice will no longer be regarded. Upon receipt of such notice the claimant must, if he wants to prevent the transfer or payment, bring an action, and obtain in that action an injunction to restrain the transfer or payment, and if he does not do so, the notice at the end of the eight days will fall to the ground. A restraining notice may be withdrawn by the person by whom or on whose behalf it was given (see Form D), and the Court can vacate it by order on motion, on notice, or petition, or by summons at the instance of any other person claiming to be interested (r. 9).

The address given in the restraining notice may be altered. (See Form C below, and r. 7.)

Where the mortgage, settlement, or other instrument, comprises shares or securities of different companies, there must be a separate affidavit and notice for each company, and a 10s. stamp will be required on each notice. The duplicate notice must be signed in the same way as the original notice. It will be sealed by the Filing Department without fee. When the claimant is a married woman, the affidavit should state that she is beneficially interested in the shares "as her separate estate," or otherwise "by A. B., her next friend."

[Conditions as in Form 578, or Form 580, as suitable.]

Gentlemen,

We, the — Coy, Limtd, beg to make to you the proposal following, that is to say:—

1. That we shall deposit with you, by way of security, on the footing of the above general deposit conditions, the documents specified in the schedule hto.

2. That you shall thereupon allow us an overdraft, not exceeding at any one time £—.

3. That we shall forthwith, after your acceptance of this proposal, execute such powers of attorney as you may require for enabling you to transfer the mortgaged ppty to any purchaser or purchasers.

4. That we shall also furnish you with an approved guarantee for £—.

Be so good as to notify to us your acceptance of this proposal.

For the — Coy, Limtd.

—, Secretary

Sometimes a transaction is impeded by the expense of stamping the securities. it may be that the loan is one only for a short time, and that to expend 2s. 6d. per cent. on stamp duty, or even 1s. per cent., is more than it is possible to afford. Moreover, it may not be practicable to bring the securities within the 1s. per cent. duty, e.g., where it is desired that there should be a power of sale. In such cases it is not uncommon to deal with the matter by way of written proposal, as above, to be accepted orally by the bank. The proposal in such case requires no stamp, for the agreement is an oral one. See supra, p. 338. Nevertheless, the proposal constitutes an efficient memorandum of the arrangement when orally accepted, and in effect invests the bank with the desired securities and powers. Supra, p. 1184.

Where a security by way of deposit is given by deed, the following clause can be inserted in the letter:—

"And we hereby irrevocably appoint you to be our attorney to convey the legal estate in the mortgaged premises or any pt thof, to any purchaser or purchasers thof, upon any sale under the statutory power, and to execute and do all deeds, instruments, and things requisite for that purpose; and sect. 20 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is not to apply."

The following are the terms on which the loan and deposit are made:

1. We are forthwith to pay to you a commission of £ --- as a premium for the loan.
2. The loan is to be repaid by us on the --- day of ---
3. The loan is to carry interest at the rate of 7 p.c.p.a., but if the loan is repaid on the above date, with interest at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a., you are to accept the lower rate of interest in lieu of the first-mentioned rate.
4. If the loan is not repaid on the sd --- day of ---, it shall thenceforth carry interest at the rate of 10 p.c.p.a., payable quarterly on the usual quarter days.

Such a provision for raising the rate of interest after the time passed for repayment of the loan is valid. It is not a penalty against which equity will grant relief. Herbert v. Salisbury, &c. Co., 2 Eq. 221.

As to the meaning of "punctually" with reference to payments under mortgages, see Leeds and Hanley Theatre c. Varieties v. Broadbent, (1898) 1 Ch. 343; reversing Kekowich, J. It means "at the time specified."

5. The deposited securities are to be held by you as a security for the repayment of the loan and the interest thereon.

Form 586.

6. If at any time the value of the securities for the time being deposited with you on the footing of this memorandum, taken at the lowest market price of the day as certified by a stockbroker employed by you, shall not exceed the amount due to you on the security then by a margin of at least — p.c., you are to be at liberty to notify to us the fact, and we will, within twenty-four hours afterwards, deposit with you additional securities to your satisfaction to make up the required margin, and in default you may, by a further notice to us, call in the loan, and the same shall thereupon immediately become payable.

7. On our failing to repay the loan with interest on its becoming repayable, you are to have power to sell the deposited securities in the terms of sub-s. 1 of sect. 19 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and sects. 21 and 22 of the said Act are to be applicable as if the power of sale were conferred by the said Act, but such power is not to be exercised unless and until depositors have made default in the payment of money hereby secured or in the performance of their obligations to the bank.

Where shares, stock, or debentures are mortgaged to secure payment of a sum on a specified day, and the mortgage contains no power of sale, and is not under seal, the mortgagee has an implied power to sell after the mortgagor has made default, and a reasonable notice has been given by the mortgagee calling for payment, and informing the mortgagor that in default the mortgagee will be in a position to enforce his rights. Deverges v. Sandeman, Clark & Co., (1902) 1 Ch. 579

As to tender by mortgagor after expiry of notice, see Edmondson v. Copeland, (1911) 2 Ch. 301.

8. Upon any sale, &c. [Clause 5 of Form 580.]

AN AGREEMENT, &c.—The — Coy, Limtd (hereafter called "the coy"), of the one part, and — Bank, Limtd (hereafter called "the bank"), of the other part.

WHEREAS the coy is the owner, free from incumbrances, of the several stocks, shares, and securities, the short particulars of which are set forth in the schedule hereto, and which stocks, shares, and securities are hereafter referred to as "the scheduled investments."

AND WHEREAS the coy has applied to the bank to make an advance to the coy of the sum of 12,000*l.*, which the bank has consented to do upon the terms hereafter set forth.

NOW THEREFORE IT IS AGREED as follows:—

1. The bank shall, on the signature hereof, advance to the coy the sum of 12,000*l.*

FORMS.

2. The coy shall, on the — day of —, repay to the bank the sd Form 590.
sum of 12,000*l*.

3. The sd sum of 12,000*l*, or so much thof as shall for the time being remain due, shall carry interest at the rate of 4 p.c.p.a., or at the Bank of England rate if more than 4 p.c., up to the sd — day of — from the date hof. and such interest is to be pd on the sd — of —.

4. The coy is to be at liberty to pay off the whole or any pt of the sd sum of 12,000*l*. at any time or times before the sd — day of —, without being required to give any previous notice of its intention so to do, and as and whenever any such payment is made the bank shall, subject as huftr provided, re-transfer to the coy a proportionate pt of each of the scheduled investments.

5. If the coy shall, on the sd — day of —, make default in payment of the sd sum of 12,000*l*. or so much thof as shall then be due, the coy shall pay interest on such sum, or so much thof as shall then be due, at the rate of 4 p.c.p.a. from that day, or at the Bank of England rate if more than 4 p.c., until full payment of the sd sum of 12,000*l*. has been made.

6. The coy shall forthwith transfer to the bank the scheduled investments, and shall, save as regards those (if any) transferable by delivery, forthwith procure the bank to be registered as the holders thof, and the bank shall hold the scheduled investments as security for the payment of all moneys payable to the bank hereunder, and if the coy do not duly comply with this clause the bank may at any time call in the sd sum of 12,000*l*. and the same shall thereupon become payable.

7. If the sd sum of 12,000*l*. is not fully pd off on or before the day of —, the statutory power of sale huftr mentd shall immediately become exerciseable by the bank as regards the scheduled investments, or such pt thof as shall not previously have been transferred under clause 4 hof.

8. All moneys received by the bank in respect of any sale or enforcement or otherwise under this security, whether the same shall have been received before or after the sd — day of —, shall be applied: first, in payment of all costs and expenses of and incident to any such sale or enforcement, or getting in of such moneys; and, secondly, in or towards satisfaction of the principal moneys and interest owing hereunder, and the surplus (if any) shall be pd to the coy.

9. If, before the sd sum of 12,000*l*. is fully pd, the debentures of The — Coy, Limtd, referred to in the schedule hto, shall become enforceable by reason of any default or otherwise on the pt of such coy, the coy shall forthwith, at the request of the bank, take such steps in regard to the enforcement thof for the benefit of the bank as the bank may think expedient and require.

Form 590. 10. All dividends and interest from time to time received by the bank in respect of the scheduled investments shall be dealt with in accordance with clause 8 *h*of.

11. The statutory power of sale conferred by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, is to be applicable *h*to, but sect. 20 of the sd Act is not to apply *h*to.

As to implied power of sale, see supra, p. 1226, note to clause 7.

12. When and so soon as all principal and other moneys and interest owing on the security *h*of shall have been satisfied, the bank shall re-transfer to the coy, or as it may direct, the scheduled investments, or such part *th*of as shall not previously have been sold or re-transferred.

AN AGREEMENT made, &c., between The — — Coy, Limtd (*h*ntfr called "the coy") of the one pt, and The — — Bank, Limtd (*h*ntfr called "the bank") of the other pt.

WHEREBY IT IS AGREED as follows:—

1. The bank is forthwith to make to the coy a loan of 10,000*l.* and as security for the payment *th*of, with interest, the coy is to issue to the bank ten debentures of the coy each for the sum of 1,000*l.*, framed in accordance with the form which has already been approved by the parties *h*to.

[See Form in note below.]

2. If the coy duly pays the interest on the sd debentures on the days thereby fixed for the payment of the same, or within fourteen days after each of the sd days *resp*ly, and duly pays the principal moneys secured by such of the sd debentures as shall for the time being be payable, or within fourteen days after the same shall become payable, then the bank shall not demand payment of the sd debentures otherwise than as follows, that is to say:—

One of the sd debentures may be called in at any time after the day of — .

Two of the sd debentures may be called in at any time after the day of —, &c., &c.

3. The provisions of the last preceding clause shall cease to operate if an order shall be made, or an effective resolution shall be passed, for the winding-up of the coy.

4. As and when each debenture is pd off the bank shall, on the request of the coy, deliver up the same to the coy to be cancelled.

As witness, &c.

Form 591.

The debenture referred to will be in the terms following:

THE — — COY. LIMITED

Issue of ten debentures of 1,000*l.* each, all ranking pari passu

No. — — — — — Debenture. 1,000

1. The — — Coy, Limitd (huftr called "the coy"), will on demand pay to the Bank, Limitd (huftr called "the bank"), the sum of 1,000*l.*

As to meaning of words "on demand," see English Bank of Roper Plate, 69 L. T. 14.

2. The coy will in the meantime, until such payment, pay to the bank interest on the said sum of 1,000*l.* at the rate of — p.c.p.a. by equal half-yearly payments on every — day of — and — day of — in each such year, the first of such half-yearly payments to be made on the — day of — next.

3. The coy hby charges with such payments its undertaking and all its ppty whatsoever and wheresoever, both present and future, including its uncalled capital for the time being.

4. This debenture is one of a series of ten debentures each for securing the principal sum of 1,000*l.* The debentures of the sd series are all to rank pari passu in point of charge on the ppty hby charged without any preference or priority one over another, and such charge as regards the coy's land, goodwill, and uncalled capital is to be a specific charge, and as regards the coy's other assets is to be a floating security, but so that the coy is not to be at liberty to create any mortgage or charge in priority to the sd debentures.

5. The coy may at any time give notice in writing to the bank of its intention to pay off this debenture, and upon the expiration of one calendar month from such notice being given the principal moneys hby secured shall become payable.

6. None of the now uncalled capital of the coy shall, whilst this debenture is outstanding, be called up or received in advance of calls without the consent in writing of the bank, and if the same is called up with or without such consent, the amount shall be made payable to the bank and to no other person or persons, and shall be applicable in or towards payment of the moneys owing from the coy to the bank.

7. The ppal moneys hby secured shall immediately become payable if an order is made, or an effective resolution is passed for the winding-up of the coy.

8. At any time after the ppal moneys hby secured become payable the bank may, by instrument in writing, appoint any person or persons, whether an officer of the bank or not, to be a receiver or receivers of the premises hby charged, and a receiver so appointed shall have power, &c. [As in Form at p. 1253.]

9. The debentures of this series are issued to the bank pursuant to an agreemt dated the — day of —, and made between the coy and the bank, and subject to the provisions thof.

Form 592. and as it may allow further overdrafts, the coy has, with the privity of the bank [or with A. and B. as trees for the bank], issued to and deposited with it a debenture for £—, charging the undertaking of the coy. Now, THEREFORE, IT IS AGREED AND DECLARED as follows:—

Debenture to be security for account.

1. The sd debenture is to stand as a security to the bank for the payment of the final balance on the sd current account, including therein all usual and accustomed bankers' charges, and commission, together with interest on such final balance until payment at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a.

What is final balance.

2. For the purposes hof the final balance asfd means such sums as, upon the closing at any time of the current account of the coy by either party, shall be found due thereon to the bank; and accordingly payments to the credit of the account, so long as the same shall be current, shall not be deemed to be made in or towards discharge of the sd debenture.

Sect. 104 (2) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, now provides that: "Where a company has either before or after the passing of this Act deposited any of its debentures to secure advances from time to time on current account or otherwise, the debentures shall not be deemed to have been redeemed by reason only of the account of the company having ceased to be in debt whilst the debentures remained so deposited."

No prior mortgage.

3. The coy hby declares that there is no mortgage or charge on its ppty or assets having priority to or ranking pari passu with the sd debenture, and that the coy will not at any time during the continuance of this security create any mortgage or charge ranking, or which can by any means be made to rank, in priority to or pari passu with such debenture.

AN AGREEMENT made the — day of —, between the — Coy. Limtd (hnfr called "the coy") of the first part, the — Banking Coy. Limtd (hnfr called "the bank") of the second part, and of —, and — of — (hnfr called "the present trees") of the third part.

WHEREBY IT IS AGREED as follows:—

1. The coy shall forthwith create and issue — [second debentures of the coy for 100l. each, which are to be charged on the coy's undertaking pari passu and are to rank as a first charge on the coy's undertaking immediately after and in subordination to the existing first debentures of the coy for £—, and are to be further secured by a trust deed in a form approved by the bank creating a specific charge on the freehold and leasehold property of the coy specified in the schedule hereto, subject only as to such

of the said freehold and leasehold property as is thereby specifically charged to the specific charge created by an indenture dated, &c. and made, &c., and creating a floating charge upon all the other assets of the coy for the time being, present and future, including its uncalled capital, and containing covenants on the part of the coy, &c. The said second debentures are to be framed in accordance with the form to be scheduled to the trust deed and are to be issued exclusively to the bank or its nominees as hereinafter provided, and are not to be issued to any other person or persons or coy. Form 593.

2. The coy shall not, during the continuance of this agreement, without the previous consent in writing of the bank and the present trustees or other the trustees or tree for the time being hereof (hereinafter called the trustees), create any mortgage or charge ranking in priority to or pari passu with the charge hereby agreed to be created, nor exercise the power reserved to it by the said indenture of the June, —, —, in issuing further debentures entitled pari passu to the benefit of such indenture.

3. The coy is forthwith to issue the whole of the said [second] debentures to the present trustees as nominees of the bank, and the same are to be deposited with the bank, and thereupon the bank is by way of advance to place the sum of [20,000*l.*] to the credit of the coy's current account, and is to debit the amount to the coy's loan account (now to be opened) [and further, the bank is from time to time as and when the coy shall request to make to the coy further advances up to a further 40,000*l.* beyond the said sum of 20,000*l.* by crediting the coy's current account and debiting the coy's loan account with the amount of such further advance: PROVIDED ALWAYS that the obligation of the bank to make any further advance to the coy beyond the said 20,000*l.* shall cease in the event of any failure on the part of the coy to observe and perform all or any of the obligations imposed upon it hereby or by the said intended trust deed or second debentures].

4. The said loan account is also from time to time to be debited [with all further advances from time to time made by the bank to the coy on the footing that they are to be debited to such account, and also] quarterly with interest on the balance from time to time owing on such account, and with all charges and expenses of and incident to the advance aforesaid, and is to be credited from time to time with all payments made by the coy into such account, and the coy shall from time to time at the request of the bank pay into such account the amount of such interest, charges and expenses, and the bank shall be at liberty from time to time to transfer to the credit of the said loan account from the coy's current account the amount of any interest on the said loan account which is for the time being overdue and any sum debited for charges or expenses which remains unpaid.

Form 593.

5. The interest so to be debited is to be at the rate of 5 percent per annum, but the interest on any of the said [second] debentures is not to be payable or to be deemed (as between the coy and the bank) to run until—(a) the bank has become entitled as huftr provided to call in the moneys for the time being owing on the said loan account; or (b) the expiration of the term of _____ years from the date hereof; or (c) the said second debentures resply shall be sold by the bank—whichever event shall first happen.

6. The said [second] debentures so issued and deposited as afcd are to stand as a security for the payment of the moneys for the time being and from time to time owing from the coy to the bank on the balance of the said loan account.

7. The said security is to be a continuing security, and accordingly is not to be affected by any settlement of account or fluctuation in the amount for the time being due or by the existence of a credit balance at any time, but the coy shall be at liberty at any time and from time to time within the said period of _____ years from giving one day's notice in writing to the bank to repay the whole or any part of the moneys owing on the said loan account.

8. Subject as afcd and to the next succeeding clause, the moneys for the time being owing on the security of the said loan account may be called in by the bank in any one or more of the events huftr mentioned, that is to say:

- (a) If the coy shall at any time make default for more than fourteen days in paying any interest due hereunder, whether the same shall have been lawfully demanded or not; or
- (b) If a petition shall be presented for the winding-up of the coy; or
- (c) If a notice convening a general meeting of the coy for the voluntary winding-up thereof shall be issued; or
- (d) If the coy shall stop payment; or
- (e) If a receiver shall be appointed of the coy's undertaking or any part thereof; or
- (f) If a distress or execution shall be levied on the ppty of the coy; or
- (g) If the coy fails to observe and perform any stipulation of this agreement, or any stipulation contained in the said intended trust deed or second debentures; or
- (h) If any event occurs on which the security constituted by the said intended trust deed becomes enforceable.

But save as afcd the bank shall not call in the amount for the time being owing on the said loan account, or sell such second debentures for the term of _____ years from the date hereof.

9. Before calling in the said moneys under paragraph (a) of the said preceding clause hereof, the bank is to give to the coy at least seven days' notice in writing of its intention to call in the same, but in every other case twenty-four hours' notice in writing of such Form 593.

intention shall be sufficient.

10. The statutory power of sale conferred by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, is to be applicable, and in case of a sale by the bank of the said second debentures, or any of them, the trees or tree are, or is, to execute such transfers of such second debentures as the bank shall from time to time direct [and sect. 20 of the sd Act shall not apply].

11. In case at any time the security created hereby or by the said intended second debentures and trust deed is in the opinion of the bank in jeopardy, or in case the said security becomes enforceable, the trees or tree shall be at liberty to, and if required by the bank shall, enforce the said second debentures, and in case they or he shall thereby realize any sum in excess of the amount for the time being due to the bank, shall hold such surplus moneys in trust for the coy.

12. The statutory power of appointing new trees hereof is vested in the bank, and it is to be no objection that a tree appointed under such power or that a tree of the said intended trust deed is a director, officer, or employé of the bank.

AS WITNESS, &c

AN AGREEMENT made the — day of —, 19 —, between the — Coy, Limtd (hinftr called "the coy"), of the one pt, and the — Corporation, Limtd (hinftr called "the bank"), of the other pt. Form 594.

WHEREAS the coy was incorporated in 1890 with a nominal capital of 100,000*l.*, divided into 10,000 shares of 10*l.* each.

AND WHEREAS 9,990 only of the sd shares have been issued, and the sum of 4*l.* per share has been pd up thereon, and the sd shares are numbered — to — inclusive, and are still outstanding.

AND WHEREAS the coy has applied to the bank for an advance of 25,000*l.*, which the bank have agreed to make on the terms hinftr expressed.

NOW THESE PRESENTS WITNESS AND DECLARE as follows:

1. The bank shall, immediately after the execution hof, advance to the coy the sum of 25,000*l.*

2. The coy shall repay the sd sum of 25,000*l.* to the bank on the day of —

3. The coy shall forthwith pay to the bank the sum of £ —, being interest on the sd sum of 25,000*l.* at the rate of 6 p.c.p.a., as from the date hof up to the sd — day of —, and also a commission at the rate of 2 p.c. on the sd sum of 25,000*l.*, making together the sum of £ —.

4. If the sd sum of 25,000*l.* is not pd on or before the — day of —, such sum, or so much thof as shall for the time being remain unpaid shall carry interest at the rate of — p.c.p.a. until the actual payment thof.

5. The coy hby charges with the payment of the sd principal moneys and interest the whole of the capital, namely 6*l.* per share, now uncalled upon the sd 9,000 shares in the coy's capital which have been issued.

6. The sd capital shall not, during the continuance of this security, be called up or received in advance of calls without the consent in writing of the bank first had and obtained.

7. If during the continuance of this security the sd capital hby charged, or any pt thof, shall with the consent of the bank or otherwise be called up or in any way got in, the amount shall be pd over to the bank as security for the advance, with full power to the bank to apply a competent pt thof in or towards satisfaction of the advance and the interest thereon (if any) unpaid.

8. The coy shall not at any time during the continuance of this security create any charge on the sd capital hby charged without first giving notice to the person or persons in whose favour such charge is created of the existence of this security.

9. During the continuance of this security the coy shall forthwith, after the presentation of any transfer of ordinary shares in the capital of the coy, give the bank notice containing full particulars thof and no person shall be registered until forty-eight hours after such notice shall have been given, and no transfer shall be registered otherwise than in favour of a solvent transferee.

10. General charge on undertaking of coy. See Form 58.

11. In each of the events following, namely:

- (1) If a petition shall be presented, or an effective resolution shall be passed, or an order be made for the winding-up of the coy; or
- (2) If judgment shall be obtained against the coy for upwards of £—, and shall remain unsatisfied for — days; or
- (3) If a distress or execution shall be levied or enforced against any of the ppty of the coy; or
- (4) If the coy shall make default in the payment of any moneys due and owing hereunder by it at the time hbefore provided for payment thof; or
- (5) If the coy shall commit any breach of any of the provisions herein contained, and that whether the bank shall or shall not have waived any prior breach:

the bank may, by notice in writing to the coy, call in the principal moneys secured, and such principal moneys shall become payable immediately on the service of such notice.

12. If the principal moneys hby secured shall not be duly pd as and when the same shall be payable, the coy shall, upon the request of the bank, procure the sd capital hby charged to be called up by such instalments and payable at such times as the bank shall in writing request.

14. The coy hby covenants with the bank that the sd capital hby charged has not been called up or incumbered in any way, and that the contracts under which the sd shares were allotted are not in any way void or voidable.

14a. The coy shall forthwith give notice in writing to each of its shareholders of this charge on uncalled capital.

15. The coy shall procure each of its directors for the time being to covenant with the bank that whilst he is a director of the coy he will not be party to anything in breach of the obligations hby imposed on the coy, and that he will give to the bank immediate notice of any such breach, and also of any threat to commit any such breach, which shall come to his knowledge, and such covenant shall be executed, as regards the present directors, immediately after the execution hereof, and as regards each future director, immediately after his appointment.

16. The principal moneys and interest hby secured will be pd, and shall be assignable free from any right of set-off or equities between the coy and the bank.

IN WITNESS, &c.

Where a bank takes a separate mortgage to secure a loan it is sometimes considered expedient to make provision as in clause 16. In the absence of such a clause a transferee of the mortgage would take subject to the mortgagor's right if sued to set off against the amount secured by the mortgage the credit balance on his current account with the bank at the time when notice of the transfer is given to him. (Cavendish v. Greaves, 21 Beav. 163.) But of course the mortgagor can by agreement waive or exclude the application of the right of set-off. Perhaps, however, he may not be willing at the critical moment to do so hence the utility of the clause.

NOW THESE PRESENTS WITNESS, AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED as follows:—

1. In conson of the sum of 20,000/ now advanced and pd by the bank to the coy, the receipt of which is hby acknowledged, the coy shall pay to the bank on the — day of —, or on such earlier day as the same may become payable in accordance with the provisions hnftr contained, the ppal sum of 20,000/., and in the meantime, until payment of such ppal moneys, shall pay to the bank interest upon the sd sum of 20,000/., or such pt thof as shall for the time being remain unpd, at the rate of 6l. p.e.p.a. as from the --- day of ---, by Form 596.

half-yearly payments on, &c. in each year.

2. The coy shall on the execution hof pay to the bank the sum of £ --- by way of bonus or commission for the sd advance.

3. If the coy shall on the execution hof pay the sum mentd in the last preceding clause, and shall also pay interest upon the sd ppal sum of 20,000l., or upon so much thof as shall for the time being remain unpd, at the rate of £ --- p.e.p.a. upon or before, or within ten days after, each of the half-yearly days afsd, up to and including the sd --- day of ---, in accordance with clause 1 hof, and shall duly observe all the other provisions of this agreemt, then the bank will accept interest at that rate in lieu of interest at the rate of £ --- p.e.p.a. for each half-year in respect of which the same shall be so pd; but no claim for reduction of interest under this provision shall be made in respect of any half-yearly payment not made within the time afsd, and no claim for reduction of interest payable after the sd --- day of --- shall in any case be made.

4. The coy shall forthwith issue to and into the name of the bank the security debentures, and the same shall constitute a collateral security for the ppal moneys and interest hby secured, and shall stand charged accordingly.

5. So long as the coy shall duly pay interest on the sd sum of 20,000l., or so much thof as shall for the time being remain unpd, at the rate of and payable in accordance with the provisions hof, the bank will accept each half-year's interest so pt in satisfaction of the corresponding half-year's interest on the security debentures.

6. The coy may at any time before the --- day of --- give notice in writing to the bank of its intention to repay the whole or any pt of the sd sum of 20,000l., such pt not being less at any one time than 500l., and being a multiple of 100l., and at the expiration of one calendar month from such notice being given, the ppal moneys therein specified shall be payable, and the coy shall forthwith pay the same accordingly, and upon payment thof being made in accordance with this clause the bank shall allow or pay to the coy a rebate calculated at the rate of 1 p.e.p.a. on the amount then repaid for the time remaining unexpired, between the date of such redemption and the sd --- day of ---.

7. Upon any repayment being made by the coy to the bank with interest in pursuance of the last preceding clause hof, the bank shall transfer or give up to the coy security debentures equal in face or nominal value to 80 p.c. (or as near thereto as the debentures will permit) of the amount of the principal moneys repaid.

8. If the coy shall commit any breach of any of the obligations imposed on it by these presents or by the sd trust deed or the debentures secured thereby, or if the sd debentures or any of them shall become payable, or if the security constituted by the sd trust deed shall become enforceable, or if the coy shall stop payment or cease to Form 596. carry on business, or if any of the events specified in clause - - of the sd trust deed shall happen, then, and in any and every such case, the bank may, by not less than twenty-four hours' notice in writing to the coy, call in the principal moneys hby secured, and thereupon the whole of the principal moneys hby secured and then remaining unpaid shall immediately become payable without any right to rebat on the part of the coy, and the coy shall forthwith pay the same accordingly.

9. Sections 17 and 20 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, shall not apply hto.

10. If the coy shall at any time within fourteen days from the date hof by deed give to the bank the option in accordance with the conditions following of purchasing from the coy the security debentures and every pt thof at the price of 97 $\frac{1}{2}$ for every debenture in respect of which the option is exercised, the bank shall accept such option in satisfaction of the principal sum of 5,000 $\frac{1}{2}$ pt of the sum of 25,000 $\frac{1}{2}$ made payable to the bank under clause 1 hof, but the deed afsd to be operative in this respect must comply with these conditions that is to say

- (a) It must provide that the option afsd may be exercised from time to time by notice in writing to the coy specifying the amount to be purchased, and served during the continuance of this security.
- (b) It must provide that if the bank shall determine to offer for public subscription the debentures purchased, or otherwise to sell or dispose of the same, the coy shall furnish the bank with such reports of experts and other information as the bank shall reasonably require for the purpose of a prospectus offering the debentures for public subscription, and that the bank shall be at liberty to use and publish such reports and information in any such prospectus.
- (c) It must provide that the bank shall be at liberty to apply the purchase-money payable for the debentures so far as necessary in satisfaction of the moneys for the time being owing to the bank under or by virtue of this security.
- (d) It must provide that the coy shall, when required by the bank, apply to the committee of the London Stock Exchange for a quotation of the debentures, and shall do, and concur in doing, all acts and things which the sd committee shall require before and for the purpose of granting a quotation of the debentures.
- (e) It must be delivered to the bank within fourteen days from the date hof.

IN WITNESS, &c.

Sometimes, where there is a mortgage of shares, debentures or debenture stock, for a specified sum, it is desired to give the mortgagee power to buy such

FORMS.

Shares, debentures, or debenture stock. This, however, cannot be done by the original mortgage, for the power operates as a clog on the equity of redemption and the well-established rules of equity prohibit such a clog. Jerrah Timber and Wood Paving Corp., (1904) A. C. 323; Noakes v. Rice, (1902) A. C. 24; Green v. Curlett, (1903) A. C. 253; and see Reeves v. Lisle, (1902) A. C. 161; Salt v. Northampton, (1892) A. C. 1.

But the desired end can in some cases be achieved thus: Let the mortgage as above be made redeemable on payment of a larger sum than the advance, i.e., with a bonus of, say, 25 per cent. This is allowable. Whester v. Cook, 2 Ch. 542; Potter v. Edwards, 20 L. J. Ch. 468; Mannland v. Upjohn, 41 C. D. 126. Insert a clause as above under which the liability for the bonus is to be cancelled if the mortgagor within a specified time by deed gives the desired option. The mortgagor, of course, at once gives the notice, although he is not in any way bound to give it, and thus the power is conferred by a transaction subsequent to the mortgage, and is therefore unobjectionable. See Jerrah Timber and Wood Paving Corp., supra.

Form 597.

Security of bank on bills and by deposit of debentures in blank

WHEREAS the coy is indebted to the bank in the sum of £

AND WHEREAS it has been arranged that the sd sum of £ shall be repaid by instalments at various dates, and that such instalments shall be secured by bills of exchange to be drawn by the bank upon, and accepted by, the coy, and the particulars of such bills are set forth in the schedule hto.

AND WHEREAS it is one of the terms of the sd arrangement that such bill shall be secured as hntf provided.

NOW THESE PRESENTS WITNESS and it is hby agreed and declared, as follows:

1. The coy shall forthwith accept the sd bills and hand them over to the bank.

2. The payment of the sd bills to the holders for the time being thereof shall be secured by the issue to the bank as free of £ debentures of the coy, part of the series of debentures secured or to be secured by an indenture, dated, &c., and made, &c.

3. With a view to such issue, £ debentures of the coy, framed in accordance with the form set forth in the schedule to the sd indenture, with blanks left nevertheless in the first paragraph of each of the sd debentures for the name and address of the payee, shall forthwith be sealed by the common seal of the coy, and handed over, duly stamped, to the bank upon the footing that the bank is to be at liberty at any time to fill up the sd blanks as hntf provided, and that in the meantime the bank is to stand in the same position in regard to security as if the name of the bank were inserted in each and every of the sd debentures as the name of the payee thereof.

Form 597.

4. The coy hby empowers the bank, as and when the bank shall think fit, to fill in the name of the bank as the payee of the sd debentures, and to deliver the debentures so from time to time completed as the deed of the coy, and the coy hby irrevocably appoints the bank to be the attorney of the coy for the purposes afd.

5. The sd debentures when issued, and the bank's title in the meantime to stand in the position afd as regards security, shall be held in trust to secure the payment to the holders for the time being, and from time to time, of the bills of exchange afd of the principal moneys and interest payable in respect of such bills.

6. The coy shall not, whilst any of the sd bills are outstanding, issue, or attempt to issue, any debentures enttd to the benefit of the sd trust deed other than the debentures for £- — afd.

7. In each and every of the events following the security hby constituted shall immediately become enforceable; that is to say:

- (1) If the coy makes default in payment of any such bill as afd at maturity.
- (2) If an order shall be made, or an effectual resolution shall be passed, for the winding-up of the coy.
- (3) If any of the sd bills shall be dishonoured
- (4) If the bank shall be of opinion that the coy is in financial difficulties.
- (5) If the coy shall commit any breach of any of the provisions of this agreemt.
- (6) If the coy shall not procure every director of the coy to deliver to the bank a covenant with the bank that he will not, whilst he is a director, be a party to anything in breach of clause 6 hof, such covenant to be delivered, as regards each of the present directors of the coy, immediately after the execution hof, and as regards each future director, immediately after his appointment to be a director.

8. If and when the security hby constituted becomes enforceable, the bank may sell the sd debentures, or any of them, or the bank may bring any action or take any proceedings to enforce the same or any of the rights hby given to the bank, and generally may take such steps with a view to enforcing and realising the security as the bank shall think expedient, and with a view thereto the bank may fill up the blanks in the sd debentures as afd.

9. All moneys arising under the last preceding clause shall be applicable by the bank, first, in paying all expenses incurred by the bank as tree hof, and, secondly, in paying off the sd bills of exchange pari passu, and so that, if any of the sd bills shall not then have Form 597.

matured, a sufficient portion of such surplus proceeds shall be set apart to meet such bills.

10. The coy may at any time pay off any of the sd bills at or before or after the time fixed for payment thereof, and upon production thereof to the bank duly cancelled, the bank shall give up to the coy a due proportion of the debentures aforesaid.

11. The issue of the sd debentures is not in any way to operate as a merger of the debt owing by the coy on the sd bills of exchange resply.

IN WITNESS, &c.

THE SCHEDULE above referred to

[Particulars of Bills.]

AN AGREEMENT made the day of , between the Coy, Form 598.
Limited (hereinafter called "the coy"), of the one pt. and the Bank, Mortgage of Limited (hereinafter called "the bank"), of the other pt. whereby it is agreed securities for as follows: present and future advances.

1. The bank is forthwith to advance to the coy on the footing of Present this agreement the sum of 100,000*l*. advance.
2. The bank is to make further advances from time to time on the Further request of the coy on the footing of this agreement, but so that the total advances.
amount of the ppal moneys to be hereby secured shall not exceed at any one time 150,000*l*.
3. The advances aforesaid are to carry interest as follows, namely Interest.

As to the sd 100,000*l*. at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ p.c.p.a., up to the day of - next, or at such higher rate as shall for the time being and from time to time be the minimum rate of the Bank of England, and as to the balance at the minimum rate for the time being and from time to time of the Bank of England, but not less than 3 p.c.p.a.

1. The advances aforesaid are to be repaid by the coy to the bank on Repayment.
the 30th June, 19 , unless on or before the 31st March, 19 , an arrangement at the request of the coy is made for extending the time for payment.

5. As from the time when the sd advances become repayable until Interest the actual payment thereof, the same shall carry interest at the rate of after date for 10 p.c.p.a., unless a lower rate shall be agreed on. payment.

6. As security for the repayment of the sd advances and interest Security.
thereon, the coy is forthwith to execute in favour of the bank a mortgage of the freehold ground ents specified in the s le hto,

Form 598. such mortgage to be in the terms of the draft already approved by the parties hto.

Further securities.

7. As further security for the repayment of the sd advances and interest, the coy will from time to time vest in the bank further securities of a value not less than 30 p.c. beyond the advances in excess of 100,000*l.* from time to time owing on the security hof.

Approval.

8. The further securities afsd shall in every case be subject to the approval of the bank, and shall not be regarded as further securities for the purposes of this agreement until the same have been so approved, and the value of such further securities must be made out to the satisfaction of the bank, and shall not be deemed to have been so made out until the bank shall have certified that it is so satisfied, and such further securities shall be vested in the bank in such manner as the bank shall direct, and whether by deposit of deeds or by legal mortgage, or by equitable mortgage or otherwise, and in every case the short particulars of the further securities shall be entered in the annexed schedule.

Legal mortgage.

9. When any such further security is vested in the bank by deposit of deeds, the coy shall at any time or times on the request of the bank execute an effectual mortgage of the premises comprised in the deposit deeds, such mortgage to be declared by the bank's solors at the expense of the coy, and to be in such form and to contain such provisions, including full power of sale, as the said solors in the bank's interest may deem expedient.

Value to be kept up.

10. If at any time the value of the mortgaged premises according to a valuation to be made by some expert approved by the bank shall not exceed the amount of the coy's liabilities in respect of the advances made on the footing thof by a margin of at least 30 p.c., the bank is to be at liberty to notify the fact to the coy, and the coy is within days afterwards to vest in the bank further securities approved by the bank to make up the required margin, or in the alternative is to pay to the bank so much cash as shall restore the required margin.

Sale.

11. The bank is to have a power to sell the mortgaged premises in the terms of sub-sect. 1 of sect. 19 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and sects. 21 and 22 of the sd Act are to be applicable as if the power of sale were conferred by the sd Act; but such power is not to be exercised unless and until the coy shall have made default for more than seven days in the payment of some money hby secured or in the performance of some obligation hby imposed on the coy. Sect. 20 of the sd Act is not to apply.

See new sects. 4, 9 of Conveyancing Act, 1911.

Declaration evidence of default, &c.

12. Upon any sale under the power afsd, a statutory declaration made by a director, manager, or cashier of the bank that the coy has made default as aforesaid, and that the power of sale is exercisable, shall be conclusive evidence in favour of any purchaser or other person deriving title to the premises under such sale. Form 598.

13. The coy is from time to time to execute and sign all transfers, powers of attorney, and other documents which the bank may require for perfecting the bank's title to the mortgaged premises, or vesting the same or any covenant with any purchaser. Transfers, &c. to be executed.

14. With the consent of the bank the coy is to be at liberty from time to time to withdraw any of the further securities aforesaid vested in the bank pursuant to this agreement by the vesting in the bank other securities in accordance with the foregoing provisions. Withdrawal

AS WITNESS, &c.

Securities on Debentures and Debenture Stock.

Where a bank is willing to take debentures as security, they can of course be specially framed so as to meet the circumstances. Thus, they can be made payable on demand, or on demand in certain events. See Form 591.

But cases very commonly occur in which this is not practicable or expedient, e.g., where the company has already issued part of a series of debentures or debenture stock, and the best security it can offer to the bank is the balance of the same issue. In such cases the security may be effected

- (1) In the case of debentures, by issuing the debentures to trustees for the bank, and giving the bank a charge thereon with a power of sale under which it can, if necessity arise, sell the debentures and transfer them to the purchasers; or
- (2) In the case of debentures, by sealing the debentures in blank as to dates and names of payees, and depositing them with the bank as security, with power at any time to fill up the blanks and deliver the instruments as the deeds of the company (see Form 597), and with power for the company on paying to the bank a specified sum per debenture to withdraw any of the debentures, e.g., which it finds means to place with outsiders.
- 3) In case of debentures to bearer, by simply depositing the debentures with the bank and giving the requisite power of sale, &c., for debentures being negotiable instruments, the legal title passes to the depositor. Bechuanaland Exploration Co. v. London Trading Bank, (1898) 2 Q. B. 658; Edelstein v. Schuler, (1902) 2 K. B. 144.
- (4) In the case of debenture stock, by issuing the stock to the bank or its nominees with definitive certificates, or by giving a charge without issue of any certificates, or by giving a charge and issuing a provisional scrip certificate, or by issuing definitive certificates of various amounts, with power to fill up.

The law and practice as to debentures and debenture stock will be found set forth in considerable detail in Part III. of this work, 10th ed., 1907. The following is an alphabetical list of the principal matters there dealt with:

Guarantees.

THE — — BANK, LIMTD.

General Clauses (Joint and Several Guarantee)

1. Unless otherwise expressed, the guarantee is to be considered joint and several.

Form 600.

See note on guarantees, supra, p. 1196.

Prima facie, a guarantee by several is to be regarded as a joint contract, but it is a question of intention; and even where the word "severally" is not used, it may appear that a joint and several liability was intended. See Fell v. Goslin, 7 Ex. 185, where the words were "we undertake and guarantee . . . in the proportion of 200*l.* each," which words were held to mean that the guarantors were not jointly liable for the whole amount. When the guarantee is expressed to be joint and several, A., who signs on the understanding that B. is also to sign, will not be bound if B. does not in fact sign (Underhill v. Hopwood, 10 Ves. 226; Bonsor v. Cox, 4 Beav. 379), or if B. qualifies his signature. Ellesmere Brewery Co. v. Cooper, (1896) 1 Q. B. 75. The release of one guarantor prima facie operates as the release of all, even though the guarantee is expressed to be joint and several. Mercantile Bank of Sydney v. Tyser, (1893) A. C. 317; and see Re E. W. A., (1901) 2 K. B. 612.

Sometimes it is provided that "It is not to be incumbent on the bank to call upon the principals to pay before requiring the guarantors to pay the amount guaranteed." But it is unnecessary, for it only expresses what the law implies. Ranelagh v. Hayes, 1 Ves. 189; Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 714, 733; Smith's Merc. Law, 11th ed. 625.

Some guarantees also provide that "The amount guaranteed is (unless otherwise provided) to be due and payable at the expiration of fourteen days after notice requiring payment shall have been served on the guarantors." This is a concession to the guarantor, for prima facie the creditor can sue the surety without any previous notice or demand. Hitchcock v. Humphrey, 5 M. & G. 559; Cutler v. Southern, 1 Wms. Saund. 115.

Sometimes it is provided that—"As from the time when the bank requires payment of any moneys from the guarantors, such moneys are, until payment, to carry interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum."

Where two or more sureties for a common principal bind themselves in different amounts, in the event of the principal being in default they are liable to contribute to the satisfaction of the creditor's claim in proportion to the limits of their respective liabilities, and not in equal amounts. Ellesmere Brewery Co. v. Cooper, (1896) 1 Q. B. 75; Re Ennis, (1893) 3 Ch. 242; and Stirling v. Burdett, (1911) 2 Ch. 418. See further, De Colyar on Guarantees, 2nd ed.

As to the signature to a guarantee being obtained by fraud, see Re Carlisle Printing Co., Law Times News, 1911, p. 121.

2. Unless otherwise provided the guarantee is to be considered a continuing guarantee for the purpose of securing (subject to any limit specified therein) the general balance due, or that may be due, from time to time, and at any time, from the ppals to the bank, notwithstanding any payments from time to time made to the bank, or any settlement of account, or any other thing whatsoever. And the guarantor's liability to pay is to arise first when notice in writing is given to him requiring him to pay.

If A. guarantees the payment to B. of all sums to become owing to him by C. up to a specified sum, the question arises whether the guarantee attaches merely on the debts incurred up to the specified sum, so that when they are cleared off the guarantee will be at an end, or whether it is a continuing guarantee as above expressed. To avoid doubt the matter should be dealt with Form 600. in clear terms. Laurie v. Scholefield, L. R. 4 C. P. 622; Hoffield v. Meadows, ibid. 595; Kirby v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 M. & S. 18; Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, (1898) 2 Q. B. 460; Balfour v. Grace, (1902) 1 Ch. 733; Smith's Merc. Law, 11th ed. 626, 627.

It may be desirable to state when first the liability to pay is to arise, so that the statute may not run till then. Denton v. Puddison, 68 L. T. R. 409; Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, (1898) 2 Q. B. 460.

3. The guarantee (unless otherwise arranged) is to remain in force as to each of the guarantors until the expiration of fourteen days after a notice in writing to discontinue the same shall be given to the bank by such guarantor or his legal personal representative, and notwithstanding the discontinuance as to one or more of the guarantors, the guarantee is to remain a continuing security as to the other or others.

The death of a surety will determine his guarantee if he could by notice have determined the same in his life (Coulthart v. Clementson, 5 Q. B. D. 42; Harris v. Fawcett, 8 Ch. 866; Sherry, 25 C. D. 692, 705; Re White, (1897) 1 Ir. R. 575); but in the case of a joint and several continuing guarantee the death of one does not, ipso facto, determine the continuing operation of the guarantee as to the survivors (Beckett v. Adlyman (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 783); and if the contracting parties desire that on the death of a guarantor a special notice shall be necessary to determine the guarantee, they can so provide, and the provision binds the estate of the guarantor. Coulthart v. Clementson, 5 Q. B. 42, 48; Silvester, (1895) 1 Ch. 573. See, however, Re Silvester, (1895) 1 Ch. 573; and Re Grace, (1902) 1 Ch. 733, 739.

Where the consideration for a guarantee is given once for all, the guarantee cannot be determined in the absence of express provisions (Lloyd's v. Harper, 16 C. Div. 290; Calvert v. Gordon, 3 Mann. & Ry. 124); but where the consideration is to consist of separate advances and credits, to be from time to time made and given, it is considered that a surety may determine his liability by notice as regards future advances. It is therefore wise to make the matter clear by express provision. Sometimes a much longer period than fourteen days is fixed, e.g., one month, three months, or six months.

4. The bank, without exonerating the guarantors, may grant time or other indulgence to the ppals, or any other person or persons liable to the bank on or in respect of any bills, notes, guarantees, or undertakings, and give up, or modify or abstain from perfecting or taking advantage of any securities or contracts, and discharge any party or parties, and accept or make any composition or arrangement, and realise any securities when and in such manner as the bank may think expedient.

Prima facie the surety has an interest "in every transaction with the principal debtor. You cannot keep him bound and transact his affairs (for they are as much his as your own) without consulting him." Per Lord Loughborough, in Rees v. Berrington, 2 Ves. jun. 540; and see Bolton v. Bull, (1891) 2 Ch. 48.

Giving time and forbearance. If the creditor agrees with the principal debtor to give him time, the surety, unless the contract otherwise provides, is discharged. Combe v. Woulfe, 1 M. & S. 241; 8 Bing. 156; Oriental Financial Corporation v. Overend, 7 Ch. 142, 150; affd. L. R. 7 H. L. 348; Bolton v. Buckingham, (1891) 1 Q. B. 278. But to have this effect the agreement for time must be of a binding character, and made for valuable consideration (Bliss v. White, 1 Y. & C. (Exch.) 620); the giving of time without any binding agreement does not discharge the surety; nor will the surety be discharged if the agreement is not with the debtor, but with some third party. Frazier v. Jordan, 26 L. J. Q. B. 289; 8 El. & Bl. 303; Clarke v. Barley, 11 Ch. D. 422.

As to the effect, on an action for contribution, of one surety giving time to the principal debtor, see Greenwood v. Francis, (1899) 1 Q. B. 312.

A release of the principal operates pro tanto as a discharge of the surety. Ex parte Harvey, 4 D. M. & G. 801; Crugue v. Jones, L. R. 8 Ex. 81; Hilson v. Lloyd, 16 Eq. 50 (composition). Not so if the guarantee contains provisions to the contrary. Manchester Union Bank v. Beuch, 34 L. J. Ex. 133; Cooper v. Smith, 4 M. & W. 519. And a release by the creditor of one of the sureties operates primâ facie as a release of all. Mercantile Bank v. Taylor, (1893) A. C. 317. Not so where the release of the debtor is by operation of law. Ex parte Jacobs, 10 Ch. 211; M. Gath v. Gray, L. R. 9 C. P. 216. A release of the principal by novation extinguishes the remedy against the surety. Commercial Bank of Tasmania v. Jones, (1893) A. C. 313.

The surety is not released where the release of the principal only amounts to a covenant not to sue, with a reservation of the rights and remedies against the surety (Green v. Wigan, 4 Ch. 204); but where the principal is really released, there can be no such reservation. Commercial Bank of Tasmania v. Jones, (1893) A. C. 313. As to when a release is not implied, see Perry v. National Provincial Bank of England, (1910) 1 Ch. 164.

As to securities. A surety is primâ facie entitled to the benefit of all securities—whether known to the surety or not—which the creditor holds, as against the principal debtor (Dunster, Fox & Co. v. North and South Wales Bank, 6 App. Cas. 1); even though obtained after the contract of suretyship. Forbes v. Jackson, 19 C. D. 615, 621; and see Mercantile Law Amendment Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 5; and The Englishmen and The Austrians, (1895) 1 A. 12. Hence, in the absence of express provision, a surety is released by the creditor taking a new, or different, security in lieu of the original security. Clarke v. Bentley, 3 Y. & C. (Ex.) 187; Bowles v. Mayes, 19 C. B. N. S. 76.

As to the right of retainer by a surety who takes out administration to the deceased principal debtor, see Re Allen, Adcock v. Evans, (1895) 2 Ch. 345.

Where through the fault of the creditor any security for the debt is lost, the surety is primâ facie discharged pro tanto. Wulff v. Jay, L. R. 7 Q. B. 756 (bill of sale not registered); Pledge v. Buss, Johns, 663; Coates v. Coates, 33 Beav. 249; Strange v. Fooks, 4 Giff. 408 (not giving notice of assignment of chose in action); Capel v. Butler, 2 S. & S. 457 (omission to register transfer of books); Mutual Loan Society v. Sad'ar, 5 C. B. N. S. 419 (neglecting to restore collateral security); Latham v. Chartered Bank, 17 Eq. 205 (not presenting bill at maturity). But the surety is not released by the creditor realising the security in exercise of the power conferred on him. Taylor v. Bank of New South Wales, 11 App. Cas. 586; and see Carter v. Wille, 25 C. D. 670, and Belfast Banking Co., 1 Ir. C. L. R. 693, as to negligence not discharging surety.

Accordingly it is sometimes provided that the guarantors are not to make any claim against the bank, on the ground that, by negligence or otherwise, the bank has lost the benefit of any security or guarantee which, if enforced, or preserved, would or might have afforded funds in relief of the guarantors.

5. All dividends, compositions, and payments received from any Form 600. such person or persons are to be treated as payments in gross, and the guarantors are not to have any right to participate except to the extent of the surplus remaining after satisfaction of the ultimate balance due to the bank.

Primâ facie, where the guarantee is a limited one, and the debt exceeds the sum guaranteed, and the creditor receives a dividend from the estate of the bankrupt or deceased debtor, the surety is entitled to treat a proportionate part of the dividend as paid in reduction of the guarantee, and to insist that the whole shall not be applied in reduction of the unguaranteed portion of the debt. Thornton v. McKewan, 1 H. & M. 525; Hobson v. Bass, 6 Ch. 792; Seton, p. 1783. But the rights of the surety may be waived or modified as above. Ex parte National Provincial Bank, Re Rees, 17 C. D. 98; Midland Banking Co v. Chambers, 4 Ch. 398; Ex parte Miles, 1 De G. 623; Re Blakeley, 9 Morr B. R. 173. Where, however, the whole debt is guaranteed with a proviso limiting the guarantor's liability, the above stipulation is unnecessary. See Ex parte National Provincial Bank, Re Sass, (1896) 2 Q. B. 12.

5a. Where the principals are a corporation or society the bank is not to be concerned to see or inquire into the powers of the principals or their directors or other agents acting, or purporting to act, on their behalf, and moneys in fact borrowed from the bank in professed exercise of such powers shall be deemed to form part of the moneys guaranteed, even though the borrowing or obtaining of such moneys be in excess of the powers of the principals, or of the directors or other agents afd. or shall be in any way irregular or defective or informal.

Primâ facie the surety is not liable, unless there is a principal debtor liable, for the essence of the contract of suretyship is that the surety is only secondarily liable. Mountstephen v. Lakeman, L. R. 5 Q. B. 613; 7 H. L. 17. Where, however, directors of a company guaranteed the repayment of a loan borrowed ultra vires of the company, they were held liable on their guarantee. Yorkshire Railway Waggon Co. v. Maclure, 19 C. D. 478. But on appeal (21 C. D. 309) it was held that the transaction in question was not ultra vires, and accordingly the decision below cannot be relied on, and it is desirable expressly to deal with the matter. See also Becket v. Tower Bridge Assessment Commrs (1891) 1 Q. B. 638.

Some banks, to preclude question, use a clause as above.

5b. Any accounts settled or stated by or between the bank and the principals, or admitted by them or on their behalf, may be admitted by the bank, and shall in that case be accepted by the guarantors, and each of them and their respcive representatives, as conclusive evidence that the balance or amount thereby appearing is due from the principals to the bank.

Such a clause is sometimes used. In the absence of some such provision, the principal debtor's admission as to the amount owing is not available as against the surety. Evans v. Beattie, 5 Esp. 26. Even a judgment against the principal debtor is not evidence against the surety in an action in which he is sued by the creditor (Ex parte Young, 17 C. D. 668) (following the American case Douglas v. Howland, 24 Wendell, 35); unless, indeed, the surety was made a party to the former action, or was served with a third party notice. Form 600

5c. A certificate in writing under the common seal of the bank stating the amount at any particular time due and payable to it under the guarantee shall be conclusive evidence as against the guarantors, and each of them, and their respcive legal personal representatives.]

Such a provision is occasionally used.

6. As to each of the guarantors any notice may be served on him, or his legal personal representatives, either personally or by sending the same through the post in an envelope addressed to the last known place of address of the person to be served, and a notice so sent shall be deemed to be served on the day following that on which it is posted

7. In the above clauses the singular includes the plural, and vice versa.

Where several covenant as principal debtors, and it is subsequently arranged between them that one shall be liable as a surety only, and the creditor has notice, he may do nothing to prejudice the surety without in effect releasing him Rouse v. Bradford Banking Co., (1894) A. C. 586 conditions.

Gentlemen,

I have deposited with you the below-mentioned documents, by way of guarantee for the due discharge of the liabilities of A. B. of ——, to you, and upon the footing of the above general clauses, but so that the security is not to be available for more than £——.

Yours, &c. ——.

[Particulars of Documents.]

THIS INDENTURE, made, &c. between The — Coy, Limitd (hnfr called "the coy"), of the one pt, and A. B., of, &c., C. D., of, &c., E. F., of, &c., and G. H., of, &c. (hnfr called "the guarantors"), of the other pt.

Form 604.

Deed of indemnity from company to directors and another for becoming sureties for company to bank.

WHEREAS the coy recently obtained from The — Bank, Limitd (hnfr called "the bank"), an advance of 6,000*l*.

AND WHEREAS the sd advance was made on the security of an indenture, dated, &c., and made between the coy of the first pt, the guarantors of the second pt, and the bank of the third pt, and by that indenture the coy and the guarantors, jointly and severally, covenanted with the bank to pay to the bank on the — day of — the sum of 6,000*l*., with interest thereon at the rate of 5 p.c.p.a., computed from the date thof, and also so long after that day as any moneys remained due on the security thof, to pay to the bank interest thereon after the same rate, by equal half-yearly payments on the — day of — and the — day of — in each year; and by the sd indenture the coy assigned to the bank certain patents and patent rights specified or set out in the second and third schedules to a certain agreement of the — day of —, which agreement was framed in accordance with the draft thof set forth in the first schedule to the coy's arts of assen, and is hnfr referred to as "the scheduled agreement," to hold the same unto the bank, subject to the proviso therein contained for the redemption of the same premises on payment on the sd — day of — by the coy to the bank of the sd sum of 6,000*l*., with interest thereon in the meantime at the rate afd, and the sd indenture contained a proviso to the effect that, although, as between the coy and the guarantors resply, the guarantors were only sureties for the coy as between the guarantors and the bank, they, the guarantors, were to be considered as joint and several principal debtors for all the principal moneys and interest intended to be secured by the indenture now in recital, so that the guarantors, their heirs, executors, or administrators, should not be released or exonerated by time being given to the coy, or by any other dealing between the bank and the coy, or by any act or omission of the bank, or by any other matter or thing whatsoever, whereby the guarantors, their heirs, executors, or administrators, or any of them, as a surety or as sureties only for the coy, would be released or exonerated.

AND WHEREAS the guarantors, other than the sd G. H., are directors of the coy.

AND WHEREAS the directors of the coy are empowered by the arts of assen of the coy, amongst other things, to execute in the name and on behalf of the coy, in favour of any director or other person who may incur, or be about to incur, any personal liability for the benefit of the coy, such mortgages of the coy's ppty, present and future, as

Form 604. they think fit, and any such mortgage may contain a power of sale, and such other powers, covenants, and provisions as shall be agreed on: and by clause -- of the sd arts of assen it is provided, amongst other things, that no director shall be disqualified by his office from contracting with the coy or from voting in regard to any contract by or on behalf of the coy, to give to any director any security by way of indemnity.

AND WHEREAS it was one of the terms on which the guarantors agreed to execute the sd indenture that the coy should forthwith execute in their favour a security in the terms hof.

NOW THESE PRESENTS WITNESS AND DECLARE as follows:

1. The coy shall indemnify the guarantors, and each of them, and their and each of their heirs, executors, and administrators, against all actions, proceedings, claims, and demands in respect of the sd indenture of the --- day of ---

2. The coy shall, upon the request in writing of the guarantors, or of any one of the guarantors, or of the legal personal representatives of any one of the guarantors, pay off the principal moneys and interest secured by the sd indenture, and procure the release of the guarantors, and their respective heirs, executors, and administrators, from all claims under or in respect of the sd indenture.

3. The coy hby charges in favour of the trees or tree the undertaking and ppty of the coy whatsoever and wheresoever, both present and future, with the payment of all moneys which shall from time to time become payable under clause 1 hof, and as a security for the due performance by the coy of all the obligations imposed on the coy by that clause.

4. The sd charge shall operate as a fixed charge, so far as concerns the sd patents and patent rights, and as regards the residue of the premises hby charged shall operate as a floating security. Nevertheless, each of the guarantors, or his legal personal representative for the time being, shall be at liberty at any time, by notice in writing to the coy, to determine the floating character of the charge as regards any parlar asset specified in such notice, and thereupon the charge, as regards such asset, shall become and operate as a fixed charge, and shall cease to be a floating charge.

And see sects. 4, 9, Conveyancing Act, 1911.

5. The statutory power of sale conferred on mortgagees by sect. 19 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, shall be exercisable without further notice by the trees or tree at any time after the coy shall have committed any breach of any of the obligations hby imposed on it, and sects. 19 and 20 of the sd Act shall be regarded as modified accordingly.

6. The coy irrevocably appoints the trees or tree to be the attorneys or attorney of the coy, in the name and on behalf of the coy or otherwise to execute and do any such assignments, conveyances, assurances, and things as the trees or tree may find it necessary to execute and do for the purpose of carrying any such sale as aforesaid into effect.

Form 604.

7. The trees or tree may, at any time after the power of sale aforesaid has become exerciseable, appoint any person or persons to be a receiver or receivers of the ppty hby charged, and a receiver or receivers so appointed shall have power to take possession of the sd ppty charged, to carry on, or concur in carrying on, the business of the coy, and to sell, or concur in selling, any of such ppty; and all moneys received by such receiver or receivers shall, after providing for the matters specified in the first three paragraphs of clause 8 of sect. 24 of the sd Act, be applied in paying off all moneys which the guarantors shall then be liable to under the sd indenture of the day of —, and in making good to them all moneys they may previously have pd. and generally in effectuating the complete indemnity of the guarantors and their respive heirs, executors, and administrators, in accordance with clause 1 hof, and any surplus shall be pd to the coy.

8. The coy hby covenants with the guarantors, and as a separate covenant with each of them, that the coy will duly observe and perform all the obligations hby imposed on it.

9. In these presents the expression "the trees or tree" means the guarantors or the survivors or survivor of them, or other the trees or tree for the time being hof.

10. The statutory power of appointing a new tree or new trees, conferred by sect. 10 of the Trustee Act, 1893, shall be applicable hereto.

IN WITNESS, &c

That the proposed deed of indemnity submitted to the meeting be approved, and that the common seal be affixed thereto

CHAPTER XVII.

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL.

The Companies Act, 1862, made no provision for the reduction of the capital of a company limited by shares. The capital was by the Act made one of the conditions which had to be specified in the memorandum of association, and although sect. 12 of the Act allowed modification of some of the conditions specified in the memorandum as, e.g., to increase the capital, consolidate the shares, (said-up shares into stock), it prohibited all other alterations. This omission was, however, rectified by the Companies Act, 1880, sect. 90, which was explained (to meet the decision of Jessel v. R., in the Vale Co. (1877), 4 Ch. D. 827) and extended by the Companies Act, 1877. Both these Acts are now repealed, and the provisions re-enacted in sects. 46 to 56 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. See infra as follows:—

Reduction of Share Capital.

46. (1) Subject to confirmation by the Court, a company limited by shares, if so authorized by its articles, may by special resolution reduce its share capital in any way, and in particular (without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power) may—

- (a) Extinguish or reduce the liability on any of its shares in respect of share capital not paid up; or
- (b) Either with or without extinguishing or reducing liability on any of its shares, cancel any paid-up share capital which is lost or unrepresented by available assets; or
- (c) Either with or without extinguishing or reducing liability on any shares, pay off any paid-up share capital which is in excess of the wants of the company, and may, if and so far as is necessary, alter its memorandum by reducing the amount of its share capital and of its shares accordingly.

(2) A special resolution under this section is in this Act called a resolution for reducing share capital.

This section is supplemented by sects. 47 to 56 of the Act, which deal with the machinery for obtaining the sanction of the Court, and will be found in the Appendix, infra.

Effect of the sections.

Sections 46 to 56 of the Act take the place of the corresponding sections of the Companies Acts, 1867 and 1877. Sections 9 to 20 inclusive of the Act of 1867 gave power to a company limited by shares to reduce its capital by special resolution confirmed by the Court, and sect. 3 of the Act of 1877 declared that the word "capital," as used in the Act of 1867, should include paid-up capital, and the power to reduce capital conferred by that Act should include a power to cancel any lost capital or any capital unrepresented by available assets, or to pay off any capital which may be in excess of the wants of the company. And it was held in British and American Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399, that under the Acts of 1862 and 1867, any kind of reduction might be confirmed by the Court. "There is," said Lord Herschell, L. C., "not a word in the Act of 1877 from beginning to end to narrow the scope of the Act of 1867. The generality of the power conferred by that Act is left wholly untouched." And the jurisdiction of the Court to sanction reductions of capital of the most varied kinds were frequently recognised. However, in Anglo-French Corporation, (1902) 2 Ch. 845, Buckley, J., considered that the construction placed on the Act in the past was unsound, and that inasmuch as the Act of 1877 gave a specific power to cancel capital lost or unrepresented by available assets, it impliedly denied jurisdiction to sanction the cancellation of paid-up capital not lost or unrepresented by available assets, e.g., to sanction a cancellation of paid-up shares which the holder was willing to have cancelled for the company's benefit. This, as pointed out in former editions of this work, was inconsistent alike with the principle laid down by the House of Lords in British and American Corporation v. Couper, supra, and with a series of cases in which the Court had exercised from time to time the power thus supposed to be denied to it. Then came the decision of the House of Lords in Poole v. National Bank of China, (1907) A. C. 229, where that House dissented from the views expressed by Buckley, J., and re-affirmed the principles laid down in British and American Corporation v. Couper, supra. "The decision," said Lord Macnaghten, "of Buckley, J., in Anglo-French, &c. Co., goes even further. His language if correctly reported, seems to imply that because the Act of 1877 specifies certain cases and declares that the power conferred by the Act of 1867 includes those specified, it is to be inferred that in all other cases the jurisdiction of the Court is excluded. If that is the meaning of what the learned judge said, with all respect I am unable to agree with his view. The condition that gives jurisdiction is not proof of loss of capital, or proof that capital is unrepresented by available assets, or that capital is in excess of the wants of the company. The jurisdiction arises whenever the company seeking reduction has duly passed a special resolution to that effect. Lastly came the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which alters the wording of the enactments as to reduction of capital by saying that, subject to the confirmation of the Court, a company limited by shares, if so authorized by its articles, may by special resolution reduce its capital in any way, and in particular (without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power), may reduce its capital ' [in the manner specified in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of sect. 46]. Thus the jurisdiction of the Court to sanction any kind of reduction is made clear beyond all cavil.

The jurisdiction to confirm a reduction of capital arises—

jurisdiction arises.

- (1) Where the company is a company within the definition contained in sect. 285 of the Act, that is to say, "a company formed and registered under this Act, or an existing company," that is, a company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Act, under the Companies Act, 1862, or is a company (see sect. 246) registered but not formed under the Joint Stock Companies Act or the Companies Act, 1862, or is a company registered but not formed under Part VII. of the Act of 1908; and
- (2) The company has passed a special resolution for the reduction of its capital; and
- (3) The Court applied to has jurisdiction to wind up the company.

The following are some of the modes of reduction commonly adopted:—

Modes of reduction

- (a) Reducing the liability of shareholders in respect of uncalled or unpaid capital, e.g., where the shares are 10*l.* each with 5*l.* paid up, reducing them to 5*l.* fully paid-up shares, and thus relieving the shareholders from liability of the uncalled amount.
- (b) Paying off or returning paid-up capital not wanted for the purposes of the company, e.g., where the shares are 10*l.* fully paid up, reducing them to 5*l.*, and paying back 5*l.* per share. Sect. 46 of the Act expressly provides that this kind of reduction is to be allowable. Lees Brook Spinning Co., In re, (1906) 2 Ch. 394; Artizans' Land and Mortgage Corp., In re, (1904) 1 Ch. 796; Piercy, In re, (1907) 1 Ch. 289.
- (c) Paying off paid-up capital by issuing debentures or debenture stock in satisfaction. Nixon Navigation Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 872; De La Rue & Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 361.
- (d) Paying off paid-up capital on the footing that it may be called up again. Thus, if the shares are 10*l.* fully paid up, paying off 2*l.* per share on the footing that when desired the company may call it up again. Fore Street, &c. Co., 59 L. T. 214.
- (e) Cancelling by special resolution shares that have not been taken or agreed to be taken. See sect. 41 (1) (e) of the Act.

- (f) Cancelling shares surrendered, or the holders of which consent to cancellation. Llynri Co., 26 W. R. 55; Virian & Co., 54 L. T. 384; Poole v. National Bank of China, (1907) A. C. 228.
- (g) Paying off and cancelling preference shares, in pursuance of a contract in the memorandum and articles binding on both preference and ordinary shareholders, by applying for the purpose a portion of the profits of the company. See In re Dicko Pier Co., (1891) 2 Ch. 354.
- (h) Paying off capital out of accumulated profits and increasing pro tanto the uncalled capital. See sect. 40 of the Act; and Neale v. Birmingham Tramways Co., (1910) 2 Ch. 464.
- (i) Lost capital. Cancelling capital which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets. This is one of the commonest modes of reduction. A company, whose capital amounts to 100,000*l.* in 10*l.* shares, has lost, say, 50,000*l.* by some business disaster. It may be a submarine telegraph company, and one of its cables has been destroyed, or a shipping company, and part of its fleet has been sunk; in such a case where a company has lost a portion of its capital, nothing, as Sir George Jessel said, can be more beneficial to the company than to admit the loss, and to write it off (In re Ebbw Vale Co., (1877), 4 C. D. 31), e.g., to reduce its 10*l.* shares to 5*l.*, and thus place itself in a position to resume payment of dividends.

The provisions empowering a company to cancel "any lost capital, or any capital unrepresented by available assets," are alternative provisions, and the latter is not explanatory of the former. Hoare & Co., Ltd., In re, (1904) 2 Ch. 208.

In all cases a special resolution is required, and in all cases (except (e) and (h)) the confirmation of the Court is also required.

All round Reduction or otherwise.

All round reduction.

Prima facie a reduction of capital should be an all round reduction; that is to say, where capital is to be paid off or to be cancelled as lost or unrepresented by available assets, or where the liability for uncalled capital is to be reduced, the same percentage should be paid off or cancelled or reduced in respect of each share; and, on the same principle of fairness, this pari passu mode of reduction is the proper mode where there are several classes of shares, e.g., ordinary and preference shares (Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co., 24 C. D. 287; Direct Spanish Cable Co., 34 C. D. 307; Barrow Hematite Steel Co., 39 C. D. 382; Credit Assurance and Guarantee Corporation, (1902) 2 Ch. 601), unless such preference shares have priority as regards capital in winding-up (Re American Pastoral Co., 62 L. T. 625), in which case the loss should be thrown first on the ordinary shares. And see Floating Dock of St. Thomas, (1891) 1 Ch. 691; London and New York Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 860. But it is open to a company to pass a special resolution reducing the capital otherwise than in accordance with the legal rights of the shareholders, e.g., by paying off wholly or in part some of the shareholders, although all are entitled to rank pari passu; or by cancelling part of the capital paid up on one class, although both classes rank evenly as regards capital. And it is now settled that the Court has jurisdiction to confirm any kind of reduction, notwithstanding that it involves a departure from the legal rights of the classes. British and American Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 399; Credit Assurance and Guarantee Corporation, (1902) 2 Ch. 601; Allsopp and Sons, 51 W. R. 644; Welsbach Incandescent Gas Light Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87; National Dwellings Society, In re, 78 L. T. 144.

A scheme for reduction of capital by paying off paid-up capital may be sanctioned, even though it involves the raising by other means of the very money which is required for effecting the reduction. De La Rue & Co., (1911) 2 Ch. 361.

But the Court will not sanction the cancellation of a class of shares on the footing that in lieu thereof the company is to issue to the holders a much larger amount of paid-up shares of another class. Development Co. of Central Africa, (1902) 1 Ch. 54.

If the company reducing its capital has a reserve fund, there is no obligation to apply in the first instance the whole of such reserve fund to replace the capital account; and if the reserve fund has been employed in the business and is therefore mixed up with the general assets, the loss falls on the reserve and on the paid-up capital rateably. Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208; Pooler v. National Bank of China, 1907 A. C. 229, unless the company chooses to throw on reserve a larger proportion than its rateable proportion.

In the case last mentioned, Lord Macnaghten said: "The Court of Appeal was not quite satisfied about the propriety of retaining in hand any part of the reserve fund, but the proposal was allowed to pass on the company giving an undertaking which is embodied in the order that no part of the sum retained out of the profit reserve fund should be applied otherwise than for capital purposes. As the company offered this undertaking I do not propose to your Lordships that it should be omitted, but I do not quite understand what the undertaking means or how long it is intended to last. But I must say, speaking for myself, that I do not think that this addition to the order ought to be treated as a precedent in any other case."

A scheme for reduction of capital is not necessarily unfair or inequitable because it involves the alteration of rights of voting and priority as between the different classes of stockholders. Welsbach Incandescent Gas Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87; Allsopp & Sons, Ltd., In re, 54 W. R. 644, C. A. The Court will not, under guise of a reduction of capital, sanction a resolution which effects a "conversion" and "re-allocation" as distinguished from a reduction of capital. Walker Steam Trawl Fishing Co. (1908), S. C. 123, 41. of Sess.

It is no objection to a resolution for reduction that in effect it contravenes a bargain contained in the memorandum and articles of association, and it is no part of the business of the Court to determine the wisdom of the course adopted by the company in the management of its own affairs. Per Lord Loreburn, L. C., Poole v. National Bank of China, Limited, (1907) A. C. 229, 336.

The Court's Discretion.

Court's discretion.

Wide as is the jurisdiction to confirm a reduction of capital, the Court is invested with a discretion—a judicial discretion—and it is the duty of the Court before sanctioning a reduction to see that there is nothing unfair or objectionable in the scheme, especially if it does not provide for the treatment of the shareholders in accordance with their rights inter se.

The creditors," said Lord Macnaghten in British and American Ind. Corporation v. Couper, (1894) A. C. 339, and in Poole v. National Bank of China, Ltd., supra, "are protected by express provisions. Their consent must be procured or their claims must be satisfied. The public shareholders and every class of shareholders, individually and collectively, are protected by the necessary publicity of the proceedings, and by the discretion which is entrusted to the Court. Until confirmed by the Court, the proposed reduction is not to take effect, although all the creditors have been satisfied. When it is confirmed the memorandum is to be altered in the prescribed manner, and the company, as it were, makes a new departure. With these safeguards, which certainly are not inconsiderable, the Act apparently leaves the company to determine the extent, the mode, and the incidence of reduction, and the application of any capital moneys which the proposed reduction may set free . . . The jurisdiction arises whenever the company seeking reduction has duly passed a special resolution to that effect."

"I entirely agree," said Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Welsbach & Co. (1904) 1 Ch. 87, "that whether a scheme does or does not accord exactly with the legal rights of the shareholders, the Court may always consider whether it is a fair or an unfair scheme. In my judgment, this is a fair scheme. I cannot help saying—although this is in no way conclusive upon the question of fairness—that the Court always does take into consideration the wishes of the shareholders who are affected by the scheme, and in this case the majorities which have been obtained to my mind go far to show, at all events, that the shareholders, and in particular the preference shareholders, regarded this as a fair scheme." And, in the same case, Stirling, L. J., said

"I entirely agree . . . that in these cases the Court is not under an obligation to confirm any scheme for reduction by whatever majorities it may be sanctioned, but has a discretion which it is bound to exercise in every case. But, at the same time, in exercising that discretion, when we find that the determination of such matters as variations in the rights attached to different classes of shareholders has by the constitution of the company been left to the decision of the shareholders themselves, the Court ought to be very careful how it interferes with the bonâ fide judgment of business men on a matter of business in which they themselves are largely interested." See also Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208; Samuel Allsopp & Sons, Ltd., 51 W. R. 644; 19 T. L. R. 637. The shareholders cannot be heard to say that they took their shares in ignorance of the provisions for reduction of capital contained in the Companies Act, 1908, ss. 46-56 (re-enacting the Companies Acts, 1867 and 1877), or of provisions in the articles of association enabling class meetings to approve of modification of rights (see Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co., 34 C. D. 287, and Welsbach Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87); and accordingly the Court can make an order notwithstanding that it may create some sense of disappointment or hardship. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co., 34 C. D. 307, and the cases above referred to.

Confirmation of Reduction, not of Resolution.

It is to be observed that the Court, in dealing with the reduction of capital, has not to confirm the special resolution but to confirm "the reduction," for sect. 50 of the Act, replacing sect. 11 of the Act of 1867, provides that "the Court may make an order confirming" the reduction "on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit." If, therefore, the resolution deals with matters beyond reduction, the Court as a general rule should abstain from passing any opinion on it, and not purport in any way to confirm it; but the minute proposed to be adopted may render it necessary to look at the other circumstances, and in such case the Court must of course consider the validity or invalidity of the other parts of the resolution. See Hyderabad Decan Co., 75 L. T. 21, Stirling, J.

What the Court confirms.

As to cancelling paid-up capital which is not capital lost or unrepresented by available assets, the Court has frequently acted on the footing that it has jurisdiction to sanction the cancellation of shares fully or partly paid up, notwithstanding the absence of evidence that the capital paid up thereon has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets. The following are instances: Islington Electric Co., W. N. 1892) 81 (there the memorandum was subscribed for certain founders' shares, and it being desired to get rid of them, the holders paid them up in full and the company passed a resolution cancelling them, and Chitty, J., confirmed the reduction); West- minster Electric Supply Co., 1897 (Stirling, J., founders' shares cancelled, the holders consenting thereto, and being allowed to subscribe for a number of other shares at less than the market price); House to House Electric Co., in 1899 (Romer, J., of a similar character); St. James and Pall Mall Electric Co., in 1899 (Stirling, J., a similar scheme sanctioned).

The dicta to the contrary have been overruled (see supra, p. 1256 in Anglo-French Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 845.

As to necessity of proving loss of capital.

According to the decision in Louisiana and Southern States Co. (1909) 2 Ch. 552, it is not necessary, regard being had to the terms of sect. 46 of the Act, where a company seeks confirmation by the Court of a resolution to cancel capital lost or unrepresented by available assets, to prove the loss or non-representation, and what was said by Lord Macnaghten in Poole v. National Bank of China Ltd., (1907) A. C. 229, 336, was relied on in support of this view, but it seems doubtful whether the wording of the section really justifies that conclusion. Jurisdiction is one thing, and proof of the facts alleged is another thing, and where a petition for reduction alleges that some part of its paid-up capital proposed to be cancelled has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets, the Court as of course requires evidence of the facts alleged so that the order of the Court may be secundum allegata et probata.

Evidence of loss.

It has been held that in order to obtain the sanction of the Court to a cancellation of capital alleged to be lost or unrepresented by available assets, the allegation must be proved clearly, and goodwill (if any) must be brought into account. Barrow Hematite Co. (2 (1900) 2 Ch. 846.

It is sufficient to prove either that capital has been lost or that it is unrepresented by available assets; it is unnecessary to prove both these facts. Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208, C. A.

In cases of cancellation, care should be taken to ascertain that the capital proposed to be cancelled has been effectually paid up. In one case it was proposed to cancel some paid-up capital, and in preparing the evidence on the petition it was discovered that the agreement under which the shares were issued as paid-up had not been filed. The petition accordingly stood over, pending a motion to rectify the register and file a contract; and this having been done, the petition was amended, and the order for reduction was made. See Nottingham, &c. Co., 4 T. L. R. 429; Eastern, &c. Co., 68 L. T. 312; see also Nixon Navigation Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 872.

In some cases, where no sufficient contract has been filed, application may be made under the Companies Act, 1898, as to which see Chap. XX., infra.

Reserve.

Where the company reducing its capital has a reserve fund of accumulated profits, there is no absolute necessity to bring the reserve fund into account for the purpose of ascertaining whether the capital proposed to be cancelled has been lost. A loss of capital falls on the general assets—not on the reserve fund of undivided profits where the reserve fund is separately invested; but if the reserve fund is invested in the business so as not to be distinguishable from the general assets, a loss should be treated as falling on the general assets and the reserve fund rateably in proportion to the amounts thereof (Re Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208), unless the company chooses to throw a larger proportion on the reserve. This decision is one of great practical importance, and removes the doubts raised by the decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., in Barrow Hematite Steel Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 846, 854.

Cases sometimes arise in which, as part of the scheme of reduction, arrears of preference dividends are to be cancelled, or are to be satisfied by the issue of deferred warrants carrying interest payable out of profits or out of surplus profits, but it is not for the Court to sanction such an alteration of rights—they have to be dealt with by virtue of provisions in the memorandum or articles of association, as in the Welsbach Co., (1904) 1 Ch. 87, C. A.; Hoare & Co., (1904) 2 Ch. 208; General Credit Assurance Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 601. In the Welsbach Co. the special resolution passed for reduction of capital also provided, with the requisite sanction of class meetings, for the cancellation of the arrears of preference dividend. In Samuel Allsopp & Sons, Limited, W. N. (1903) 132, deferred warrants were issued in respect of the arrears.

Arrears of preference dividend.

In Hoare & Co., (1910) W. N. 87, infra, Form 508, arrears of preferential dividends were extinguished and participation certificates were to be issued instead to the preference shareholders binding the co to pay a percentage of surplus profits to the certificate holders.

If there is no efficient provision in the articles for class meetings in such cases, it may be necessary to proceed under sect. 120 of the Act. See infra, Form 808.

Scheme of management

Sometimes, where it is desired to cancel founders' shares, provision is made for paying them off and for paying them a considerable bonus out of the undivided profits of the company. The Court has sanctioned such a reduction in more than one case. See Form 617a, infra.

Bonus to founders' shares

But the Court will not sanction a cancellation of a class of shares on the footing that in lieu thereof the company shall issue to the holders a much larger amount of paid-up shares of another class. Development Co. of Central Africa, (1902) 1 Ch. 54.

Sometimes it is desired in cancelling lost capital not to reduce the amount of the individual shares; for example, where there has been a loss of 50 per cent. of the paid-up capital, prima facie the mode of carrying out a corresponding reduction would, where the capital is divided into 1*l.* shares, be to reduce every share from 1*l.* to 10*s.* But in some cases it is preferred to cancel one-half of each holding, so as to leave the shares at the same figure. This can be done, but occasionally it is necessary to make provision for fractions.

Preserving nominal amount of shares.

Buying out some shareholders.

Occasionally, again, it is desired by the holder of a number of shares to have the other holders paid off, so that, in effect, he and his nominees may become the sole shareholders and the practical owners of the concern. Such a scheme can be worked out under the Act. See Form 647b, infra.

Reduction in winding-up.

In several cases orders have been made sanctioning reduction of capital where the company was being wound up, and the reduction was part of a scheme of arrangement with a view to the resumption of business. In such cases the proceedings must comply not only with sect. 120, but sects. 46-56 of the Act (replacing respectively the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, and the Companies Acts, 1867 and 1877), and the petition must be intitled accordingly. So held by Vaughan Williams, J., in South Staffordshire Blue Brick Co., 8th March, 1898, and by Byrne, J., in Cooper and Johnson (1903), 51 W. R. 314. In Wallasey Brick and Land Co., W. N. (1894) 20, Kekewich, J., refused to sanction a reduction of capital on the ground that the company was not a going concern, and did not contemplate resumption of business, but it may be doubted whether this decision can be supported.

Occasionally, too, a reduction of capital takes place along with a reorganization of capital under sect. 45 of the Act or otherwise. Australian Estates and Mortgage Co., (1910) 1 Ch. 414; and infra, p. 1520.

Special Resolutions for Reduction.

Whether the sanction of the Court is or is not required, special resolutions have to be passed for the reduction of capital.

A special resolution for reduction can only be passed if at the time of passing the same the articles of association of the company contain a clause giving the company power to reduce its capital, for sect. 46 of the Act only empowers the company to reduce by special resolution "if so authorized by its articles." Accordingly, power in the memorandum of association is ineffective. Dexine Patent Packing and Rubber Co., W. N. (1903) 82.

For the clause in articles of association authorizing a reduction of capital, see Form 251, clause 48, p. 684.

Hence, where the articles omit to give express power to reduce the capital, a special resolution must first be passed altering them by introducing a clause that "the company may from time to time reduce its capital"; and subsequently a second special resolution must be passed to effect the reduction. These special resolutions cannot be passed concurrently. See sect. 46 of the Act, and West India Co., 9 Ch. 11, n.; Patent Invert Sugar Co., 31 C. Div. 166; Oregon Mortgage Co. (1910), S. C. 964. Ct. of Sess.

See form of resolution, p. 1117.

As to special resolutions generally, see sect. 69, and supra, p. 1093 et seq.

For notices of meetings to pass such resolutions, see Forms 436 and 437, and notes thereto.

For forms of resolution for many kinds of reduction, see supra, p. 1117 et seq.

The Court.

The expression "the Court" in sect. 46 of the Act means (see sect. 285) the Court having jurisdiction to wind up the company. See sect. 131.

What Court—have jurisdiction.

As to these Courts, see sect. 131, and the Rules in the Appendix, after "Acts." The Court's jurisdiction is exercisable by the judges of the Chancery Division, including those to whom the winding-up business is assigned.

Under the Act of 1900 this was doubtful, but in Islington and General Electric Supply, W. N. (1892) 81, it was held by Chitty, J., after consulting with the other judges of the Chancery Division, that the jurisdiction was not confined to the winding-up judges, and his Lordship stated that similar reasoning might be applied to applications under the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, now represented by sects. 9 and 264 of the Act of 1908. Accordingly, many orders in reductions of capital were subsequently made by the learned judges above mentioned.

presented

It was also held by Vaughan Williams, J., and it appears to be clear, that the jurisdiction under the Acts of 1867 and 1877 was also exercisable by the judge to whom, under sect. 2 of the Companies (Winding Up) Act, 1890 (Companies Act, 1908, s. 132), the general jurisdiction to wind up companies was assigned. Mining Shares Investment Co., (1893) 2 Ch. 660 (Extension of Objects); Ocean Queen Steamship Co., ib. 666 (Reduction of Capital); and Vaughan Williams, J., when acting as winding-up judge, afterwards made many orders in similar cases. Other such orders were made by Romer and Byrne, J.J., when acting for the winding-up judge, and by Wright, J., and every subsequent winding-up judge. Irrespective of these decisions, the jurisdiction is also exercisable by the other Courts having, under the Companies Act, 1908, s. 131 (Companies (Winding Up) Act, 1890), jurisdiction in England and Wales to wind up companies, namely, the Chancery Courts of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, and certain of the County Courts, subject to the conditions imposed by sect. 131 of the Act. Hence the first inquiry to be made in ascertaining what Court is to be petitioned is, "What Court, having regard to the situation of the registered office and the amount of capital paid up, or credited as paid up, would have jurisdiction to wind up the company?"

Orders confirming reductions of capital have also been made by the Chancery Courts of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, and in a few cases, where the paid-up capital did not exceed 10,000*l*. (see sect. 2 (3) of the Companies (Winding Up) Act, 1890; Companies Act, 1908, s. 132), orders have been made by County Court judges. A petition for reduction or extension, to be heard before winding-up judge, need not be specially intitled. It can be intitled "In the matter of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. Aluminium Co., W. N. (1894) 6. See Rule 5, infra.

In a case within the County Court's jurisdiction (asking for confirmation of an alteration of objects) presented to the High Court Wright, J., made the order, but directed the proceedings to be transferred to the County Court. Rugeley Gas Co., W. N. (1899) 127.

In a case in August, 1905, Warrington, J., confirmed a resolution for reduction, although the company's paid-up capital was under 10,000*l*. This seems correct, for by sub-sect. 5 of sect. 2 of the Act of 1890 (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 131 (7)), which section gives winding-up jurisdiction to the Courts above mentioned, "nothing in this section shall invalidate a proceeding by reason of its being taken in a wrong Court." But whether there is any power to transfer a petition for reduction or extension of objects from the High Court to a County Court, or vice versa, is doubtful. See s. 133 of the Companies Act, 1908, replacing sect. 3 of the Act of 1890, only gives power to transfer "the winding-up of a company or any proceedings therein."

Procedure (see Rules of May, 1909, in Appendix)

The short process.

Where the reduction does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up capital:

1. See that the regulations—i.e., the articles—give the requisite power to reduce capital (supra, p. 684), and if they do not, insert by special resolution power to reduce capital.
2. Then pass a special resolution (see Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 69 (2)) for the reduction in the desired form, taking care to specify the character of the reduction and how it is to be effected (supra, Form 487 et seq.).
3. File with the Registrar of Companies printed copy of this resolution, pursuant to sect. 70 of the Act of 1908 (see Appendix).
4. Present petition (infra, Form 606) to the Court praying for confirmation of the reduction, the company to be the petitioner. File affidavits in support of the petition. See Form 615, infra.
5. As from the presentation of the petition until the Court otherwise directs, use the words "and reduced" as part of the - name of the company. See sect. 48 of the Companies Act, 1908, unless a dispensation order is obtained, infra, p. 1271.

6. Take out summons in chambers immediately after the presentation of the petition for directions as to advertising, &c. (see Form 609), and obtain order thereon. See Form 610.
 7. Advertise petition as directed. See Form 611.
 8. Bring on the petition for hearing, and obtain an order of the Court confirming the reduction and approving of the minute. See Form 622.
 9. File with the Registrar an office copy of order and the minute as required by sect. 51 of the Act, and obtain the Registrar's certificate, sect. 51 (4).

As to the procedure where the reduction DOES involve the diminution of liability in respect of unpaid capital, or the payment off of paid-up capital, see infra, p. 1287 et seq The long process Appeals.

Appeals from the decisions of the High Court of Justice on petitions for reduction of capital will, on application, be treated as interlocutory, and dealt with speedily. See Samuel Allsopp & Sons, Ltd., W. N. (1903) 132.

PRECEDENTS

(UNDER ACT OF 1908).

Form 606. In the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division

Petition for
company
cancellation of capital lost or unrepresented.

Mr. Justice

In the matter of the ——— Coy, Limtd and Reduced
And in the matter of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908

The above heading is right even where the petition is filed at the office of the Registrar in Companies Winding-up, Bankruptcy Buildings, Aluminium Co., W. N. (1894) 6.

To His Majesty's High Ct of Justice

The humble peton of the ——— Coy, Limtd and Reduced

Showeth as follows:

1. Your petr, the above-named coy (here called "the coy"), was incorporated in the year ——— under the Cos Acts, 1862 to 1900, as a coy limtd by shares.

2. The registered office of the coy is situate at ———

3. The objects for which the coy was established are [the working of gold mines], and other objects set forth in the memorandum of association.

4. The capital of the coy is £ ——— divided into ——— shares of £ ——— each.

5. Shortly after its incorporation the coy commenced and it has since carried on business.

6. The coy has issued ——— of its shares and no more, and the sum of £ ——— per share has been paid up thereon.

7. By clause ——— of the arts of asson of the coy it is provided that the coy may from time to time by special resolution reduce its capital in any manner permitted by law.

See supra, p. 684. and infra, p. 1471.

8. By special resolution of the coy, duly passed and confirmed in accordance with sect. 69 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, at extraordinary general meetings (thof. held (resp. on the --- day of Form 608 and the --- day of ---, it was resolved:

That the capital of the coy, which now consists of 10,000*l.*, divided into 1,000 shares of 10*l.* each fully pd-up, be reduced to 5,000*l.*, divided into 1,000 shares of 5*l.* each, and that such reduction be effected by cancelling pd-up capital which has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets to the extent of 5*l.* per share."

For other forms of resolution, see supra, p. 1117

9. Previously to the passing of such special resolution, pd-up capital of the coy to the extent of 5,000*l.* and upwards had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets

10. The reduction of capital aforesaid does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid capital or the payment to any shareholder of any pd-up capital

1. The form of the minute proposed to be registered is as follows:
Here set out minute. See Forms, infra, p. 1287

Your petr the coy therefore humbly prays:

- (1) That the reduction, &c. as below, p. 1289;
- (2) That the addition of the words "and reduced" to the coy's name may be dispensed with altogether
- (3) Or that [as in Form 625].

And your petr will ever pray, &c.

NOTE. It is not intended to serve this peton on any person.

As to the Court having jurisdiction, see supra, p. 1265.

As to the forms of resolution, see supra, pp. 1117 et seq.

As to the alleging and proving the capital proposed to be cancelled as lost or unrepresented by available assets, see supra, p. 1262.

As to the minute to be approved by the Court, see infra, pp. 1282, 1284 et seq.

As to the general procedure in such cases, see infra, pp. 1287, 1288.

As to the use of the words "and reduced," sect. 48 of the Act of 1908 provides for the addition to the company's name of the words "and reduced" as from the confirmation of the resolution for reduction until a date to be fixed by the Court.

The effect of sect. 48 of the Act of 1908 is shortly as follows:

If the case involves a diminution of liability or repayment to any shareholder of any capital, the words "and reduced" must be added to the company's name "on and from" the confirmation by the company of the resolution for reducing the share capital.

If the reduction does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, then the words "and reduced" need only be added on and from the presentation of the petition.

In either case the words must be continued until such date as the Court may fix.

If the reduction does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, the Court may dispense altogether with the words "and reduced."

Form 606.

The section also provides in effect that where the reduction of the capital of the company does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid capital, or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up capital, it shall not be necessary before the presentation of the petition for confirming the reduction to add, "and the Court may, if it thinks it expedient so to do, dispense altogether with the addition of the words 'and reduced.'"

Hence, after the presentation of the petition, the words "and reduced" must, unless and until otherwise ordered, be used as part of the company's name; but, as appears above, the Court has a discretionary power to dispense altogether with the use of the words, and, this being so, the practice established soon after the passing of the Act of 1877 was to make an order immediately after the presentation of the petition dispensing with the words "and reduced" until the hearing. Thus the following order was made in the first case under the Act which came before the Courts.

Form 607.
Dispensation order.

UPON MOTION this day made, &c., by counsel [Mr., now Lord Macnaghten] for the coy, petrs named in the peton on 6th August 1877, preferred unto this Ct, and upon reading an affidavit of J. J. S. filed 8th August, 1877, this Ct doth order that the addition of the words "and reduced" to the title of the coy be dispensed with until the hearing of the sd peton. And it is ordered that the petrs be at liberty to amend the sd peton by omitting therefrom the words "and reduced" from the title of the coy. And it is ordered that the peton be in the paper for hearing without the Chief Clerk's certificate of the settlement of the list of creditors referred to by the Cos Act, 1867, and the general order and rule of 21st March, 1868. Llynri Tandu, & Co., Malins, V.-C., 8th August, 1877.

Orion Diamond Mining Co., Stirling, J., 10 June, 1887.

New Quebrada Railway Co., North, J., W. N. (1888) 233.

The ground of application in most cases was that, as the Act gives the Court discretionary power to dispense altogether with the use of the words "and reduced," it was desirable to dispense with the words between the presentation and the hearing, usually a period of only ten days, in order that the Court might at the hearing, with the full evidence before it, be able to exercise its discretion.

But for some years past it has been extremely difficult to obtain such interim dispensation orders, and according to the present practice they are only made in very special and extraordinary circumstances. The application for such an order is usually made by summons at chambers, Chitty, J., having expressed the opinion that such applications should be so made. Solway Steamship, 61 L. T. 659. See Form 609. The application must be supported by affidavit showing the special circumstances. Maxim Weston Co., W. N. (1888) 212. The fact that the company is a bank has induced the Court in more than one case to make the order. Anglo-Argentine Bank, Ltd., Wright, J., 1901. Form 607

In Lindler and Co., W. N. (1911) 66, Joyce, J., refused an interim dispensation order, although the company carried on business abroad. It seems a strange thing that the Court should countenance a practice of refusing off-hand to make a dispensation order, when in the result it practically prejudges the question whether at the hearing, with all the evidence before it, such an order should or should not be made.

The application used not only to be made along with the application (see Form 611) as to advertisement, &c.

As to advertising the presentation and day fixed for hearing of the petition. Prior to Tambracherry Co. (1885), 29 C. D. 683, it was the general practice to apply for and obtain, shortly after the presentation of the petition, an order dispensing with any notice of the presentation and any notice of the day fixed for hearing.

Upon motion, &c., let the peton be placed in the paper for hearing Form 608 on Saturday, the 3rd March, 1888, without advertisement or notice, Notice dispensed with and without any certificate of creditors. West Cumberland &c Co., Kav. J., 21st February, 1888.

In Tambracherry Co., 29 C. D. 683, Bacon, V.-C., refused to hear a petition for cancelling lost capital without previous advertisement, and the decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal on the ground that the judge had a discretion with which the Court of Appeal would not interfere. Cotton, L. J., in that case, after considering the Acts and Rules, said: "According to my view the rule requiring an advertisement applies, but subject to be dispensed with in a case where the Court thinks that it is impossible that creditors can be interfered with or prejudiced, and therefore does not think that they ought to object; but certainly there was a discretion with the judge, and as he said he would not hear the petition without its being advertised, in my opinion the Court of Appeal ought not to interfere with that discretion, although in my opinion, petitions taking advantage of the Act of 1867, with the provisions introduced by the Act of 1877, are prima facie to be advertised for the purpose of enabling the parties to go before the Court and object that this may interfere with the due recognition of their claims;" and Bowen and Fry, L. J.J., concurred.

Within a few years after this decision the rule was adopted by all the judges that the Court would only in very special cases dispense with advertisements of the presentation and day fixed for hearing. See Consolidated Telephone Co., 14 W. R. 408, Chitty, J., and Union Finance Co., W. N. (1887) 253, North, J., and this is the present practice. Indeed, according to the present practice, an order to dispense is scarcely ever made. But possibly, regard being had to the views expressed in Pooler v. National Bank of China, (1907) A. C. 229, and in Louisiana and Southern States, &c. Co., W. N. (1900) 170, supra, p. 1262, and ibid. p. 1277, the old practice may now be revived.

The advertisement of a company's petition for reduction of capital must, prima facie, exercise a prejudicial influence on the company's credit, and if there is no real ground for such prejudice, and if creditors' rights are noways affected by the reduction, there seems no reason why the Court, having a dispensing power, should not use it to relieve the company from being placed at a disadvantage. A form of application for such an order where desired could run as follows:—

Form 609.

[Title as in the Petition.]

Form 615

Affidavit in support of petition for reduction by cancelling lost capital.

I, A. B., of, &c., make oath and say as follows:

1. I am, and have for upwards of eleven years past been, a director, and for upwards of three years past the chairman of the above-named coy, hithr called the coy, and am intimately acquainted with the affairs of the coy.

2. I have read the petition in this matter now exhibited to me and marked A. B. 1, and I believe that all the statements contained in that petition are true, and that belief is grounded on the knowledge I have obtained as such director and chairman of the coy as aforesd.

The document now exhibited to me marked A. B. 2 is the certificate of incorporation of the coy. The registered office of the is now situated at, &c

The document now exhibited to me marked A. B. 3 is a printed copy of the memorandum and arts of asson of the coy, and also contains copies of all special resolutions which have been passed and confirmed except the special resolution referred to in the sd petition.

If no special resolutions have been passed except the one for reduction, write
No alterations have been made in such memorandum or articles save so far as the same are affected by the special resolution referred to in the said petition.

The document now exhibited to me marked A. B. 4 is a duplicate of the agreement mentd in paragraph 4 of the sd petition. That agreement was duly filed with the Registrar of Companies before any of the shares therein mentd were issued. Except those shares, all the capital credited as pd up on the outstanding shares of the coy has been pd up in cash.

6. The statements contained in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the petition are correct.

7. The general meetings mentd in paragraph 8 of the petition were resply convened by notices in the terms of the two documents now exhibited to me, and resply marked A. B. 5 and A. B. 6. These notices were duly sent out to the shareholders in accordance with the arts of asson of the coy. I was present at the meetings at which the special resolution referred to in such paragraph was passed, and I say that the same was duly passed and confirmed in accordance with sect. 69 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

Clitty, J., repeatedly held that in cases of reduction the fact that the meetings for passing the special resolution were duly convened and held should be Form 616. proved by affidavit [see Form 621], and not merely by production of the minute book which, under sect. 67 of the Act of 1862 (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 71), is prima facie evidence. And Vaughan Williams, J., adopted this rule both in reduction and extension cases. Omnium Invention Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 127, which also see as to exhibiting the memorandum and articles. Presumably the ground for requiring something more than prima facie evidence is, that the creditors, present and future, and the public, are interested, and though existing creditors are invited to attend they rarely do in fact attend and in the result the application to the Court is heard ex parte, and the Court therefore acts, and, it is submitted, should act, with greater strictness than in a contested case, where the evidence adduced by one party is likely to be tested by the other party. It must also be borne in mind that fraud in such cases is possible, and this danger is minimised if the prima facie evidence has been confirmed by affidavit.

Acting on the same principle, the Court did not treat the entry on the register that certain shares are paid up as sufficient where the shares had been issued for a consideration other than cash. In some cases the Court required evidence of the fulfilment of the requisite contract, pursuant to the "cash payment" section, sect. 25 of the Companies Act, 1867.

8. The book now exhibited to me marked A. B. 7 is the minute book of the coy, containing minutes of the proceedings had at the general meetings of the coy.

9. At the time when the said special resolution was passed, capital of the coy to the extent of at least £ — had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets. This fact is made out as follows—

The assets of the coy as on the — day of — consisted of the following particulars, and are of the value set opposite the same respectively, that is to say:

Set out short particulars of the assets, and set opposite the same the value thereof, and add up the amounts—say 150,000/.

The liabilities of the coy are as follows—

Set out the general values of the liabilities, and opposite each the amount thereof, and add up—say 100,000/.

According to Lindsay and Southern Station, &c. Co., supra, p. 1262, it is no longer necessary to prove the loss, but it seems doubtful whether that view is sound. See infra, p. 1277.

10. Deducting the amount of the liabilities aforesaid, namely £ — from the amount of the assets aforesaid, it appears that the surplus amounts to £ —, or this, but the paid-up capital of the coy is £ — and accordingly paid-up capital to the extent of £ — and upwards has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets.

11. The loss aforesaid is attributable to the following circumstance [State the circumstances, and use Form 616 or 617 if applicable]

12. It was for some time hoped that the value of the property of the coy might be regarded as only temporarily affected, but the directors and shareholders are now fully satisfied that the assets of the coy — its liabilities, cannot in any sense be regarded as equivalent to the amount of its paid-up capital, and that the deficiency, namely, £ - - - - - upwards, must be regarded as a permanent deficiency, and ought to be written off and cancelled

Sworn, &c

This affidavit is merely given as an example of the kind of evidence which the Court has hitherto looked for in such cases. Usually the statement of the loss or depreciation is further fortified by the affidavit of some expert.

According to Ladbroke and Southern States Co., W. N. (1909) 170, s. 1262, evidence of loss is not necessary. As, however, the Court has a judicial discretion to exercise, and has to decide whether the reduction involves or does involve diminution of liability or payment off of capital (see sects. 18, 19) it is submitted that the facts have to be duly proved.

The following forms will show how losses have in some cases been explained in affidavits:

The loss aforesaid is attributable to the following circumstances, that is to say:

Under an indenture, dated, &c., and made between, &c., the coys. as lessor and lessee of extensive collieries situated at, &c., for a term of twenty-one years, commencing on, &c., with power for the coys. to determine the sublease at the end of the seventh or fourteenth years of the term, on giving one year and one week's notice. The coys. acquired these collieries when the coal trade was in a very flourishing condition, and when consequently colliery concerns were regarded as of very great value, and the coys. therefore agreed to pay the lessor very large rents and royalties. The coys. also expended very large sums of money in developing and improving the collieries. Subsequently, however, the demand for coal went down and prices fell and it then became impossible for the coys. to work the collieries at a profit. The coys. therefore gave notice of its intention to determine the lease at the end of the fourteenth year of the term, and its occupation of the collieries accordingly determined on the - day of - 18-. The net result of the working of the collieries by the coys. has been ascertained to be a loss to the coys. of upwards of

Moreover, the coys. has from time to time expended large sums, amounting altogether to £ - - - or thbts., on machinery and plant at its iron and steel works. The works, being originally laid out as to part thereof, for the manufacture of iron, became old-fashioned and obsolete, and had to be remodelled for the manufacture of steel. The result from this outlay has been a loss to the coys. of £ - - - and upwards.

Other examples are given below, but the circumstances differ so widely that forms can only be useful as indicating very generally what is required.

The words "any lost capital or any capital unrepresented by available assets or alternative provisions." The latter is not explanatory of the former. Hogg, Ltd., (1904) 2 Ch. 208

Causes of loss of capital.

Form 617. The loss of capital above mentd has been occasioned as follows—that is to say:—
Another.

- (1) From various causes, including of late years the extraordinary depression of the sugar trade, the business of the coy has been carried on at a loss, and no dividends have ever been pd by the coy. The balance of profit or loss each year has been carried to the profit and loss account, and on the day of —, —, the accumulated balance to the debit of that account was £—.
- (2) The coy in — erected and constructed extensive works, machinery, and buildings liable to depreciation and diminution in value from wear and tear and otherwise, at a cost of £— and upwards, and although such works, machinery and buildings have become depreciated, and have steadily diminished in value, no part of such depreciation or diminution in value has ever been written off by the coy, inasmuch as it was not considered material to alter the figures when the coy was not paying dividends.

Form 618.

Loss by fire insurance
 company.

At the time when the sd special resolution was passed, capital of the coy to the extent of at least 100,000*l.* had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets. This fact is made out as follows—that is to say:

The assets of the coy as at 31st March, 1909, were as follows:

Investments	£197,580	6	—
Cash	6,772	1	8
Bills receivable	2,071	5	10
Branch and agents' balances	78,939	6	1
Interest accrued	2,172	2	1
Furniture and fittings at head offices and branches	1,052	—	—

£289,488 5 1

The liabilities of the coy as at 31st March, 1909, were as follows:

Estimated liability on outstanding policies, at least	£127,976	5	—
Outstanding fire losses	53,411	19	—
Sundry creditors	2,260	1	—
Temporary loans	5,500	—	—
Bills payable	200	—	—
Unclaimed dividends	139	1	10

£189,488 5 1

Deducting the amount of the liabilities aforesaid, namely, Form 618 189,488/ 5s. 4d., from the amount of the assets aforesaid, it appears that the surplus amounts to 100,000/ or thereabouts, but the paid-up capital of the coy is 200,000/., and accordingly paid-up capital to the extent of 100,000/ and upwards had, up to the 31st March, 1909, been lost or was unrepresented by available assets, and there has not since been any material alteration in the coy's position. The document now exhibited to me, and marked "H. E. K. 8," is a copy of the directors' report and balance sheet which was submitted to and adopted by the ordinary general meeting of the coy held on the day of . 18

The loss aforesaid is attributable to the following circumstances

- 1.) The occurrence of exceptional fires and conflagrations, by which the coy had to pay during the last two years losses much in excess of the average.
- 2.) The payment during the last year of losses upon classes of risks which the coy has ceased to insure owing to their unprofitable character.
- 3.) The coy's inability to reserve from premiums received in respect of policies issued prior to the 31st March, 1890 a proportion to meet the losses which will accrue on such policies

In the circumstances aforesaid, I say that the reduction of capital proposed to be effected does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up capital

The following is a specimen of an affidavit by an actuary in support of the reduction referred to in the foregoing form: -- Form 619

I, the general manager of the Fire Insurance Coy. I have held that office for upwards of years, and similar engagements with other cos for years previously, and I have consequently great experience relative to the business of fire insurance

Actuary's affidavit to be sworn to.

I have read the petition in the above matters now exhibited to me and marked "A," and also a copy of the afft of , the chairman of The A. B. Insurance Coy. Limited (hereafter called "the coy"), filed in support of the sd petition

3. I have lately, at the request of the coy, examined the booksdocuments, accounts and papers of the sd coy, for the purpose of ascertaining what loss of paid-up capital the sd coy has incurred, and say that, as the result of such examination, I believe the statements in the sd petition and afft as to the sd coy's financial position to be correct.

4. Having regard to the total amount of the coy's liabilities in respect of outstanding policies granted by it, the coy ought, at the Form 610. very least, in my opinion, to have a reserve fund to answer such liabilities of 127,976*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, whereas the coy only has a reserve fund to answer such liabilities of 27,976*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* This opinion is based on the following estimate, which is founded on the established practice of fire insurance cos. and which experience has substantiated. I arrive at this estimate in the following manner:

The premiums received during the twelve months ending 31st day of March, 1890, were 298,095*l.*

The annual rate of fire loss incurred by the coy since its commencement is 70.75 p.c. It is found, by actual analysis, that one-half of the risks comprised in an ordinary year's income are, at its close still unexpired. This, upon an annual income of 298,095*l.*, would represent 149,047*l.*, and the expected losses thereupon, at the rate of 70.75 p.c., would require £105,451 0 0

To this sum I add the special provision for losses which will occur under policies included in the year for various terms exceeding one year. From an examination of the coy's business and my knowledge of its transactions, I estimate this to be not less than

£127,976 0 0

Form 620.

Accountant's affidavit in support

1. In my opinion the pd-up capital is at the present time unrepresented by available assets to the extent of at least 70,000*l.*, being the equivalent to 7*l.* per share.

2. I have arrived at the above conclusion from the following considerations:

By the concession granted by the municipality of, &c., the municipality had an option, which they have exercised, of taking over the undertaking in conson of an annuity of roubles p.a., which is payable half-yearly up to the 31st May, 19... The value of this annuity on the 12th January, 19..., calculated upon a 5 p.c. basis with half-yearly payments, is the sum of roubles, which reckoning the exchange at roubles to the pound, amounts to £... I regard --- roubles to the pound as a fair rate to take for the purpose of the above calculation, regard being had to the average rate of exchange during the last three years. In addition to the value of the annuity the coy has assets, consisting of, &c., to the value of £... or thbts, so that the total assets do not exceed a calculated value of 232,500*l.* After deducting the debentures, debenture stock, and other liabilities, either actual or contingent (the whole of which indebtedness together amounts to between 103,000*l.* and 104,000*l.*), there remain available for the shareholders' assets which cannot be calculated at more than 130,000*l.*, being the equivalent of 13*l.* per share on the 10,000 shares constituting the share capital: in other words, there is, as stated above, a sum of at least 7*l.* per share unrepresented by available assets.

MINUTE APPROVED BY THE COURT.

"The capital of the City of — Coy. Limtd, is £ —, divided into — shares of £ — each [instead of the original capital of £ —, divided into — shares of £ — each]. At the time of the registration of this minute, the full sum of £ — per share has been and is to be deemed pd up on each of the sd — shares of £ — each."

Sometimes it is desired to get authority for the debenture trustees to consent to the reduction. Thus, in one case a supplemental trust deed was agreed to by which provision was made enabling the trustees of the deed to consent to the reduction of the company's uncalled capital which was charged with payment of the debentures. The clause ran as follows:—

"48a. The trustees or trustee may, and they or he are or is hereby instructed to, consent on behalf of the holders for the time being of the debentures of the company entitled to the benefit hereof and issued after the 1st day of December, 1899, to the reduction of the capital of the company by the extinction of all liability in respect of uncalled capital on the issued shares in the capital and of the nominal amount thereof accordingly, and on behalf of such holders by counsel or otherwise to appear in the proceedings for reduction and waive any right on the part of such holders as creditors of the company to notice under clause 9 of the General Order and Rules of the 21st day of March, 1868, in relation to such reduction. Provided that in the opinion of the trustees or trustee the nominal amount of the issued and paid-up capital, for the time being as reduced, and of the reserve of the company, will, immediately after such reduction is sanctioned, together be at least double the amount of the debentures entitled to the benefit hereof and outstanding at the time when such reduction becomes effective."

The order for reduction was obtained on 19th July, 1904. Re New Zealand, &c. Co.

Orders confirming Reduction.

The following points should be borne in mind:—

- (1) The order should confirm the reduction, and not the special resolution.
See sect. 47 of the Act.
- (2) The order should approve the requisite minute. See sects. 51, 52 of the Act.
- (3) The order should dispense with the use, or further use, of the words "and reduced." Sect. 48 of the Act.
- (4) The order should provide for advertisement. Sect. 51 of the Act.
There is no power to dispense with this. See note to Form 623.

As to dispensing with the words "and reduced" at the hearing, the Court formerly used very commonly at the hearing to dispense altogether with the further use of the words. Llynvi Tondy Co., Malins, V.-C., 15th December, 1897; Ebbw Vale Co., Jessel, M. R., 19th January, 1878; Fron Co., Hall, V.-C., 26th November, 1880; Virian Co., 54 L. T. 384; W. N. (1886) 32; West Cumberland Iron and Steel Co., 58 L. T. 159; Direct Spanish, &c. Co., 34 C. D. 313; Newcastle Grain Co., 20th February, 1886; but such dispensation is now rarely granted.

In most cases the order directs that the words shall be used for a month, as in Forms 647 and 647a, infra. Sometimes the order is for fourteen days. Michigan Rail. Co., Farwell, J., 23rd November, 1901. But occasionally the Court requires the use for a short time longer. Pinckney and Sons Steamship Co., (1892) 3 Ch. 125. Occasionally an order to drop the words is made before the hearing, e.g., where the petition is ordered to stand over for some time. Quebrada, &c. Co., 40 C. D. 348. Wright, J., used to dispense with the words altogether where the company's business was carried on entirely abroad, on the ground that the words "and reduced" would not be understood there. Australian Estates, &c. Co., (1910) 1 Ch. 414, where there was evidence of possible prejudice. In the absence of such evidence, see Lindler and Co., (1911) W. N. 66. And in the case of a publishing company, where penalties might be incurred by not adding the words, Kekewich, J., dispensed altogether with the use of the words on the company undertaking to inform their creditors of the reduction, and to use for one month the words "and reduced" on all documents on which, by sect. 41 of the Companies Act, 1862 (now sect. 63, Companies Act, 1908), the words were required to be used. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd., W. N. (1901) 158.

Occasionally, where it is proposed to cancel capital lost or unrepresented by available assets, it appears that some of the shareholders have not paid up their calls. In such cases the resolution should be framed so as to preserve the liability of the defaulters, and the order will be made without prejudice thereto. Great Western Steamship Co., 35 W. R. 154; American Pastoral Co., 62 L. T. 625. International Conversion Trust, W. N. (1892) 100. The resolution in such cases should contain words to the effect that such reduction is to be without prejudice to the company's right to sue for and recover all arrears of calls now outstanding and due in respect of the said shares.

In the matter of the — Coy, Limitd [and Reduced], and in the matter of the Cos Act, 1908, ss. 46—56. Notice is hereby given that the order of the High Ct of Justice (Chancery Division), dated, &c., confirming the reduction of the capital of the above-named coy from Sect. 51 of the Act provides for the registration of the order and minute with the Registrar of Companies, and requires notice of such registration to be published in such manner as the Court may direct. The Court cannot dispense with this publication (per Chitty, J., London Steamboat Co., 31 W. R. 781; W. N. (1883) 123): for Parliament has enacted that there shall be such publication.

The terms of sect. 51 should be borne in mind.

In some cases a copy of the order has been advertised in the notion that the section was thereby complied with; but that is not what the section requires.

Under sect. 55 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, the Court may require the company to publish as the Court directs the reasons for reduction, or such other information in regard thereto as the Court may think expedient, with a view to give proper information to the public, and, if the Court thinks fit, the causes which led to the reduction. Such a publication may properly be required where the depreciation of property necessitating the reduction has occurred suddenly and has not been growing year by year. Truman, Hanbury, Burton and Co., [1910] 2 Ch. 498.

When this power is exercised (which it seldom is) the reasons are inserted just before the words "and further."

The following is another of the few available examples, as approved by Stirling, J., May, 1895. Barton, &c. Co., Limited (1894, B. 0136):—

Form 624.

Reasons for reduction

"The reason for the reduction of the capital of the coy is on account of the loss of 31,691*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* of the capital of the coy, arising from payments of pt of the debenture interest out of capital, the pulling down of certain malthouses, cottages, and timber stores, the depreciation in the value of the goodwill of the coy from the amount at which it was originally taken over, and a depreciation in value of five public-houses to the extent of 1,000*l.* in the whole, the loss of certain fixed plant, buildings and machinery upon the termination of a lease, and the deterioration in the casks, and also in the value of stock of ale at Burton and the agencies of the coy. And further take notice that the sd minute is in the words and figures following."

Minutes.

By sect. 51 of the Act (1) The registrar of companies, upon the production to him of an order of the Court confirming the reduction of the capital of a company, and the delivery to him of a copy of the order, and of a minute (approved by the Court) showing with respect to the share capital of the company, as altered by the order, the amount of the share capital, the number of shares in which it is to be divided, and the amount of each share, and the amount (if any) at the date of the registration deemed to be paid up on each share, shall register the order and minute; (2) On the registration, and not before, the resolution for reducing share capital so confirmed by the order so registered shall take effect. Notice of the registration shall be published in such manner as the Court may direct; (3) The registrar shall certify under his hand the registration of the order and minute, and his certificate shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of the Act with respect to the reduction of share capital have been complied with, and that the share capital of the company is such as is stated in the minute.

The Court cannot dispense with notice of the registration of the order and minute, for sect. 51 of the Act requires the publication thereof; accordingly the Court must be asked to specify the newspaper or newspapers. When the presentation of the petition has been advertised, the Court usually specifies the same newspapers, otherwise it is desirable to have evidence ready showing what newspaper will come to the notice of creditors. Sometimes the Court has considered advertisement in the Gazette enough.

By sect. 52 the minute when registered is to be deemed to be substituted for the corresponding part of the memorandum of the company, and is to be valid and alterable as if it had been originally contained therein.

As the certificate is to be conclusive (supra, p. 24) it will operate even where the order confirms an invalid special resolution. Ladies' Dress Association v. Fulbrook, (1900) 2 Q. B. 376; Walker v. Smith, Limited, W. N. (1903) 62; 51 W. R. 491; Yolland, Huason and Birkett, Limited, 77 L. J. Ch. 43, C. A.

The following is the simplest form of minute, and the one which was formerly exclusively used:—

"The capital of the — company, limited [and reduced] is 70,000*l.*, divided into 10,000 shares of 7*l.* each. At the time of the registration of this minute the sum of 7*l.* has been and is to be deemed to be paid up on each of the said shares." Form of minutes.

But generally the minute states what the capital prior to the reduction was, thus:—

"The capital of the — company, limited [and reduced], henceforth is 70,000*l.*, divided into 10,000 shares of 7*l.* each, instead of the original capital of 100,000*l.* divided into 10,000 shares of 10*l.* each. At the time of the registration of this minute the sum of 7*l.* has been and is to be deemed paid up on each of the said shares."

This form of minute was first adopted by the direction of Kay, J., in West Cumberland, &c. Co., W. N. (1888) 54; 58 L. T. 152; and, in Britannia Milk Co., W. N. (1888) 103, North, J., approved of the form and stated that he should in future require its adoption, and acted accordingly. Chitty, J., did not require the adoption of this form (Solvay Steamship Co., 61 L. T. 659), but had no objection to it.

A minute so framed is obviously not required by the Act, but it has the advantage of giving, at a glance, to a person attending at the office of the registrar of companies, information which would otherwise involve the perusal of other documents.

Sometimes the words "reduced from" are used in lieu of the words "instead of."

The minute is to state the amount to be deemed paid up on each share. Where all the shares have been issued and are paid up to the same extent, it is easy enough to say that so much is to be deemed to be paid up on each share, and this statement strictly complies with the requirement of this section. But cases frequently occur in which (a) only part of the shares are issued; or (b) the shares issued have different amounts paid up. In such cases the usual practice has been to state in case (a) the aggregate number of the shares issued and the amount per share paid up; and in case (b) the aggregate number of each class, and the amount per share paid up on each class, but it has not always been usual to state the denoting number of the shares referred to, e.g.:

"The capital of the Madulseema Coffee and Cinchona Company, Limited, is 110,000*l.*, divided into 7,000 shares of 10*l.* each and 8,000 preference shares of 5*l.* each. At the time of the registration of this minute 7,000 of the said 10*l.* shares and 5,740 of the said 5*l.* preference shares have been issued, and have been and are to be deemed paid up as follows, that is to say:—6,018 of the said 10*l.* shares to the extent of 10*l.* per share, and of the remaining 982 of the said 10*l.* shares 250 to the extent of 7*l.* 16*s.* per share, and 532 of the said 10*l.* shares to the extent of 12*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* per share, and the remaining 200 of the said 10*l.* shares to the extent of 7*l.* per share, and on each of the said 5,740 preference shares the sum of 1*l.* has been and is to be deemed paid up, and on the residue of the said preference shares nothing has been or is to be deemed paid up. The said 200 shares have been forfeited and have not been re-issued."

Hundreds of minutes have been so framed, but the minute ought to state the amount (if anything) which is to be deemed paid up on each share (see sect. 51), and a minute framed as above does not do this. See Solway Steamship Co., 61 L. T. 659.

As to giving numbers in minute.

However, not uncommonly the minute points out the particular shares by numbers, e.g., "The capital of the Livingstone Spinning Company, Limited, is 48,000*l.*, divided into 12,000 shares of 4*l.* each. At the time of the registration of this minute the sum of 1*l.* has been and is to be deemed to be paid on each of the 222 shares standing in the company's share register under the register numbers 356, 824, 867, 926, and 968; the sum of 1*l.* 10*s.* on each of the 38 shares standing in the said register under the register numbers 58 and 190; the sum of 1*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* on each of the 425 shares standing in the said register under the register numbers 30, 154, 253, 301, 309, 317, 426, 440, 606, 621, 663, 684, 706, 1006, 1021, and 1026; the sum of 1*l.* 15*s.* on each of the 20 shares standing in the said register under the register number 566; and the sum of 1*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* on the remaining 11,295 shares, and such order and minute have been duly registered by the said registrar of joint stock companies."

"The capital of the International Conversion Trust, Limited, is 40,500*l.*, divided into 20,000 ordinary shares of 2*l.* each and 100 founders' shares of 5*l.* each, reduced from 100,500*l.* divided into 20,000 ordinary shares of 5*l.* each and 100 founders' shares of 5*l.* each. At the time of the registration of this minute 2,407 of the said ordinary shares of 2*l.* each, numbered 101 to 2,507 inclusive, are issued and are fully paid up, except that upon the shares numbered 101 to 106 inclusive, 508 to 607 inclusive, and 1,208 to 1,307 inclusive there are the following arrears of calls:—

Denoting Numbers of Shares.	Amount of Call in arrear.
101 to 106 inclusive	2 l. per Share.
508 to 607 "	1 l. "
1,208 to 1,307 "	2 l. "

"And of the said founders' shares of 5*l.* each 74 shares numbered 1 to 74 inclusive are issued, of which 50 shares numbered 1 to 50 inclusive are fully paid up, and on the remaining 24 shares numbered 51 to 74 inclusive the sum of 2*l.* per share has been paid up. At the time of the registration of this minute the residue of the said ordinary shares, namely, —, —, and the residue of the said founders' shares, namely, 26, numbered 75 to 100 inclusive, are unissued."

Embodying Minute in Memorandum.

By sect. 52 of the Act, (1) the minute, when registered, must be embodied in every copy of the memorandum of the company issued after its registration; and (2) "if any company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 1*l.* for each copy in respect of which default is made, and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits such default shall be liable to the like penalty."

Copy of registered minute.

Procedure (See Rules of May, 1909, in Appendix, p. 1286, supra)

Where the proposed reduction does involve either the diminution of liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital: The long process

1. See that the articles give the requisite power to reduce capital (supra, p. 684); and, if they do not, insert the necessary power by special resolution. Supra, p. 684.
2. Then pass special resolution for the reduction, specifying the character thereof (supra, p. 1117, Form 488 et seq.); and file copy with Registrar. Sect. 70 of the Act.
3. Immediately after passing the resolution, add to the name of the company the words "and reduced," and continue to use them until after the reduction has been confirmed, and until liberty to drop them is given by the Court. Sect. 48 of the Act.
4. Then present petition to the Court praying for a confirmation of the reduction. Infra, p. 1288, Form 625.
5. Take out summons in chambers for directions as to the proceedings to be taken, &c., as required by Rule 6 of the Rules of 3rd of May, 1909 (see Form 626, infra, and p. 1290). and file evidence verifying the petition and proving due passing of the resolutions, &c.
6. Take an order for an inquiry in the terms of Form 627, infra, and obtain directions as to the newspapers, &c., in accordance with Rule 6 of the Rules of May, 1909, infra, Form 627a; and see Form 628 for the form of notice.
7. Advertise as in Form 628. See Rule 6 of May, 1909.
8. Pay off, as far as practicable, all creditors of the company; or, at any rate, those who would be likely to refuse consent.
9. In due course file list of creditors (if any) and amounts due, with affidavit verifying the same. See Rule 8 of May, 1909, infra, p. 1292, and Form 631 for terms of affidavit. Keep the list ready for inspection, as required by Rule 10.
10. Give notice to the creditors in accordance with Rule 11 and Form 632. Advertise notice of list of creditors as in Form 634, infra (see Rule 12); or, if there are no creditors, then as in Form 635.

11. In due course make and file affidavit as to particulars of debts and claims (see Form 636, infra, and Rule 13); or, that there are none. See Form 630.
12. As to disputed debts and claims, see Form 637, and Rules 13 and 14.
13. Obtain Master's certificate of settlement of list of creditors. Rule 16 and Form 639.

The Court has no power to dispense with settling the list of creditors even where there is evidence that the company has no debts. Lamson Store Service Co., [1895] 2 Ch. 726.

14. Have petition placed in list, and file affidavit on lines of Form 615.
15. Advertise in papers day for hearing petition. See Form 642 and Rule 19.
16. Be prepared at the hearing to deal with opposing and non-assenting creditors. See infra, p. 1299.
17. Obtain order confirming the reduction and approving form of minute.
18. If the reduction involves payment off of capital be ready at the hearing with an affidavit that it is still in excess Safety Oil Co., W. N. (1892) 133.
19. File office copy of order and the minute approved by the Court with the Registrar.

Petition to confirm reduction of capital under Act of 1867
[where

In the matter of the — Coy, Limtd and Reduced.
And in the matter of the Companies Act, 1908.

The above heading is right even when the petition is filed at the office of the Registrar in Companies Winding-up, Bankruptcy Buildings. Aluminium Co., W. N. (1894) 6.

To His Majesty's High Court of Justice:

The humble petition of the — Coy, Limtd and Reduced:

Showeth as follows:

1. Your petr, the above-named coy (huftr called "the coy"), was incorporated in the year —, under the Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867 [or 1862 to 1900, or as the case may be], as a coy limtd by shares.

2. The registered office of the coy is situated at —.

3. The objects for which the coy was established are [the working of coal mines] and other objects set forth in the memdum of assen thof.

4. The capital of the coy is 100,000*l.*, divided into 5,000 shares of 20*l.* each. Form 625.

5. Shortly after the incorporation of the coy it commenced and has since carried on business.

6. The coy has issued 4,200 of its shares, and no more, and the sum of 10*l.* per share has been pd up thereon.

7. By clause 37 of the arts of asson of the coy it is provided that the coy may from time to time by special resolution reduce its capital.

If requisite, say:-

"The articles of association of the company as originally framed did not contain power to reduce the capital, but by special resolution of the company duly passed, &c., it was resolved that the following words should be added to clause 37 of the articles of association, viz.: 'the company may at any time by special resolution reduce its capital in any manner permitted by law.'"

8. By a special resolution of the coy duly passed and confirmed, in accordance with sect. 69 of the Cos (Consolidation) Act, 1908, at extraordinary general meetings of the coy held resply on the — day of — and — day of —, it was resolved as follows, namely: "That the capital of the coy be reduced from 100,000*l.*, divided into 5,000 shares of 20*l.* each, to 75,000*l.*, divided into 5,000 shares of 15*l.* each, by reducing the liability on each share to the extent of 5*l.*, and by reducing the amount of the shares from 20*l.* to 15*l.*"

For other forms of resolution, see supra, p. 1117.

9. The form of minute proposed to be registered is as follows:—

Here set out the minute. See forms, infra, p. 1304.

It is convenient to state the proposed minute in the petition, especially where it is a long one. Counsel can thus, in indorsing his brief, refer to the minute in the petition, instead of setting it out, or referring to a separate document.

Your petitioner the coy therefore humbly prays:

- (1) That the reduction of capital to be effected by the special resolution mentd in paragraph 8 of the peton may be confirmed, and that the above-mentd minute may be approved by the Ct.

Un' = sect. 47 of the Act of 1908 the power of the Court is to confirm the reduction, not the resolution; and although the orders of older date used generally to confirm the resolution, the modern form is differently expressed. See Form 644, infra.

- (2) That to this end all inquiries and directions necessary and proper may be made and given, and that a day may be fixed on and after which the coy shall be at liberty to discontinue the addition to its name of the words "and reduced."

Form 625.

(3) Or that such other order may be made in the premises as to the Ct shall seem meet.

And your petr will ever pray, &c.

NOTE.—It is not intended to serve this peton upon any person.

Order confirming reduction

This Ct doth hby order that the reduction of the capital resolved on and effected by the special resolution passed and confirmed at two extraordinary general meetings of the sd coy, held resply on the — day of —, 19—, and the — day of —, 19—, and which resolution was in the words and figures following, that is to say 'set out', be and the same is hby confirmed.

And it is ordered that this order be produced to the Registrar of Companies, and it is ordered that an office copy of this order be delivered to him, together with a minute in the words or to the effect set forth in the schedule hto.

And it is ordered that notice of the registration by the Registrar of Companies of this order and of the sd minute be published as follows, that is to say, one each in the London Gazette and the — [other newspapers] within 10 days after such registration, and it is ordered that the words "and Reduced" form part of the title of the sd coy for one month from the date of this order.

THE SCHEDULE above referred to.

[Here set out Minute.]

The capital of the — Coy, Limtd [and Reduced, is £ — divided into — shares of £ — each, instead of the original capital of or reduced from] £ —, divided into — shares of £ — each.

Form 644. At the time of the registration of this minute, the whole of the shares have been issued, and have been and are to be deemed to be fully pd up.

See further as to minutes, infra, p. 1304.

In relation to the order the following points should be noted:—

1. The order should confirm the reduction, not the resolution.
2. The order should approve of the minute.
3. The order should fix the time for discontinuing the use of the words "and Reduced." See infra, pp. 1298, 1299.
4. The order should provide for delivery of an office copy, &c. to the registrar.
5. The order should provide for advertising.

As to dealing with creditors at hearing who oppose or who have not consented, see Rules 21 and 22, infra, p. 1665.

As to sect. 50 of the Act.—The Court has jurisdiction to sanction the reduction only "if satisfied with respect to every creditor of the company who, under this Act, is entitled to object to the reduction, that either his consent to the reduction has been obtained, or his debt or claim has been discharged or has determined, or has been secured."

Who then is a creditor entitled to object? Sect. 49 of the Act answers this question. Every creditor of the company who, at the date fixed by the Court, is entitled to any debt or claim which, if that date were the commencement of the winding-up of the company, would be admissible in proof against the company. As to this, the widest possible door is open to proofs. See sect. 206 of the Act defining what debts may be proved, and Ch. XXXVII. of Part II. of this work.

As to Non-Assenting Creditors.—In Crédit Foncier of England, 11 Eq. 356. Bacon, V.-C., held that creditors named in the list whose debts were not yet due, and were secured, and who had neither assented to nor dissented from the proposed reduction, were not to be considered creditors who did not assent within sect. 14 of the Act of 1867, but must be taken to have assented.

But in Patent Ventilating Granary Co., 12 C. D. 254, Fry, J., declined to follow this decision, holding that the words "does not consent" must have their ordinary plain meaning, and the order in that case was only made conditionally on consents being obtained from the non-assenting creditors.

This decision was subsequently followed by Chitty, J., in Bull Hotel Company, Limited, 21st April, 1883; 27 S. J. 434, and has frequently been followed since. e.g., in Debenture Corporation, by Joyce, J., 14th Dec., 1901.

As to setting apart and appropriating for the security of a creditor who does not consent, see sect. 49 of the Act of 1908, and Forms 645 and 646, infra.

As to the words "and Reduced."—Except where the reduction is brought within the proviso to sect. 48 of the Companies Act, 1908, the Court never dispenses with the use of the words "and Reduced" prior to the hearing, and it is useless to apply for a dispensation order. There is no jurisdiction to grant dispensation. But at the hearing the Court has power to fix the date up to which the words "and Reduced" shall be used (see sect. 48, supra, p. 1269); and this is usually done by directing the use of the words to be continued up to a specified date, or by giving liberty to discontinue after a specified date.

One month is a very common period to fix. Ocean Queen, &c. Co., (1893) 2 Ch. 666; Assets Realization Co., Chitty, J., 19th February, 1891; Boston Riding School, Chitty, J., 28th November, 1891; Leicester Mortgage Co., Hardy, J., 12th August, 1901; Barrow Hematite Iron Co., 39 Ch. D. 582.

Fourteen days has not been unusual. Patent Ventilating Co., 12 C. D. 254: Form 644.

Upon the petition of the International, &c., on 30th July, 1881, preferred unto this Ct, and upon hearing counsel for the petrs, and upon reading the order dated 2nd August, 1881, the Chief Clerk's certificate, &c., the aft, &c., this Ct doth order that the petrs do on or before the 16th day of June, 1883, set apart and appropriate the sum of 58*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* by paying the same to an account to be opened in the name of the coy with Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Coy, bankers, to be there retained until further order, to answer such claims (if any) to creditors of the society as may be established by the persons named in the second part of the second schedule to the Chief Clerk's certificate, dated the 7th May, 1883, and order that the petrs do on or before 16th June, 1883, pay into Ct to the credit of In the matter, &c. of the International, &c., Limtd., Newfoundland Telegraph Trust, the sum of 23*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* cash; And it is ordered that the petr do place in a box certificates for the 150*l.*, being part of the certificates for the several amounts of stock of the Anglo-American Telegraph Coy mentioned in the third schedule to the Chief Clerk's sd certificate, and such box is to be endorsed "In the High Ct of Justice, Chancery Division, in the matter of the International, &c. Limtd., certificates for 212*l.* stock of the Anglo-American Telegraph Coy, Limtd"; and it is ordered that the petrs, &c. [other similar provisions] and any persons interested are to be at liberty to apply in chambers as to the moneys for the time being to the credit of sd matter with Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Coy, and as to the cash to be so pd into Ct and the sd stock certificates to be placed in the sd boxes and deposited in the Ct as afsd; And order that the reduction resolved on, &c. [resolutions for paying off capital in excess of the wants of the coy and reducing the nominal amount of the shares accordingly] be confirmed and [minute approved]; And order that this order and an office copy of the receipt from the bank for such payment and deposit in Ct as afsd be produced to the Registrar, and an office copy delivered to him, together with a copy of the minute, and order that notice of the registration of this order be published in such newspaper as the Judge in chambers shall direct, and order that the addition of the words "and Reduced" to the title of the coy be forthwith discontinued. *International, &c.
